HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, MAY 19, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God of all power and mercy, whose years never fail, open afresh the fountain of inspiration and revitalize our land with its cleansing waters. Only the onrush of Thy spiritual power can save this poor, sick world; can plant orchards for hungry wayfarers and turn deserts into gardens. Make us channels of strength and might for crushing the plagues of anarchy and for the slavery of the human spirit.

In the name of Him whose cross is the center of the dome of God, we pray for all councils and the appointed advisers who are toiling for the peace and comfort of a world broken with its shattered sanctuaries of faith. Unite their dreams, unify their hopes, direct their aspirations, and when all is completed, O give us the chivalry of our fathers that we may pass on, unimpaired, to our children's children the institutions they founded and achieved in sacrifice and blood. We pray for our own dear country; unified by a common truth and inspired with one spirit may all our citizens assemble again in industry, home, and church and magnify the name of the Lord for His goodness and wonderful works and Thine shall be the praise forever. In the name of our Redeemer. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The House will stand in recess, subject to call of the Chair.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess, subject to the call of the Speaker.

JOINT MEETING OF THE HOUSE AND SENATE

At 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m., the Doorkeeper, Mr. Ralph R. Roberts, announced the Vice President of the United States and the Members of the United States Senate.

The Members rose.

The Vice President took the chair at the right of the Speaker, and the Members of the Senate took the seats reserved for them.

At 12 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m. the members of the Supreme Court entered the Chamber and took the seats assigned to them.

At 12 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m. the members of the Diplomatic Corps entered the Chamber and took the seats assigned to them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces that on behalf of the House the Chair appoints the following Members to conduct our distinguished guest to the Chamber: The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], and the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair appoints on behalf of the Senate to escort the Prime Minister of Great Britain into the Chamber the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], and the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

At 12 o'clock and 24 minutes p. m. the Doorkeeper, Mr. Ralph R. Roberts, announced the members of the President's Cabinet.

The Members rose.

The members of the President's Cabinet entered the Chamber.

At 12 o'clock and 31 minutes p. m., the Doorkeeper, Mr. Ralph R. Roberts, announced the Right Honorable Winston Churchill, Prime Minister of Great Britain.

The Members rose.

The Prime Minister of Great Britain, Rt. Hon. Winston Churchill, escorted by the committee of Senators and Representatives, entered the Hall of the House and stood at the Clerk's desk, amid prolonged applause.

The SPEAKER. Members of the Congress, today is a high mark in the history of the Capital of our country and of the Members of the Senate and House and their guests, because today we receive as our guest one of the outstanding figures of all the earth. [Applause.]

It is my great pleasure, my high privilege, and my distinguished honor, to present to you the Right Honorable Winston Churchill, Prime Minister of Great Britain. [Applause.]

Mr. CHURCHILL. Mr. President, Mr. Speaker, and Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives, 17 months have passed since I last had the honor to address the Congress of the United States. For more than 500 days—every day a day—we have toiled and suffered and dared shoulder to shoulder against the cruel and mighty enemy. We have acted in close combination or concert in many parts of the world—on land, on sea, and in the air. The fact that you have invited me to come to the Congress again—a second time—now that we have settled down to the job, and that you should welcome me in so generous a fashion, is certainly a high mark in my life, and also shows that our partnership has not done so badly. [Applause.] I am proud that you should have found us good allies, striving forward in comradeship to the accomplishment of our task without grudging or stinting either life or treasure or indeed anything we have to give.

Last time I came at a moment when the United States was aflame with wrath at the treacherous attack upon Pearl Harbor by Japan and at the subsequent declarations of war upon the United States made by Germany and Italy. For my part I say quite frankly that in those days after our long, and for a whole year lonely, struggle I could not repress in my heart a sense of relief and comfort that we were all bound together by common peril, by solemn faith and high purpose to see this fearful quarrel through at all costs to the end. That was an hour of passionate emotion, an hour most memorable in human records, an hour, as I believe, full of hope and glory for the future.

The experiences of a long life and the promptings of my blood have wrought in me the conviction that there is nothing more important for the future of the world than the fraternal association of our two peoples in righteous work, both in war and in peace. [Applause.] So, in January 1942, I had that feeling of comfort and I therefore prepared myself in a confident and steadfast spirit to bear the terrible blows which were evidently about to fall on British interests in the Far East, which were bound to fall upon us from the military strength of Japan during a period when the American and British Fleets had lost for the time being the naval command of the Pacific and Indian Oceans. One after another in swift succession very heavy misfortunes fell upon us and upon our allies, the Dutch, in the Pacific theater. The Japanese have seized the land and islands they so greedily coveted. The Philippines are enslaved. The lustrous, luxuriant regions of the Dutch East Indies have been overrun. In the Malay Peninsula and at Singapore we ourselves suffered the greatest military disaster, or at any rate the largest military disaster, in British history.

Mr. President and Mr. Speaker, all this has to be retrieved and all this and much else will have to be repaid. [Applause.]

And here let me say this: Let no one suggest that we British have not at least as great an interest as the United States in the unflinching and relentless waging of war against Japan; and I am here to tell you that we will wage that war side by side with you in accordance with the best strategic employment of our forces while there is a breath in our bodies and while blood flows in our veins.

A notable part in the war against Japan must, of course, be played by the large armies and by the air and naval forces now marshalled by Great Britain on the eastern frontiers of India. In this quarter there lies one of the means of bringing aid to hard-pressed and long-tormented China. I regard the bringing of effective and immediate aid to China as one of the most urgent of our common tasks. It may not have escaped your attention that I brought with me to this country and to this conference Field Marshal Wavell and the other two commanders in chief from India. Now they have not traveled all this way simply to concern themselves about improving the health and happiness of the Mikado of Japan. I thought it would be good that all concerned in this theater should meet together and thresh out in friendly candor and heart to heart all the points that arise, and there are many. You may be sure that if all that was necessary was for an order to be given to the great army standing ready in India to march toward the Rising Sun and open the Burma Road that order would be given this afternoon. The matter is however somewhat more complicated and all movements or infiltration of troops into the mountains and jungles to the northeast of India is very strictly governed by what your American military men call the science of logistics.

But, Mr. President and Mr. Speaker, I repudiate, I am sure with your sympathy, the slightest suspicion that we should hold anything back that can be usefully employed, or that I and the Government I represent are not as resolute to employ every man, gun, and airplane that can be used in this business as we have proved ourselves ready to do in other theaters of the war.

In our conferences in January 1942, between the President and myself, and between our high expert advisers, it was evident that while the defeat of Japan would not mean the defeat of Germany, the defeat of Germany would inevitably mean the ruin of Japan. The realization of this simple truth does not mean that both tasks should not proceed together, and indeed the major part of the United States forces is now deployed on the Pacific fronts. In the broad division which we then made of our labors in January 1942, the United States undertook the main responsibility for prosecuting the war against Japan and for aiding Australia and New Zealand to defend themselves against a Japanese invasion, which then seemed far more threatening than it does now. On the other hand, we took the main burden on the Atlantic. This was only natural. Unless the ocean life line which joins our two peoples can be kept unbroken, the British Isles and all the very considerable forces which radiate therefrom would be paralyzed and doomed. We have willingly done our full share of the sea work in the dangerous waters of the Mediterranean and in the Arctic convoys to Russia, and we have sustained, since our alliance began, more than double the losses in merchant tonnage that have fallen upon the United States.

On the other hand, the prodigious output of new ships from the United States building yards has for the 6 months past overtaken and now far surpasses the losses of both allies, and if no effort is relaxed there is every reason to count upon a ceaseless progressive expansion of Allied shipping available for the prosecution of the war.

Our killings of U-boats, as the Secretary of the Navy will readily confirm, have this year greatly exceeded all previous experience, and the last 3 months and particularly the last 3 weeks have yielded record results. This, of course, is to some extent due to the larger number of U-boats operating, but it is also due to the marked improvement in the severity and the power of our measures against them and of the new devices continually employed. While I rate the U-boat danger as still the greatest we have to face, I have a good and sober confidence that it will not only be met and contained but overcome. The increase of shipping tonnage over sinkings provides, after the movements of vital supplies, food, and munitions have been arranged, that margin which is the main measure of our joint war effort.

We are also conducting from the British Isles the principal air offensive against Germany, and in this we are powerfully aided by the United States Air Forces in the United Kingdom, whose action is chiefly by day as ours is chiefly by night. In this war numbers count more and more, both in night and day attacks. The saturation of the enemy's flak, through the multiplicity of attacking planes, the division and dispersion of his fighter protection by the launching of several simultaneous attacks, are rewards which will immediately be paid to the substantial increases of British and American numbers which are now taking place. There is no doubt that the Allies already vastly outnumber the hostile air forces of Germany, Italy, and Japan, and still more does their output of new planes surpass the output of the enemy.

In this air war, by which both Germany and Japan fondly imagined they would strike decisive and final blows and terrorize nations great and small into submission to their will, in this air war it is that these guilty nations have already begun to show their first real mortal weakness. The more continuous and severe the air fighting becomes the better for us, because we can already replace casualties and machines far more rapidly than the enemy, and we can replace them on a scale which increases month by month.

Progress in this sphere is swift and sure, but it must be remembered that the preparation and development of airfields and the movement of great masses of ground personnel, on whom the efficiency of modern air squadrons depends, however earnestly pressed forward, is bound to take time.

Opinion, Mr. President and Mr. Speaker, is divided as to whether the use of air power could, by itself, bring about a collapse of Germany or Italy. The experiment is well worth trying, so long as other measures are not excluded. There is certainly no harm in finding out. But however that may be, anyhow we are all agreed that the damage done to the enemy's war potential is enormous. The condition to which the great centers of German war industry, and particularly the Ruhr, are being reduced is one of unparalleled devastation. You have just read of the destruction of the great dams which feed the canals and provide power to the enemy munition works. That was a gallant operation, costing 8 out of the 19 Lancaster bombers employed, but it will play a very far-reaching part in German munitions output.

It is our settled policy, the settled policy of our two staffs and war-making authorities, to make it impossible to carry on any form of war industry on a large or concentrated scale either in Germany, in Italy, or in the enemy-occupied countries. Wherever these centers exist or are developed, they will be destroyed and the munitions population will be dispersed. If they do not like what is coming to them, let them disperse beforehand on their own. The process will continue ceaselessly, with ever-increasing weight and intensity, until the German and Italian peoples abandon or destroy the monstrous tyrannies which they have incubated and reared in their midst.

Meanwhile, our air offensive is forcing Germany to withdraw an ever-larger proportion of its war-making capacity from the fighting fronts in order to provide protection against air attack. Hundreds of fighter aircraft, thousands of antiaircraft cannon, and many hundreds of thousands of men, together with a vast share in the output of the war factories have all been assigned to this purely defensive function. All this is at the expense of the enemy's power of new aggression or of the enemy's power to resume the initiative. Surveying the whole aspect of the air war, we cannot doubt that it is a major factor in the process of victory. That, I think, is established as a solid fact. It is similarly all agreed between us that we should at the earliest moment bring our joint air power to bear upon the military targets in the homelands of Japan. The cold-blooded execution of United States airmen by the Japanese Government is a proof not only of their barbarism but of the dread with which they regard this possibility. It is the duty of those charged with the direction of the war to overcome at the earliest moment the military, geographical, and political difficulties and begin the process, so necessary and desirable, of laying the cities and other munition centers of Japan in ashes. For in ashes they must surely lie before peace comes back to the world.

That this objective holds a high place in the present conference is obvious to thinking men, but no public discussion would be useful upon the method or sequence of events which should be pursued in order to achieve it. Let me make it plain, however, that the British will participate in this air attack on Japan in harmonious accord with the major strategy of the war. That is our desire. And the cruelties of the Japanese enemy make our airmen all the more ready to share the perils and sufferings of their American comrades.

At the present time, speaking more generally, the prime problem which is before the United States, and to a lesser extent before Great Britain, is not so much the creation of armies or the vast output of munitions and aircraft. These are already in full swing, and immense progress and prodigious results have been achieved. The problem is rather the application of those forces to the enemy in the teeth of U-boat resistance across the great ocean spaces, across the narrow seas, or on land through the swamps, mountains, and jungles in various quarters of the globe. That is our problem. All our war plans must, therefore, be inspired, pervaded, and even dominated by the supreme object of coming to grips with the enemy under favorable conditions, or at any rate tolerable conditions—we cannot pick and choose too much—on the largest possible scale at the earliest possible moment, and of engaging that enemy wherever it is profitable and, indeed I might almost say wherever it is possible to do so. Thus in this way we shall make our enemies in Europe and in Asia burn and consume their strength on land, on sea, and in the air with the maximum rapidity.

Now, you will readily understand that the complex task of finding the maximum openings for the employment of our vast forces, the selection of the points at which to strike with the greatest advantage to those forces, and the emphasis and priority to be assigned to all the various enterprises which are desirable, that is a task requiring the constant supervision and adjustment of our Combined Staffs and of the heads of governments. This is a vast and complicated process, especially when two countries are involved directly in council together, and when the interests of so many other countries have to be considered, and the utmost good will and readiness to think for the common cause of all the United Nations is required from everyone participating in our conference. The intricate adjustments and arrangements can only be made by discussion between men who know all the facts, and who are and can be held accountable for success or failure. Lots of people can make good plans for winning the war if they have not got to carry them out. I dare say if I had not been in a responsible position, I should have made a lot of excellent plans, and very likely should have brought them in one way or another to the notice of the executive authorities. But it is not possible to have full, open arguments about these matters. That is an additional hardship to those in charge—that such questions cannot be argued out and debated in public, except with enormous reticence and even then there is great danger that the watching and listening enemy may derive some profit from what they hear. In these circumstances, in my opinion, the American and British press and public have treated their executives with a wise and indulgent consideration, and recent events I think have vindicated their self-restraint. Mr. President and Mr. Speaker, it is thus that we are able to meet here today in all faithfulness and sincerity and friendship.

Geography imposes insuperable obstacles to the continuous session of the Combined Staffs and executive chiefs, but as the scene is constantly changing, and lately I think I may say constantly changing for the better, repeated conferences are indispensable if the sacrifices of the fighting troops are to be rendered fruitful and if the curse of war which lies so heavily upon almost the whole world is to be broken and swept away within the shortest possible time. I therefore thought it my duty with the full authority of His Majesty's government, to come here again with our highest officers, in order that the Combined Staffs may work in the closest contact with the Chief Executive power which the President derives from his office, and in respect of which I am the accredited representative of the Cabinet and His Majesty's government.

The wisdom of the founders of the American Constitution led them to associate the office of Commander in Chief with that of the Presidency of the United States. In this they followed the precedents which were successful in the case of George Washington. It is remarkable that after more than 150 years this combination of political and military authority has been found necessary not only in the United States, but in the case of Marshal Stalin in Russia, and of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek in China. Even I, as majority leader in the House of Commons in one branch of the Legislature, have been drawn from time to time—not perhaps wholly against my will—into some participation in military affairs. Modern war is total, and it is necessary for its conduct that the technical and professional authorities should be sustained and if necessary directed by the heads of governments who have knowledge which enables them to comprehend not only the military but the political and economic affairs at work, and who have the power to focus them all upon the goal. These are the reasons which compelled the President to make his long journey to Casablanca, and these are the reasons which bring me here. We, both of us, earnestly hope that at no distant date we may be able to achieve what we have so long sought—namely, a meeting with Marshal Stalin and if possible with Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek. But how, when, and where this is to be accomplished is not a matter upon which I am able to shed any clear ray of light at the present time, and if I were I should certainly not shed it. [Laughter and applause.] In the meanwhile, we do our best to keep the closest association at every level between all the authorities of all the countries who are engaged in the active direction of the war, and it is my special duty to promote and preserve this intimacy and concert between all parts of the British Commonwealth and Empire, and especially with the great self-governing Dominions, like Canada, whose Prime Minister is with us at this moment [applause], and whose contribution is so massive and invaluable.

There could be no better or more encouraging example of the fruits of our consultations than the campaign in northwest Africa which has just ended so well. [Applause.]

One morning in June last, when I was here, the President handed me a slip of paper which bore the utterly unexpected news of the fall of Tobruk and the surrender of its garrison of 25,000 men in unexplained circumstances. That, indeed, was a dark and bitter hour for me. I shall never forget the kindness, the delicacy, the true comradeship which our American friends showed me and those with me in such adversity. Their only thought was to find the means of helping us to restore the situation, and never for a moment did they question the resolution or the fighting quality of our troops. Hundreds of Sherman tanks were taken from the hands of American divisions and sent at the utmost speed around the Cape of Good Hope and Egypt. When 1 ship carrying 50 tanks was sunk by torpedo, the United States Government replaced it and its precious vehicles before we could even think of asking them to do so. The Sherman tank was the best tank in the desert in the year 1942, and the presence of these weapons played an appreciable part in the ruin of Rommel's army at the battle of Alamein and in the long pursuit which chased him back to Tunisia.

At this time also, in June 1942, when I was here last, there lighted up those trains of thought and study which produced the memorable American and British descent upon French northwest Africa, the results of which are a cause of general rejoicing today. We have certainly a most encouraging example here of what can be achieved by British and Americans working together heart and hand. In fact, one might almost feel that, if they could keep it up, there is hardly anything they could not do, either in the field of war or in the not less tangled problems of peace. [Applause.] History will acclaim this great enterprise as a classic example of the way to make war. We used the weapon of sea power, the weapon in which we were strongest, to attack the enemy at our chosen moment and at our chosen point. In spite of the immense elaboration of the plan and the many hundreds, thousands even, who had to be informed of its main outline, we maintained secrecy and effective surprise. We confronted the enemy with a situation in which he had either to lose invaluable strategic territories or to fight under conditions most costly and wasteful to him. We recovered the initiative, which we still retain. We rallied to our side French forces, which are already a brave—and will presently become a powerful—army under the gallant General Giraud. [Applause.] We secured bases from which violent attacks can and will be delivered by our air power on the whole of Italy, with results which no one can measure, but which most certainly will be highly beneficial to our affairs. We have made an economy in our strained and straitened shipping position worth several hundreds of great ships, and one which will give us the advantage of far swifter passage through the Mediterranean to the East, to the Middle East, and to the Far East. We have struck the enemy a blow which is the equal of Stalingrad and most stimulating to our heroic and heavily engaged Russian allies.

All this gives the lie to the Nazi and Fascist taunts that parliamentary democracies are incapable of waging effective war. Presently we will furnish them with further examples.

Still I am free to admit that in north Africa we builded better than we knew. The unexpected came to the aid of what was designed and multiplied the results. For this we have to thank the military intuition of Corporal Hitler. We may notice, as I predicted in the House of Commons 3 months ago, the touch of the master hand. The same insensate obstinacy which doomed Field Marshal von Paulus and his army to destruction at Stalingrad has brought this new catastrophe upon our enemies in Tunisia. We have destroyed or captured considerably more than a quarter million of the enemy's best troops, together with vast masses of material, all of which had been ferried across to Africa after paying heavy toll to British submarines and to British and United States aircraft. No one could count on such follies. They gave us, if I may use the language of finance, a handsome bonus after the full dividend had been earned and paid.

At the time when we planned this great joint African operation we hoped to be masters of Tunisia even before the end of last year. But the injury we have now inflicted upon the enemy, physical and psychological, the training our troops have had in the hard school of war, and the welding together of the Anglo-American Staff machine—these are advantages which far exceed anything which it was within our power to plan. The German lie-factory is volubly explaining how valuable is the time which they bought by the loss of their great armies. Let them not delude themselves. Other operations which will unfold in due course, depending as they did upon the special instruction of large numbers of troops and upon the provision of vast technical apparatus, these other operations have not been in any way delayed by the obstinate fighting in northern Tunisia.

Mr. President and Mr. Speaker, the African war is over. Mussolini's African Empire and Corporal Hitler's strategy are alike exploded. It is interesting to compute what these performances have cost those two wicked men and those who have been their tools or their dupes. The Emperor of Abyssinia sits again upon the throne from which he was driven by Mussolini's poison gas. All the vast territories from Madagascar to Morocco, from Cairo to Casablanca, from Aden to Dakar are under British, American, or French control. One continent, at least, has been cleansed and purged forever from Fascist and Nazi tyranny.

The African excursions of the two dictators have cost their countries in killed and captured 950,000 soldiers. In addition, nearly 2,400,000 gross tons of shipping have been sunk and nearly 8,000 aircraft destroyed, both of these figures being exclusive of large numbers of ships and aircraft damaged. There have also been lost to the enemy 6,200 guns, 2,550 tanks, and 70,000 trucks, which is the American name for lorry [laughter] and which I understand has been adopted by the combined staffs in northwest Africa in exchange for the use of the word "petrol" in place of "gasoline." [Laughter.] These are the losses of the enemy after 3 years of war. At the end of it all what is there to show? The proud German Army has by its sudden collapse, its crumbling, and breaking up—unexpected to all of us—the proud German Army has once again proved the truth of the saying: "The Hun is always at your throat or your feet." [Applause.]

That is a point which may have its bearing on the future. But for our part at this milestone in the war we can say: "One continent redeemed." [Applause.]

The northwest African campaign, and particularly its Tunisian climax, is the finest example of the cooperation of the troops of three different countries and of the combination under one supreme commander of the use of sea, land, and air forces which has yet been seen. In particular, the British and American staff work, as I have said, has matched the comradeship of the soldiers of both our countries striding forward side by side under the fire of the enemy. It was a marvel of efficient organization which enabled the Second American Corps, or rather Army, for that was its size, to be moved 300 miles from the southern sector, which had become obsolete through the retreat of the enemy, to the northern coast, from which, beating down all opposition, they advanced and took the fortress and harbor of Bizerte. [Applause.] In order to accomplish this march of 300 miles, which was covered in 12 days, it was necessary for this very considerable army, with its immense modern equipment, to traverse at right angles the communications of the British First Army, which was already engaged, or about to be engaged, in heavy battle, and this was achieved without in any way disturbing the hour-to-hour supply upon which that army depended. I am told that these British and American officers work together without the slightest question of what country they belong to, each doing his part in a military organization which must henceforward be regarded as a most powerful and efficient instrument of war. There is honor, Mr. President and Mr. Speaker, for all; and I shall at the proper time and place pay my tribute to the British and American commanders by land and sea who conducted or who were engaged in the battle. This only will I say now: I do not think you could have chosen any man more capable than General Eisenhower [applause] of keeping his very large, heterogeneous force together through bad times as well as good, and of creating the conditions of harmony and energy which were the indispensable elements of victory.

I have dwelt in some detail, but I trust not at undue length, upon these famous events, and I shall now return to the general war for a few minutes in which they have their setting and proportion. It is a poor heart that never rejoices. But our thanksgiving, however fervent, must be brief. Heavier work lies ahead, not only in the European but, as I have indicated, in the Pacific and in the Indian spheres; and the President and I and the Combined Staffs are gathered here in order that this work shall be, as far as lies within us, well conceived and thrust forward without losing a day. Not for one moment must we forget that the main burden of the war on land is still being borne by the Russian Armies. They are holding at the present time no fewer than 190 German divisions and 28 satellite divisions on their front. It is always wise, while doing justice to one's own achievements, to preserve a proper sense of proportion, and I therefore mention that these figures of the German forces opposite Russia compare with the equivalent of about 15 divisions which we have destroyed in Tunisia after a campaign which has cost us about 50,000 casualties. That gives some measure of the Russian effort and of the debt which we owe to her. It may well be that a further trial of strength between the German and Russian Armies is impending. Russia has already inflicted injuries upon the German military organism which will, I believe, prove mortal. But there is little doubt that Hitler is reserving his supreme gambler's throw for a third attempt to break the heart and spirit and destroy the armed forces of the mighty nation which he has already twice assaulted in vain. He will not succeed. [Applause.] But we must do everything in our power that is sensible and practicable to take more of the weight off Russia in 1943. [Applause.]

I do not intend to be responsible for any suggestion that the war is won or will soon be over. That it will be won by us I am sure. [Applause.] But how or when cannot be foreseen, still less foretold. I was driving the other day not far from the field of Gettysburg, which I know well, like most of your battlefields. It was the decisive battle of the Civil War. No one after Gettysburg doubted which way the dread balance of war would incline. Yet far more blood was shed after the Union victory at Gettysburg than in all the fighting which went before. It behooves us, therefore, to search our hearts and brace our sinews and to take the most earnest counsel one with another in order that the favorable position which has already been reached, both against Japan and against Hitler and Mussolini in Europe, shall not be let slip. If we wish to abridge the slaughter and ruin which this war is spreading to so many lands and to which we must ourselves contribute so grievous a measure of suffering and sacrifice, we cannot afford to relax a single fiber of our being or to tolerate the slightest abatement of our effort. The enemy is still proud and powerful. He is hard to get at. He still possesses enormous armies, vast resources, and invaluable strategic territories. War is full of mysteries and surprises. A false step, a wrong direction of strategic effort, discord, or lassitude among the Allies might soon give the common enemy the power to confront us with new and hideous facts. We have surmounted many serious dangers. But there is one grave danger which will go along with us until the end. That danger is the undue prolongation of the war. No one can tell what new complications and perils might arise in 4 or 5 more years of war. And it is in the dragging out of war at enormous expense till the democracies are tired, or bored, or split that the main hopes of Germany and Japan must now reside.

We must destroy this hope, as we have destroyed so many others; and for that purpose we must beware of every topic, however attractive, and every tendency, however natural, which divert our minds or energies from the supreme objective of the general victory of the United Nations. By singleness of purpose, by steadfastness of conduct, by tenacity and endurance, such as we have so far displayed, by these, and only by these, can we discharge our duty to the future of the world and to the destiny of man. [Applause.]

At 1 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m., the Prime Minister of Great Britain retired from the Hall of the House.

At 1 o'clock and 26 minutes p. m., the President's Cabinet retired from the Hall of the House.

At 1 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m., the members of the Supreme Court retired from the Hall of the House.

At 1 o'clock and 28 minutes p. m., the members of the Diplomatic Corps retired from the Hall of the House.

At 1 o'clock and 29 minutes p. m., the Speaker announced that the joint session was dissolved.

Thereupon the Vice President and the Members of the Senate returned to their Chamber.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired (at 1 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.), the Speaker called the House to order.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the proceedings held in the Chamber during the recess will be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

THE LATE JAMES WHITSON DUNBAR

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LAFOLLETTE].

Mr. LAFOLLETTE. Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of sorrow that I bring a message to the older Members of this House. Jim Dunbar died this morning. I think he would like to have me say "Jim Dunbar." James Whitson Dunbar was a Republican Member of this House in the Sixty-sixth, Sixty-seventh, and Seventy-first Congresses. He was a great American. He had a tremendous sense of loyalty and honesty. Above all, he was a simple man. It was said of him, when he left, there was little doubt that he was as popular if not the most popular man in this House.

Jim Dunbar was born in 1860. He got out of a sick bed, practically, to attend some meetings that were held in my district this year. He did that not only because of his loyalty to his party, but, typical of Jim Dunbar, he told me that my grandfather had rendered him a service when he was a young boy 15 years of age, and this man's sense of obligation was so strong that, despite the fact he had been the victim of a tremendously bad heart for years, he felt that, in some measure, in helping me he was repaying that favor which had been paid him by my grandfather some sixty-odd years ago.

There is little more that I can say, but I know it is with regret that this message is received by all who knew Jim Dunbar.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I wish to join my distinguished colleague [Mr. LAFOLLETTE] in paying my humble tribute of respect to James W. Dunbar. I had the privilege of an intimate acquaintanceship with Mr. Dunbar, who was a Member of this House during the Sixty-sixth, Sixty-seventh, and Seventy-first Congresses. He brought to the public service the valuable asset of a ripe business experience and a sound judgment in respect to fiscal operations both public and private. In his service here he was an outstanding member of the Committee on Banking and Currency. Much of the banking and currency legislation that was enacted during his service here bears the stamp of his brilliant mind. He was a friendly character who had in his heart a great love for human kind. As a citizen and as a representative of citizens he was a credit to his district, to the State of Indiana, and to the Nation which he served so well. He will be widely missed and mourned.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a digest of the National Youth Administration war-training program.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address by Lord Halifax.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURCHILL of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article called My Son and a letter in connection therewith.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article by Mark Sullivan.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article from the Independent Jewish Press Service.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter from Admiral Landis to the Honorable SAM RAYBURN, Speaker of the House, dated May 15, 1943.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a newspaper article showing how the Sioux Steel Co., of Sioux Falls, S. Dak., has met the problem of labor shortages.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the propaganda film Mission to Moscow, and to include therein a short editorial from one of the leading newspapers in my district.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on old-age pensions and to include therein a statement by an attorney, Mr. Leonard Eriksson, of Fergus Falls, Minn.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an extract of the Indiana law with respect to the veterans as compiled by Mr. Omer Stevens, National Service Officer and Department Adjutant of the Disabled American Veterans.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial from the New York Times in support of anti-poll-tax legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an address delivered by the Honorable Herbert Bell, former Minister to Portugal and Hungary.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL, 1944

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2713) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes. Pending that, I ask unanimous consent, pursuant to an understanding I have had with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER], the ranking minority member of the subcommittee, that general debate be limited to 2 hours, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I understand that debate is to be limited to the bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is agreeable to me, Mr. Speaker, and I so modify my request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 2713, with Mr. GAVAGAN in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, as your chairman on Navy appropriations, I am presenting a measure today which I am persuaded to believe will largely bring to fruition programs that will enable the Navy to perform its share in the drive that lies ahead to bring about complete victory.

We have just cause today to be proud of the achievements of our arms. The riddance in north Africa of our enemies was an accomplishment paralleling any successful military operation that history records. The victory there will stand as a lasting tribute to those who conceived and planned the campaign, to those who actually conducted it, and to those who actually fought it, including, do not forget, those upon whom the onerous and dangerous task devolved for matériel and personnel transport. That was a Navy and air responsibility, shared with our British Allies, and I include in Navy the Coast Guard and the merchant marine. For sheer courage and utter disregard of danger from submarines and enemy aircraft, we must ever share our gratefulness with the officers and men on the merchant marine.

Like its contribution to the north African campaign, it is the Navy upon which we must rely for getting munitions and men to the theaters of land operations on the continent of Europe, and it is to the Navy we must look, in conjunction with air power, both Army and Navy, for making possible the movement of land forces into the areas we shall take or retake from the Japanese.

I say "shall," and I mean "shall," and I look for that to happen much earlier than some who lean toward conservatism and advocate waiting until Hitler is stopped. I do not agree with the waiting policy, and compliment Senator CHANDLER for his recent speech on the subject on the Senate floor.

It is this job to the westward, my friends, which will impose the biggest load on our sea arm. We are preparing adequately for that, and, at the same time, doing everything possible to facilitate the accomplishment of the knock-out punch in Europe.

The areas for naval employment are vast and the nature of the employment is extremely diversified, making necessary a very large number of many different kinds of operating units. Their provision, including their equipment, takes much time, and they call for much preparation for operating and basing facilities, and for a large, fully trained force of officers and men. These factors, plus, and, mark you, a very big plus for aviation, have demanded the very large sums we have been called upon heretofore to provide, and it is such factors which are responsible for the size of the measure we bring to you today.

One gratifying part of the measure to me is the amount it carries—something over 10 billions of dollars, for liquidating programs heretofore authorized. That means approaching actual deliveries, and that means nearer the day of reckoning for our enemies. Another gratifying feature of the bill is that it includes but $40,000,000 for the completion of the huge naval airplane program upon which we embarked in the fiscal year 1940. We have, with the exception of that $40,000,000, appropriated for over 55,000 airplanes for the Navy, including the Marine Corps, and that whole program will have been consummated before the end of the ensuing fiscal year, with still others, for which this bill makes provision, coming along. In other words, Mr. Chairman, the Navy will have reached its objective of 27,500 program airplanes, and they will comprise naval types or types peculiar to naval aerial warfare, presently unequaled anywhere.

Mr. Chairman, I am not any happier about the size of these necessary defense or war budgets than any of my colleagues. They have begun, however, to pay dividends—a very sizable one a few days ago at the "south shore banks" of the Mediterranean, and I am sure we shall see increasingly bigger ones in the not distant future.

The size of these budgets and just what they mean from a dollar-and-cents angle recalls a yarn I think will bear repeating:

Two tramps were riding the rods of a freight train. The train came to a stop at a desert water tank where a brakeman kicked them off and left them there when the freight pulled out. A passenger train passed at high speed and a deck of cards fell at the feet of one tramp and he suggested to the other that they play some poker to kill time. Neither of them had a dime; it was all for fun. After a few deals, one drew a king-high straight flush and the other four aces. The chap with the straight flush started off with a hundred-dollar bet, and the other tramp raised him $500. There followed a succession of raises until a million dollars was bet. The chap with the four aces then bid a billion dollars and he got a return of a trillion. The man with the four aces came back with a septillion and the tramp with the straight flush threw down his cards and said, "You win; you are too damned educated for me."

We may know numeration terminology, but I doubt if we completely comprehend the full significance of the vast sums we have been making available. They are vast, but must be vast successfully to carry on a war such as we are in, and there is but little we can do about it other than to give thorough scrutiny to the requests that are presented, and to challenge those which cannot be completely justified as essential to the war effort. I can assure you that has been the approach of the naval subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations. We insist upon justifications in very great detail.

Ships and airplanes, Mr. Chairman, basically determine the bounds of the naval budget. They determine the personnel strength; they determine the nature and capacity of shore establishments; and they determine maintenance and operational costs. Ships are costly weapons, particularly ships of the larger categories, and airplanes, considering their floating landing fields, and tenders in the case of amphibian planes, their equipment with modern offensive weapons and ammunition, detection and communication outfits, and so forth, and their maintenance and operational costs, run the bill into astronomical figures. It is planes, I might add, that have sent further skyward the cost of surface craft in the way of protection against planes.

The personnel strength, occasioned by our ship and airplane programs, is a very sizable factor in the measure before you, made more so by the liberality of Congress in raising pay rates. Naval personnel, directly and indirectly, account for about 16 percent of the amount in the bill we have presented. We have set the numbers out for you on page 5 of the committee's report.

The bill, Mr. Chairman, proposes direct appropriations of $27,463,687,198 and contractual authority of $2,000,000,000, plus an additional amount of contractual authority of $2,779,880,000, contingent upon the enactment of legislation which the House has passed authorizing additional auxiliary and small-craft tonnage.

The cash part of the bill, while $3,830,000,000 in excess of current year appropriations, is $2,022,107,802 less than the Budget estimates, but of that amount $1,991,000,000 represents a substitution of contractual authority for cash. Actually, therefore, we have made a net cash reduction of $22,107,802, and that sum you will find itemized, commencing at the bottom of page 5 of our report.

We actually have effected reductions of $95,627,950, all told, but $50,000,000 of that is a deferment, agreed to by the Navy Department, and something in the neighborhood of $23,000,000 we have employed to finance certain increases you will find enumerated in the statement in the report to which I previously directed your attention.

The general uses of the funds proposed are enumerated on page 4 of the report. I hope those of you who are doing me the honor to hear my presentation have a copy of our report before you. They are available here at the desk on my left.

The increases we have made apply for the most part to subsistence. The Budget ignored actual costs, and, if we adhered to the estimates, we simply would be writing a bill which we knew would not meet the demands. The Army budget, yet to be considered, I am advised, is based upon the prevailing cost of the ration. Why a different budget procedure as to the Navy I do not know. Possibly the Budget Bureau had in mind reverse lend-lease and some tangible returns from the efforts being made to curb food wastage, of which there has been considerable. The committee believes, however, after making allowances for such considerations, that the subsistence estimates are not adequate to meet the cost that will be necessary during the fiscal year 1944.

We found under the Marine Corps that the Budget omitted to provide for the Marine Corps' college training program. The Budget included funds under the Bureau of Naval Personnel for a part of the cost of such program, but neglected to take care of pay, subsistence, clothing, and transportation costs chargeable to Marine Corps appropriations.

We also found that the Marine Corps will be short of funds for certain phases of its operations for the current fiscal year, and we have made provision therefor, making the amounts immediately available. That will save a further hearing by the Appropriations Deficiency Subcommittee, Mr. Chairman, and, possibly, the passage of a special resolution.

I do not wish to pass the Marine Corps without a word about the grand job the marines did at Guadalcanal and are doing elsewhere. It is a real fighting outfit, my friends, and you may confidently expect, before this war is over, to hear of many more really great accomplishments.

Another item of increase, under the head of "Miscellaneous expenses," pertains to a survey of war production plants, including equipment, with a view to having information readily accessible as to that which may be released, upon the conclusion of the war, for such uses as then may be detremined to be desirable without disrupting the national economy. Strange as it may seem, all of that information is not presently centered in Washington. The Navy Department, the War Department, and the Defense Plant Corporation, and, possibly other Federal agencies, the committee understands, are going to undertake such a survey and use the pattern the Navy is suggesting. The value of such a compilation, it seems to me, is obvious. The Navy's part of it will be in the very efficient hands of Rear Admiral Harold G. Bowen, to whom the Navy and the country are deeply indebted for his large contribution to the superior propulsive machinery presently being installed upon naval vessels, and for highly technical developments, by reason of his direction of the Naval Research Laboratory, that are playing a large part in the prosecution of the war.

On the reduction side, Mr. Chairman, we have not touched a single matériel or personnel project. It would just not make sense to cut into purely naval projects at this time. The means and the implementation necessary for bringing the enemy to terms—our terms—I submit, are not matters for our determination. We must abide by the judgment of our naval leadership, or be prepared to share with them or assume the responsibility for any setbacks that may occur. Using the words of the Navy's distinguished naval commander in chief, Admiral King, "the Congress automatically shares the responsibility for the conduct of the war in respect to the funds appropriated."

The Navy's airplane program, beyond that for which provision heretofore has been made, was submitted in a supplemental estimate. It calls for a total of $4,868,725,000. The airplane production program, both Army and Navy, upon which we have been engaged, looks to a total of 185,000 useful airplanes on hand by the end of December 1943. We are going to fall somewhat short of that objective. It will not be wholly realized before the end of June 1944—a 6 months' delay, in other words. Production beyond that point must be provided for at this time in order that industry may plan accordingly and produce efficiently.

It is estimated that we shall reach a peak production capacity of about 11,000 planes per month. That ceiling will be imposed by the availability of essential materials. It has been determined to provide for that capacity for the period commencing July 1, 1944, although the construction of some planes will be undertaken prior to such date to fill out diminishing programs in some production plants.

The Navy's part of the whole program, which will consist of some one-hundred-and-thirty-thousand-odd planes, is 27,642, estimated to cost the amount I already have indicated, namely, $4,868,725,000.

Unless wastage—that is, crashes, battle damage, battle losses, and obsolesence go way beyond reasonable expectation, there is no question but that the Navy will be surfeited with airplanes. There is this to be said, however: That no matter how the planes may be financed, allocation will be determined by the Munitions Assignment Board, and, I might add this observation: That until we can rather definitely approximate the time of complete and final victory, we cannot afford to permit of any diminution in airplane output. This is a must part of our program.

We have made a number of defense-aid reductions, Mr. Chairman, amounting all told to $20,675,000. We have taken money out of "Welfare and recreation," "Fuel and transportation," and "Maintenance, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts," for objects, if the reports we get have any factual basis, as to which there should be some reflection of reverse lend-lease in naval expenditures. The committee felt that it was time to anticipate and capitalize upon such a result. In this connection, I invite your attention to the small-type matter on page 11 of the committee's report on the bill, which is a release by the Navy Department upon reverse lend-lease and is pertinent. Further justification for the committee's action is contained in the report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs on the bill extending the Lend-Lease Act. You will find it in House Report No. 188. My information is the Army took reverse lend-lease into account in building its 1944 estimates, and we feel that the Navy, while acknowledging reciprocity, should present something in the way of tangible evidence; in other words, some reduction in its money requests.

The House will be interested in knowing that the committee made inquiry into the matter of building up unnecessarily large inventories. It has the assurance that the matter is being carefully watched and that excesses over current needs are held to such quantities as constitute a reasonable reserve to meet any disruption of inflow to replace expenditures. Of course, as to combat expendables, and particularly that which takes much time to produce and that which cannot be closely approximated by reason of unpredictable contacts or engagements with the enemy, such as ammunition, there must be substantial reserves available at all times.

On the cost side of production I am glad to say that an improved situation prevails. That is largely due to renegotiation, which means savings under completed contracts, under going contracts, and under contracts being executed, which latter reflect costs, plus reasonable profits, growing out of renegotiation. In this connection I invite your attention to the yearly report of the chairman of the Navy's Price Adjustment Board, which is the Navy's renegotiation agency, reprinted commencing on page 776 of the hearings on the bill. It is a very illuminating statement, and should make us feel much easier about inordinate profits.

Mr. Chairman, renegotiation is the brain child of our distinguished colleague from South Dakota [Mr. CASE]. It was his provision, offered as a floor amendment to the sixth supplemental national defense appropriation bill, which became law on April 28, 1942, that culminated in the legislation finally carried in that bill with respect to renegotiation. These are the results so far:

For the Navy: The end of March 1943 price reductions and cash refunds arranged by the Navy Price Adjustment Board amounted to more than $950,000,000. That total does not take into consideration the very substantial amount which will be saved through the lower prices which will prevail upon subsequent business.

For the Army for the period ended March 31, 1943, price reductions and cash refunds totaling $1,527,000,000 were effected by the War Department. Price reductions were $967,000,000 and cash refunds were $560,000,000.

The country rightfully may be proud of our distinguished colleague the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE]. I may say to him that his colleagues certainly are.

I do not know as there is any need for me, at this time, to say more about this bill, Mr. Chairman. I have endeavored to touch upon its salient features. Our report is in more detail and I commend it to your attention. This bill has the unanimous endorsement of your entire committee.

I do wish, before closing, to express my deep appreciation of the fine help I received from my subcommittee colleagues, and the fine work of Mr. John Pugh, who worked long hours on details and always is cooperative; also of the very able contribution of the senior minority member of the subcommittee, the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER]. He has had long experience on the naval subcommittee and his aid and counsel have been most helpful and are deeply appreciated. They are a splendid group of gentlemen to work with.

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes.

Mr. O'HARA. The gentleman spoke of the rather astounding size of this appropriation. Does the gentleman recognize that for the Navy alone, since 1940, or including 1940, there has been appropriated about $64,000,000,000, exclusive of this appropriation.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes, I do.

Mr. O'HARA. I wonder if the committee went into the extent of this program? It is my understanding when the last large naval appropriation bill which was passed, that it was stated by the committee or by the subcommittee members that that would provide for the largest Navy in the world, that it would exceed the British Navy in size, with the authorization for appropriations that were made up to that time. Is my memory correct upon that?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do not recall a statement exactly in that way. We have, however, been providing for a Navy that would be unsurpassed by any in the world. Of course, it is a large program and appropriations are provided as and when funds are needed for its accomplishment.

Mr. O'HARA. I understand from the report of the committee that of sums previously appropriated, approximately $14,000,000,000 have not been used as yet.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Not expended, but committed or obligated.

Mr. O'HARA. How many years of the program will this prvoide for?

Mr. SHEPPARD. We are passing this appropriation for the anticipated disbursement needs during the fiscal year ending in June 1944. How much provision will need to be made beyond that point depends upon authorized ship construction yet to be undertaken and, also, the progress of the war.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes.

Mr. COLE of New York. I have two or three questions that I would like to have the gentleman's opinion about. First, referring to page 22, the item identified as "Transportation of things," calling for an appropriation of $200,000,000. I wonder if the gentleman would care to explain just what that activity is. The amount of money involved is rather large.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is intended to take care of all of the Navy's matériel transportation, which we are providing for under one head, previously set up in different appropriations—all matériel transportation of all types and character are involved in that item.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Mr. COLE of New York. I imagine that this transportation is related to the war effort.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Very largely; yes. Normally the amount would be much less.

Mr. COLE of New York. I am curious to know whether the transportation of all military equipment, whether used by the Army or the Navy, is chargeable to the Navy.

Mr. SHEPPARD. No; the Army's transportation account is provided for separately.

Mr. COLE of New York. And this $200,000,000?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is confined strictly to naval operations.

Mr. COLE of New York. And no transportation cost relating to lend-lease is chargeable to the naval appropriation?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Only such as pertains to lend-lease or defense aid financed out of naval appropriations

Mr. COLE of New York. And with regard to the item for replacement and construction of ships, can the gentleman tell me whether in connection with the construction of new combatant ships, they are chargeable against replacement of ships sunk due to war effort, or whether they are charged against the general authorization?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I would say against the general authorization.

Mr. COLE of New York. Perhaps the gentleman did not understand me. The present law authorizes the size of our Navy to be of a certain number of tons. What I would like to know is whether if one of our combatant ships is sunk, the replacement of that vessel is charged against the original authorization, or is kept on the books as a replacement vessel.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is charged against the gross authorized tonnage, whether it be replacement or otherwise.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 additional minute.

Mr. COLE of New York. I have one other question if the gentleman would care to answer it. I am personally interested in the items relating to the Seneca Lake Training Station, which I notice carries an appropriation of $3,300,000. Can the gentleman advise me what has been the total appropriation for that training station up to date?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Approximately $55,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 minutes.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, since this is a very important bill, I think we should have a quorum present.

Mr. DITTER. I hope the gentleman will withdraw any such request.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, it may seem to be a commonplace, yet I feel that I would be remiss were I to fail to acknowledge to my distinguished chairman and to the majority members the appreciation of the minority for the uniform courtesies which were extended to the minority throughout the entire course of the hearings and the discussions in connection with the bill. Without attempting any undue flattery I should like to add that I believe the chairman of the subcommittee deserves not only the support but the appreciation of the House for the faithful way in which he has addressed himself to the tremendous tasks that were his and the way in which he has discharged the responsibilities that fell to his lot.

Then again I shall not permit the occasion to pass without paying a word of well deserved tribute to the very able clerk of the committee. As long as I am a member of the appropriations committee for the Navy I shall not let the opportunity pass of saying that John Pugh's contribution to the Navy program is something that cannot be measured. Words fail me in expressing to him what I believe is the appreciation of the country for his devotion to duty.

One other word. In these days of expanding personnel in connection with the Naval Establishment, it seems to me the temptation is to overemphasize the civilian administrative force identified with the Naval Establishment. I think that temptation also offers the opportunity of slighting, to some extent at least, the old-line seadogs of the Navy. I want to commend the officer personnel, the bureau heads, those who in the days of peace, in the days of preparation, continued to hold before the country the need of the Navy as the first line of defense, and who now, when larger responsibilities come to them, are discharging those responsibilities with credit to themselves and with credit to the Nation. The bureau heads, the officer personnel, the enlisted men—those are the men, after all, upon whom the safety of the Nation depends insofar as the Navy goes.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I yield briefly to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE. In connection with what the gentleman said with reference to the services of the clerk to the committee, I was simply going to remark that it should be noted also for the RECORD that in addition to handling the greatly enlarged financial program of the Navy, as clerk to the Subcommittee on Appropriations for Naval Affairs, Mr. Pugh also is clerk to the Committee on Appropriations for the War Department and has carried on. How he has done it no one knows, but he has done a double job in these important times, and what the gentleman has said for the Navy can also be said for the War Department.

Mr. DITTER. I am glad my friend has added that contribution, which, of course, I know is well deserved. Nothing could be said but the best for the able clerk of the committee.

It is a significant coincidence that we are considering today the largest naval appropriation bill in the history of the country immediately after having heard the challenging address of the Prime Minister. I cannot hope to quote verbatim but I did gather from the Prime Minister's statement to us that while we could be satisfied with the military successes in Africa at the present time, nevertheless there still lies before us a difficult and arduous task. I believe I at least give you the substance if not the exact form of the Prime Minister's statement when I say there can be no abatement in the effort that we should put forth to bring about a speedy and successful conclusion of the war effort. It is with that determination, that there can be no abatement, no lessening of effort, no let up, that I today support wholeheartedly the bill now before us.

May I say here and now that I am not unmindful of those who feel that the Navy may at times be accumulating too much in the way of munitions and materials of war. I am not unmindful of those critics who are willing to eye skeptically the stores that are being accumulated for a possible eventuality.

I realize that the Navy as such is the trustee of the commitments of confidence made by the American people. I believe this trustee will discharge honestly, faithfully, and well the stewardship that has been committed to it. For myself I am not ready to try to limit the accumulations of materials that may be sorely needed in the future before this war is won; I am not willing to put my judgment as a layman against the judgment of the men who have been trained and who are skilled in the strategy, the conduct of the war. I may be mistaken, but I would rather by far be mistaken on the safe side than to be sorry on the dangerous side if an eventuality should develop. I can say for the Republicans of the House that they have committed themselves, unreservedly, wholeheartedly, for the prosecution of the war. But we sound the warning that incompetencies and dishonesties will come to shame those who are not equal to the trust that has been imposed upon them.

For the minority I make the declaration that we are not going to pinch pennies in the prosecution of the war. With that goes the challenge to the majority that it is in charge of the Government and accountable for mismanagement and extravagance. The majority is responsible to the country for every executive agency. The country looks to the majority to clean house, to clear up the wastes, the mismanagements, and the abuses of confidence. But even though we hold you to the high degree of responsibility, we of the minority are going as far as we can go so that the charge may not be lodged against us of hampering in any way the war effort. The treasure of the country is yours, and in the commitment of that treasure there goes the highest degree of responsibility of stewardship; and God help you, God help you, the majority, if you are not equal to the trust of a free people. After all, as we think of these dollars it seems to me that it is the least the Nation is giving. The Prime Minister of Great Britain said we were giving of our treasure; yes, we are giving generously of our treasure, but we are giving more than that: we are giving of our boys; we are giving of the strength and the sinew of the home; we are giving of those things that cannot be replaced if lost by material things or by the accumulation of treasure. "Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." The richest treasure that America has—not gold, but men—is being given unselfishly and without stint. We can answer the Prime Minister today by the solemn declaration that we are giving without reservation all that we have for the victory of our common cause.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I must always yield to my distinguished friend from Kentucky; I have never refused him.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. If it disturbs the continuity of the gentleman's thought or statement, I would not want to intrude.

Mr. DITTER. I am glad to have the gentleman's statement.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I notice the bill calls for $29,494,795,000. Is it contemplated that this sum is to be reduced by amendment? I am not asking that it be reduced, but is this supposed to be the amount of the bill that will be approved?

Mr. DITTER. Answering the gentleman, my hope is that there shall not be one penny of reduction made in the appropriation that the committee is bringing to the floor. I believe every penny has been justified insofar as justification can be made in the light of the possible eventualities of the future.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I join in the gentleman's desire that we do everything possible to win this war at the earliest possible date, and that every dollar be spent to accomplish this high purpose; but I rose also to say that the Prime Minister of Great Britain must take some comfort on this occasion that the action that is being taken by the House today, because the budget of Great Britain provides for an expenditure of $20,500,000,000 this year. In one single appropriation here for our Navy we propose to expend $29,494,795,000 and we shall soon have around 11,000,000 men in our armed forces. As I understand, this will be twice as many men as Great Britain or the British Empire has; so we are spending many times as much money as the British Empire and have perhaps twice the number of men in our armed forces. So it cannot be said that the United States is not contributing her full share either in treasure, blood, or in effort to win this war.

Mr. DITTER. I am so glad my friend brought that contribution. May I say that, of course, it does not come within the province of the Committee on Appropriations to determine the matter of policy. Ours is only the duty of appropriating after the authorizations have been made. Certainly the charge cannot be made that the United States is failing in any way to give in toil, tears, blood, and treasure more than its share in the waging of the war.

I join with the gentleman from Kentucky in looking with some degree of—I was about to say suspicion—at least with some degree of question at the comparative contribuitions in dollars, at least, that are being made by our own people and those of some of our allies. However, may this be a reasonable excuse for the superload that we are carrying: We as a people prize the possessions that are ours, and in the measure by which we prize those possessions as a people, we are willing to make our contribution the greater for their preservation.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Taking the sum that we have in this bill—$29,494,795,000—counting that in, what, all together, has been appropriated for the United States Navy in this war?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, answering the gentleman's question, I do not have the figures available, but I should say, in the last 3 years, that our appropriations for the Navy have been somewhere in the neighborhood of $60,000,000,000. I will stand correction at the hands of any of the members of the committee if I am in error. I am simply making a very quick estimate of this, and if I am incorrect in that I should like to have correction.

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. I think the gentleman's estimate for the last 3 years is quite accurate. From 1940 through the fiscal year 1944 the total appropriations to the Navy have been approximately $95,000,000,000.

Mr. DITTER. The gentleman from Texas is including the amount carried by this bill?

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. Yes; including 1944.

Mr. DITTER. Yes. So that roughly my figures were about right up to the fiscal year 1943.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes; but counting the sum in this bill, are authorizations included?

Mr. DITTER. No. There is very little in the way of contractual authorizations. In other words, the figures that I gave you are, I feel, sufficiently comprehensive and all-inclusive that further inquiry of the gentleman as to contractual authorizations would hardly be in order.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. DITTER. May I make this further observation to the gentleman from Kentucky? We should never dismiss from our mind as we estimate these costs, as we try to figure what this program has meant in dollars and cents, that the administration persisted when the war boom came on to continue a program of domestic economy geared to depression days. It is my own conviction that had the administration forsaken the domestic economy to which it has clung very tenaciously, the economy of the depression days, and had adopted an economy geared to war production, the figures we have just given you might have been cut very materially. If we are to build ships, if we are to build planes, if we are to be on a 24-hour schedule, and if with that program we are to hang to a 40-hour week and 8 hours overtime, and all of the other segments of a domestic economy geared to depression days, then of necessity this war business, this naval program, will cost us more money. To that extent, may I say to the gentleman from Kentucky, I feel that a very just criticism can be lodged against the administration. I hope I have the support of the gentleman from Kentucky in that observation.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I greatly appreciate the argument the gentleman has made. I have great faith in his good judgment. He is one of the very ablest Members of this body. He is always well informed on the facts and is always fair, clear, and convincing. This is such an enormous sum, $95,000,000,000, nearly five times the cost of the first World War from the beginning of that war until the signing of the armistice, nearly five times I repeat. This enormous sum is for the Navy only. I know the gentleman is fair and he makes a fair statement. He knows the facts and I appreciate very much the information the gentleman is giving the House and giving to me.

There is no man in the House I listen to with more interest as well as profit. We are fortunate to have him on this great committee.

Mr. DITTER. I repeat that in my opinion the program could have been conducted, especially in the earlier days, with more care and probably less expense.

Mr. STEFAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. Would it complete the picture when I say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, in answering the question the gentleman from Kentucky asked that the authorizations and appropriations, the total for the entire war up to this time, are approximately two hundred and forty-three to two hundred and forty-four billion dollars. Would that complete the picture?

Mr. DITTER. That probably is a good estimate.

Mr. STEFAN. And the probability is it might reach to three hundred or four hundred billion dollars before we complete the entire story. Is that true?

Mr. DITTER. I do not believe any of us are prophetic enough to be able to bring down to dollars and cents what it might be. I feel I need make no professions to this House with reference to my opposition to extravagance and waste and my support of economy measures. I am confident that I need make no loud protestations with reference to my position in this regard.

As economy-minded as I am, I want to repeat what I said before, that no matter what the price may be in dollars, that price can well be paid by the people if in the spending of money we save of the richer treasures—the lives of American boys and the winning of the war.

I ask no one to join me in that. It is purely a personal conviction. I am making no plea for it. I am not asking you to join the profession of my own faith. I am making a declaration of what is in my inmost soul. My program is to win the war, save all that we can in lives and preserve the fundamental faith upon which the Republic was founded.

Mr. STEFAN. Of course, the gentleman realizes that practically every man, in fact, every man in the House joins him in that premise. There is no sacrifice that we can make at this time that is too big to win this war.

Mr. DITTER. Or to lessen the suffering of those that are engaged in the war.

Mr. STEFAN. Our ambitions in this House have been to lessen the days of the war, to lessen it a month, lessen it a week, lessen it 1 hour.

Mr. DITTER. That is right.

Mr. STEFAN. If the spending of this money will do that, it is money well spent, the gentleman will agree.

Will the gentleman now answer one question that is very, very dear to the hearts of the people in many States? Referring to the training program, on page 39 of the hearings, I notice that the C. A. A. preflight training schools are cut to 100. I have been told recently that you have been going to cut those pre-flight training schools to 85. Is that correct?

Mr. DITTER. Yes.

Mr. STEFAN. Will that mean that you are going to close a number of war-training programs that the Navy is carrying out in some of the schools? Does the gentleman know anything about that?

Mr. DITTER. I know of no man in whom I have a greater degree of confidence than Admiral Jacobs, who is in charge of the Bureau of Personnel of the United States Navy, and to whom is given the great task of furnishing the men. I place my confidence in his judgment, and I believe that he has due regard for the needs of the pre-flight training group and of other groups as he envisions the need for a big navy of the future. I am sure that the committee supports completely the recommendations of Admiral Jacobs.

I had intended making some observations with reference to certain administrative features of the Naval Establishments. Time will not permit.

In supporting the bill now before us and in urging your support I can lay claim to consistency. I have always supported the proposition that we should have a navy second to none. In this critical hour, this time of testing, the Navy is vindicating the confidence of every American. It is living up to the best traditions of the Navy. It is making certain the perpetuation of the Republic.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to and about the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania who has just spoken that in my humble judgment there is not a man in Congress who knows more about the Navy than does he.

Mr. Chairman, including 1940, through the fiscal year 1944, the Congress has appropriated to the Navy about $95,000,000,000, of which $29,494,795,000 are included in the bill under consideration. This astronomical sum has been used through the past 4 years to build the greatest Navy the world has ever seen. When 1944 funds have been spent, we will have, not a one-ocean Navy, but a Navy that can and will fight on all seven seas. Much work and planning have gone into the building of this navy. Besides ships which had to be constructed, there were guns and torpedoes, radio and radar equipment, and ordnance items to be fabricated. There were airplanes to be designed, and then built; there were shipyards and airfields, and training stations, and many, many other types of public-works projects, including housing and utilities that had to be constructed. There were food and clothing to be purchased. And, last but by no means the least, men, to man the ships and fly the planes had to be procured and then trained.

For doing the magnificent job of building this Navy, too much credit cannot be given to Admiral E. J. King, Commander in Chief of the United States Fleet; Vice Admiral F. J. Horne, Vice Chief of Naval Operations; Vice Admiral Samuel M. Robinson, Chief of the Bureau for Procurement of Materials; Rear Admiral Randall Jacobs, Chief of the Bureau of Naval Personnel, Rear Admiral E. L. Cochrane, Chief of the Bureau of Ships; Rear Admiral W. H. P. Blandy, Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance; Rear Admiral Ben Moreell, Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks; Rear Admiral W. B. Young, Chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts; Rear Admiral J. S. McCain, Chief of the Burear of Aeronautics; and to Admiral Ross McIntire, the greatest Chief of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery the Navy has ever had. Credit for building this great Navy goes to these patriotic, hard-working, efficient bureau chiefs.

Let us examine a few of the high points of the bill under consideration and see how it carries forth the Navy's program, which was started long before Pearl Harbor. The huge sum of twenty-nine and one-half billion dollars is made necessary for the fiscal year 1944 because of the ever-growing size of the Navy. The peak of Navy personnel for the calendar year of 1943 will be reached sometime in the fall; it will be composed of 1,588,013 officers and men. That number will be increased by an additional 823,987 in 1944. The peak of the Marine Corps for 1943 will be 300,661 officers and men. That number will be increased by 59,554 during the fiscal year 1944. The peak of the Coast Guard in 1943 will be 156,910 officers and men, and will be increased by 13,415 in 1944. Women—officers and enlisted personnel—in the Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard, will reach the peak of 35,840 in 1943, and will be increased to 63,560 in 1944.

The bill carries $1,002,691,000 for the marines. And from the way they have been fighting, that sum is very little. The marines have rendered great service in the Pacific, and I am sure, after listening to the Prime Minister's speech this morning, it will not be long until they will be called upon in the Atlantic. Lt. Gen. Thomas Holcomb, the Commandant, says the spirit of the corps was never higher. We can all rest assured that the marines will live up to their high standards and noble traditions.

A provision of $467,756,000 has been made for the Coast Guard. As you all know, in peacetime the Coast Guard operates under the Treasury Department. But in time of war it becomes a part of the Navy. Its functions and duties are to protect our harbors, our merchant shipping, and our shore lines. For all practical purposes, as far as budgetary matters are concerned, the Coast Guard is separate and independent of the Navy. It builds and procures its own ships, trains its own personnel, and buys its own ordnance and supplies. In my humble judgment, much consideration should be given to retaining the Coast Guard in the Navy after peace comes. Its functions are purely naval, and it should be as much a part of the Navy as is the Marine Corps. In making it a permanent part of the Navy, I am convinced that many millions of dollars could be saved.

The bill carries $9,118,120,000 for new ships. The Navy has some 30 to 40 different type ships. Many of these different types are auxiliary craft which serve our fighting ships. At the end of the fiscal year of 1943 the Navy will have 26,326 ships of all types in commission. That number at the end of the fiscal year 1944 will be increased to 41,179. We have today approximately 2,674 combat ships, and that number will be increased to 4,153 in 1944. The remainder of the ships come under the classification of district and yard craft, small landing craft, and special boats. Funds are made available in this bill at the proper time for 1,000,000 tons of auxiliary ships and 1,000,000 tons of landing and district craft. About one-half of the 1,000,000 tons of auxiliary craft will be allocated to the construction of auxiliary aircraft carriers, which will be somewhere in the neighborhood of 50. As Vice Admiral Horne well stated: "Aircraft carriers are now the backbone of the fleet." These small auxiliary carriers are in addition to the many large combat carriers that are now near completion.

Rear Admiral Cochrane, Chief of the Bureau of Ships, has estimated that the life of a landing ship is indeed very short, and that we lose from 25 to 50 percent of the landing craft used in every operation. It should be noted that such heavy losses of these ships does not indicate in the slightest that the men in them are lost in the same proportion.

All of us know that it is the Navy's job to convoy safely our merchant ships and our transports. Considering the head start that Hitler had in the construction of submarines, I think the Navy has done a magnificent job in combating that menace. During the month of March the Allies' ship losses in all oceans were perhaps the greatest that we have suffered since the war began. During the month of April those losses were whittled down to about one-half of those in March. Of the number of ships lost in April, about one-third were cargo ships belonging to the United States. The indications for the month of May are that our cargo-ship losses will be about the same as April. We are looking for sizable losses until the month of September. From then on they should begin to materially dry up. Beginning in September, the Navy will commission about 35 or 40 destroyer escort vessels per month. These DE's plus auxiliary aircraft carriers will be the death knell to Hitler's submarine menace.

One of the biggest items in the bill is for ordnance in the sum of $3,476,800,000. It covers armament and munitions which is broken down into at least 15 to 20 classifications, ranging all the way from torpedoes, guns, radio equipment, gunpowder, and TNT. Rear Admiral Blandy told the committee that it was wise to keep large supplies of ordnance on hand. Millions of dollars' worth of spare parts must be available at all times. The exact needs of the fleet are in some degree speculative; no one can foresee just how much battle damage there will be to the ships and just how much ammunition will be used. If ammunition and guns are not available when the Navy needs them, lives and ships will be lost. Then all we can say is, "Too little and too late." But we have about $3,500,000,000 surplus ordnance on hand now. It is encouraging, though, that 90 percent or more of the needs of the Navy ordnance facilities are now in operation, and very few, if any, new facilities will be constructed. During the past 5 years the Bureau of Ordnance has spent $750,000,000 for tools and facilities, either in its own plants or in plants operated by private enterprise for the use and benefit of the Navy.

This bill carries funds for 27,642 airplanes to be constructed in 1944 and 1945, at a cost of $4,847,725,000. We are now making provision for these planes because the War Production Board requires that the needs of the Navy be scheduled 15 months in advance so a proper allocation of materials can be made in order to insure delivery. Provision has heretofore been made in the recent naval deficiency appropriation bill for the needs of the Bureau during 1944.

It is a fair statement that the Government, through the Navy and the Army, has completely subsidized the airplane industry. The Navy alone has spent, up to date, $625,309,000 for airplane and engine facilities. Very little expansion of the industry will be made in the future.

To take care of, and to service these planes the Navy has some half dozen mechanics schools from which it has turned out 21,000 mechanics, and will be turning out 5,700 per month by the 1st of July of this year. The men receive from 4 to 6 months' training. Not only are airplanes expensive—they range from $90,000 to $5,000,000 per plane—but their equipment, such as radio and radar, is also expensive. It costs about $20,000 to equip a large plane with radio and about $30,000 for radar.

About 125,000 planes will be delivered this year to the Army and the Navy, which represents our total production. Although this figure is huge, it indicates we are about 6 months late in our schedule. It is generally agreed that today we are building some two and one-half to three times as many planes as Germany. During the month of April our production was about 6,500 planes. We shall reach our maximum capacity in the month of December of this year, which will be about 10,500 to 11,000 planes per month. Our monthly production will level off with that figure, which means some 132,000 planes will be built during the calendar year of 1944.

In talking about our great Navy, oftentimes we forget about perhaps one of the most important features of it; namely, the health of the men who do the job. That is the task of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery; it also handles all naval hospital facilities. Admiral McIntire says the health of the Navy is excellent, and all of us know that to be a fact. There have been no epidemics in the Navy. The ideal rate of doctors for every 1,000 men in the Navy is 6.5. On that basis the Navy should have 20,000 doctors by the end of 1944. However, today it has only 9,000, and Admiral McIntire says he doubts if it will have more than 12,000 by the end of 1944. There are not enough doctors to go around; but the admiral is confident those he has will be more than equal to the task. The Navy will not have much trouble in procuring dentists. One dentist is required to every 500 men.

The Navy now has 16 temporary hospitals and 15 permanent ones, with a total of about 40,000 beds. Twenty thousand additional beds will be provided during the fiscal year of 1944. The funds for the new beds were provided for in the last Navy deficiency bill.

I should like to discuss for a few minutes the question of looking toward reductions in future appropriations for the Navy. The Congress has not failed to provide the Navy with practically all the funds, with a few minor exceptions, it has requested. It has been estimated that if the war were to end late in 1944 the Navy would have on hand over $60,000,000,000 in surplus materials, supplies, ordnance, ships, tools, and plant facilities. We all know we are not now fighting for dollars, but we are fighting for our very lives, and our freedom, and our homes. If ships and guns and ammunition and planes are not provided when they are needed, we may well lose the war. But, on the other hand, there must be a point somewhere within reason, between that amount of munitions, ships, airplanes, and supplies generally that are absolutely needed and the amount that we are building today. The time has come when serious consideration should be given to reducing all future appropriation bills, especially if surpluses are being accumulated. This is a delicate question, I know, and the very best judgment will have to be used. However, I am firmly convinced that many millions—yes; several billions—of dollars can be saved.

I am afraid that we are paying too much for many implements of war. Take, for instance, airplanes. I am just wondering if we could not get a little more for our money than we are now getting from that industry, which I have stated before is 100 percent subsidized by the taxpayers. Take, for example, the airplane FM-2, which is a standard fighter plane that has been in production for 3 years. That plane cost $75,825 in 1941, $79,851 in 1942, and $112,205 in 1943. In 1944 it will drop to $97,365, which is about 13-percent decrease. Prices of materials and labor, so the Bureau of Aeronautics says, made the plane advance in price from $75,825 in 1941 to $112,205 in 1943. It seems that with mass production, after 3 years of effort, the price should be lower than it was in 1941, when the plane first went into production.

The Bureau of Supplies and Accounts is the quartermaster for the Navy, and buys millions upon millions of dollars worth of food, clothing, and all types of supplies needed by the Navy. It should watch very carefully for signs of collusion between bidders. Where it finds evidence of price fixing whereby the taxpayers of the United States are forced to pay a price higher than the normal, competitive price because of collusion and price fixing, the Department of Justice should be called into action.

This bill calls for an expenditure of $750,000, the purpose of which is to take an inventory of tools and facilities of the various plants operated by the Navy, and in all plants under its direction. The Navy admits $750,000 is only a starter. Frankly, I do not like the idea. It rather smacks of a Navy W. P. A. project. The Navy now has in its possession a list of all of these tools and the prices paid for them. If it has not, there should be a wholesale firing in the Navy today. What condition the tools will be in 6 months from now, or a year and a half, or 2 years after constant use, is a question that cannot be determined more than 2 or 3 months in advance. What disposition will be made of all the tools and equipment in all facilities and plants owned by the Navy and the Army will be a subject to which the Congress will give much consideration when the present need for them has come to an end. Any study of tools and facilities which does not include housing, and the personnel that operates them, and other kindred subjects, will be of very little use and benefit. The Navy does not include in its proposed survey the problems affecting civilian workers, but only seeks to count the machinery. In my judgment, this $750,000 is thrown away. The plan will call for the expenditure during the next 2 years of several millions more for the same purpose.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY].

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, little remains for me to discuss, and I do not intend to take much time in general debate. I do desire to reassert that, notwithstanding the size of this bill in dollars, your subcommittee studied carefully each proposal of those in charge of supporting the Nation's war effort from the standpoint of the Navy. We recognized that we were at war. We undertook to eliminate from the estimate and requests for appropriations every item we thought to be extravagant, unnecessary, or unwise for the general conduct of the war, from our standpoint as the representatives of the people, out of whose pockets must come first the wherewithal measured monetarily, and from whom must come the men and women to carry out the program to win the war.

The report supports and justifies the national and common ideal to see the war effort pushed with the utmost vigor and efficiency to the end that the unconditional surrender of the common enemies of mankind may be accomplished at the earliest possible date.

There were no petty or partisan politics involved in our long and tedious and responsible discussions of each and every and all the items. All of us had but one end in view, and that to bring you a bill which we were and are satisfied sufficiently covers the present necessities.

We need not be complacent, however, for we may have underestimated our needs even at that.

At Boston day before yesterday Secretary Knox, while declaring the Allied Nations were acquiring greater and greater domination over the enemy's lines of communications, emphasized that a stiff fight lay ahead.

This can only mean a swift increase—in the number of human lives sacrificed, heavier and heavier expenditures of wealth to support the forces, more and more restrictions, strain, and sacrifices on the home front.

He said—

That means more and bigger appropriations.

I am sure that whatever it may take, those things we are fighting for are worth the price; that this is the sentiment of every American there can be no question. I shall briefly undertake to answer in part, the question.

Why is the Navy bill so large?

This is a question which my constituents repeatedly have asked me and one which I thought I had to investigate. The size of the figures, running as they do—$25,500,000,000 in 1943 and almost thirty billion this year without regard to the figures for the War Department, which are about double this size—makes the question of where these huge sums are coming from a matter of constant moment to the people and the Congress.

I have studied and investigated the subject and find that the reason the sums have reached the totals they have in this war is due to changes that have taken place in the character of the war we are pursuing. In the last World War the Japanese and Italians were allies and the Mediterranean was open and there was no active theater in the Pacific. In this war we are not only confronted with the problem of the supply of the British Empire, which alone approximates the problem of supply we undertook in the last World War in maintaining two and one-half million men overseas, but we are also confronted with the supply lines to Australia and the control of the Pacific Ocean. We not only have the life line across the North Atlantic to Great Britain but also lines of supply to South America and the African coast. The demands, therefore, upon the Navy have probably increased fourfold over what they were in the World War No. 1, in 1917–19 days. This is without regard to the fact that modern warfare has become more mechanized even afloat and that the machines and devices which have been invented cost more money. Air warfare has complicated sea warfare.

If you examine the Navy bill you will find that the bulk of the money is going into the construction of ships, the procurement of aircraft, and the provision for ordnance for these subjects. The munition procurement phase is passing and in this year and next the continuous expansion of the Navy will result in a shift of funds from procurement to operation. However in the current bill, which totals $29,485,795,000, almost one-third of it is still for new ships and one-fifth of it is for aviation. The figures are ship construction, $9,000,000,000; aviation, $6,500,000,000; ordnance, $3,500,000,000, and the maintenance and equipment charges of the Bureau of Ships are almost $2,000,000,000. I will discuss these subjects in detail.

The following table I have prepared permits of a quick analysis, by general objects, of the Budget estimates for 1944, the amounts by which they differ from current appropriations, and the amounts proposed by the committee:

Object	1944 estimates	Increase (+) decrease (−) compared with 1943	Committee proposals
New ships	$9,024,000,000	+$2,227,739,615	[1] $9,118,120,000

The total appropriation requested for the Navy for the fiscal year 1944 amounts to $29,400,000,000 in round numbers. The total amount appropriated for the Navy in the fiscal year 1943 was roughly $25,500,000,000. This represents an increase of $4,000,000,000 for the fiscal year 1944.

There are two methods by which we can portray the necessity for such an increase: One, a tabulation of appropriation titles by the two fiscal years and a summary of the justifications for each increase; two, a break-down showing the major items that cause the increase and a brief statement covering each of these. The former method can be obtained in the hearings before the Appropriations Subcommittee. These justifications are too voluminous to present here so we will discuss the major items making up the increase.

These major items are: Ships, ordnance, aviation, personnel, training, and public works. Under the heading "Ships" there are two subdivisions: (a) Ship construction, and (b) maintenance.

The Navy will commission about 2,000 new vessels during the fiscal year 1944, an increase of 20 percent over the number commissioned in fiscal year 1943. Considering landing craft and special small boats, nearly 20,000 units will be under construction. In addition, the number of ships in operation at the end of the fiscal year 1944 will be 4,682, an increase of 1,499 ships over those operated at the end of fiscal year 1943. The upkeep and operation of this expanding fleet, overhauls and dockings, major repairs and alterations, ship materials, maintenance of shore establishments, investigations and tests, and miscellaneous operating costs amount to $1,735,880,000. The ship-construction estimate is $9,118,120,000. Hence ship construction and maintenance will total $10,854,000,000, almost 33⅓ percent of the total appropriation of twenty-nine billion five hundred million.

The Navy is proceeding with the building of a well-balanced fleet. As the strategic situation changes the pattern must be changed accordingly. It has become imperative to place emphasis on immediate procurement of special type vessels to meet demands. Much of the increase in ship construction this year is the result of these demands. The destroyer escort vessel is a type developed specifically for antisubmarine work. The auxiliary aircraft carrier is another type being acquired in large numbers. Landing craft need no description in view of the publicity attendant to their use in Guadalcanal and north Africa. The need for small craft, special boats, and district craft becomes greater as continental and advance bases expand.

The aviation estimate is $6,583,725,000, including $2,000,000,000 contract authority. This amount represents an increase of $1,325,743,530 over current 1943 appropriations. Delivery will increase roughly 100 percent this year. By the end of fiscal year 1944, the total number of aircraft on hand, even excluding losses, will be double the present number. Aviation requirements comprise instruments, maintenance, experiments, and construction of aircraft. Instruments include navigational, aerological, testing, and photographic equipment. The maintenance item covers the cost of overhaul and operation of aircraft, aviation gasoline, special equipment and major repairs at air stations and various other similar requirements. The value of experimental work in aircraft and development of new types is so well known that it is believed nothing need be offered in the way of explanation. Of course, the subhead Construction of Aircraft is also self-explanatory in view of the increase in numbers of planes.

The next item is ordnance. To cover ordnance for aircraft and ships both with the increase in the number of ships mentioned above there must be a large increase in the ordnance equipage and ammunition. This equipage includes not only the repairs and alterations to the original equipment and spares for installations afloat and ashore, but also the replenishment of ammunition and the upkeep and operation of such shore establishments to complement this equipment. Modern war consumes large quantities of ammunition. The amount requested under this heading was roughly $3,500,000,000. An analysis of this will develop that approximately $3,125,000,000 were earmarked for new equipment items. This fact is indicative of the enormous increase in the offensive power of our Navy. On top of this program it is necessary to provide armament for all the 20,000,000 tons of vessels of the merchant marine being built this year. The ordnance equipment, both original and replacement, of aircraft is furnished from this appropriation. This equipment includes bombs, bomb details, pyrotechnics, and aerial and surface-craft torpedoes. The increase in the tempo of aerial warfare in all spheres of action is so evident that further comment appears unnecessary.

I have mentioned ships, ordnance, and aviation. These are only the tools of war. The most important task is that of procurement and the training of personnel to man and use these tools of war efficiently. A ship is, in effect, simply a gun platform. The best armament on a ship is useless if it is not brought to bear on the enemy in effective range or if the ship it is on is listed over so that the guns cannot bear on the foe. An airplane on the ground is a useless exhibit of the manufacturer's skill. To make them effective, they must be manned and operated by skilled personnel. In the fiscal year 1944 the Navy will increase its enlisted personnel by approximately 55 percent. The money requested for the fiscal year 1944 for the procurement, training, food, pay, and indoctrination of the personnel of the Navy is the best type of national insurance.

An enormous training program for both officers and enlisted men has been developed. This program has embraced the major portion of 1,700 schools or colleges throughout the Nation. This program has been integrated with the needs of the service as indicated by the operating ships, the planes delivered, the stations and advanced bases placed in commission and the various directives placed in effect by the chief of naval operations. New methods of training have been developed and their efficacy has been demonstrated under battle conditions.

The Public Works request amounts to $1,855,317,405. This will provide for the construction of advance bases in the areas of operations, for additions to existing stations beyond the continental limits, and comparatively minor work on the continental establishment necessary to complement the fleet. It will be noted that this past year we have reached the peak in construction in the United States. From now on, the bulk of funds will be expended on the procurement of materials and equipment for the establishment of supporting bases in the active theaters of war. The expansion of these will depend on the speed of our offensive action, the zones of attack, and other factors that cannot be predicted at present.

The supply and maintenance of bases set up throughout the world is a problem that can be readily appreciated.

The program for fleet facilities is based on the needs of the expanding active operating forces. It would be futile to increase the fleet and then deny it the facilities near the operating areas that it requires for effective action.

The aviation program of the Public Works makes provision for the expanding aircraft strength of the Navy. Before new units of aircraft can be joined to the fleet organization, they must be thoroughly trained for combat. With the large increase in aircraft and personnel, the existing aviation shore establishment, here and abroad, must be expanded to meet their needs.

We have listened and interrogated and investigated and inspected. The bill we have brought you is reduced in amount to the lowest figure we as Americans dare to drag it down as safe for security. There is no item of expenditure which anybody will discuss that has not had our fullest consideration, our best judgment, and the report is unanimously made. I, for one, will assume full responsibility for the astronomical figures it carries as completely necessary in order that we have the wherewith to meet and to back the will of the people who pay the bills to win the war.

I have already used more time than I intended to use, Mr. Chairman, and while there is much more I might say, I yield back my time, for I am sure it will be better used by those who will follow me.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLUMLEY. No; I will not yield. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Is it not necessary to at least have one Member on the floor for each billion dollars contained in an appropriation bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman does not state a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. COFFEE].

Mr. COFFEE. Mr. Chairman, it is a great privilege and a pleasure for me to serve as a member of the Committee on Appropriations subcommittee having to do with appropriations for the Navy Department. I had a few preconceived notions concerning the Navy and its personnel, prior to the inception of my service on this committee, which I am pleased to report were largely disabused. In other words, those preconceptions of the Navy Department which were slightly unfavorable to it, which I had erroneously entertained prior to the time that I was a member of the committee, were driven out of my mind by reason of my contact with the officers, enlisted men, and with my colleagues on the committee; and I am happy to report that my impression of the Navy Department is one of inspiration, something that would buoy up any patriotic Member of Congress or citizen of the United States. It would be an act of remissness on my part, were I to fail to pay what I believe to be a condign tribute to my colleagues on the committee. Particularly do I wish to pay tribute to the ranking member of the committee on the Republican side, and the chairman and ranking member on the Democratic side, all three of whom devoted tireless efforts and energy to the important work of the Navy subcommittee.

It would be a work of supererogation were I to attempt to characterize in adequate language and in feeling terms the great ability and devotion to duty of our Clerk, Mr. John Pugh, to whom fitting tribute was paid some time ago by the erudite and able Republican Member from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER]. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER] revealed by his work on the committee, a remarkable grasp and understanding of the recondite programs and ramified operations in the Navy Department. He gave unremittingly of his energy and of his limitless ability to the work of the committee in such a way as to merit the enthusiastic support of all Members of this Congress, were they there to see him work. The questions he propounded to the various witnesses who appeared before the committee were couched in such language and brought out such information as was of invaluable service to the committee, to the Congress, and to the country. The same can be said of the eminent chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. HARRY SHEPPARD], who expended unselfishly his time and versatile abilities day and night in the work of this committee. In fact, the committee worked throughout the recent recess in day-long sessions, while other Members were able, in some cases at least, to go home. They put consideration of their country and the needs of the Navy ahead of their own personal desires, and hence continued with those hearings, during the Easter vacation. The gentleman from California [Mr. SHEPPARD], the chairman of this subcommittee, deserves the support and the poignant thanks of all of us for the superb work he performed. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. ALBERT THOMAS], the ranking Democratic member of the committee, has earned the same thanks and support of the Congress and the country, as do the other two gentlemen. Rather than repeat what I have said I would merely add that the same encomiums apply to them. I am proud to be associated, likewise, with the brilliant, witty, and erudite gentleman from Vermont, CHARLIE PLUMLEY, and with the outstanding and gifted Republican Member from Indian, Mr. NOBLE JOHNSON, and also that agreeable young man from the State of Mississippi, Mr. JAMES WHITTEN, a new member of the committee, whose impressive and remarkable grasp of the law was revealed graphically by the questions which he propounded so well and intelligently during the deliberations of the committee.

I had not had the pleasure heretofore of knowing the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] very well, but after having associated with him on the committee, I entertain for him a profound respect, affection, and admiration. I might say parenthetically that I believe all of us are benefited by our association on these committees with our colleagues in Congress. We are not often vouchsafed an opportunity to become well acquainted with our colleagues, and unless and until we become associated with them intimately in committees, in that capacity, we may not discover that all of our colleagues on both sides of the aisle have attainments and possess attractive qualities of which we may not theretofore have been aware. We become, in a sense, sort of fraternity brothers or close associates and in my judgment it makes service in this Congress all the more agreeable and all the more to be valued.

The work of the Navy Subcommittee on Appropriations is of tremendous importance. Here we are about to appropriate the greatest sum of money ever provided in any appropriation in the history of the world for any navy department of any nation—$29,000,000,000. It seems such an astronomical sum as to baffle our imagination, as to shock our inner sensibilities. It is impossible for one to realize just how much is embraced within that sum. Nevertheless, here we are engaged in battle against the most formidable foes that were ever arrayed against a civilized nation in the history of the world. Here we are arrayed against Germany and Japan, whose male citizens have engrafted in them an appreciation and devotion to the military prowess that no other country has approached up to this time. We must be prepared, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER] so well said, to give generously and self-sacrificingly of the national treasure in order that we may decisively, shatteringly, and successfully cope with those tremendously formidable foes—Japan, Germany, and Italy.

It is a rather difficult thing to come before Congress with a bill such as this, because necessarily a good portion of the printed hearings do not embrace much of the most interesting and gripping testimony which took place before the committee. I should venture the assertion that at least half the total testimony which was received is unavoidably off the record and cannot be printed, because of the danger of apprising the enemy of secret information or suggestions or technical approaches which would not be proper and would be highly dangerous. Therefore all the greater responsibility rests upon the seven members of the Navy Subcommittee on Appropriations, and our colleagues are compelled, whether they like the practice or not, to repose prodigious confidence in us. As I asserted, the major portion or at least a substantial portion of the testimony cannot be made available to you in the form of printed hearings, and you have to accord to us confidence in our reasoned judgment as to whether each or all of these appropriations are justified. Likewise, we must have faith in the integrity of our Navy officers and the directing officials of the Navy.

The committee had no substantial differences. There were not any party feuds. There was spirited discussion among the members, but we agreed upon every portion of the bill as reported to the House. We were satisfied that the Navy, to the fullest extent possible, under the stress and strain of wartime, was endeavoring sedulously to secure a dollar's worth of value for a dollar spent, recognizing, of course, that in time of war when speed is the primary motive and consideration, one cannot always get full value for the money spent.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COFFEE. I yield.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I have understood that your committee made a very thorough investigation. This is the largest naval appropriation bill ever made in this country, and I guess anywhere in all the history of the world.

Mr. COFFEE. In all the history of the world.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Did I understand the gentleman to say that this report came from his committee unanimously?

Mr. COFFEE. That is right.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. How many members compose the committee?

Mr. COFFEE. Seven members; four Democrats and three Republicans.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. The subcommittee consists of seven members?

Mr. COFFEE. Seven members.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. And it unanimously reported this bill?

Mr. COFFEE. That is correct.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. The full committee has how many members?

Mr. COFFEE. I believe 43.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Did it have the unanimous support of the full committee?

Mr. COFFEE. It did indeed.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Those 43 members of the full Committee on Appropriations come from all sections of the country?

Mr. COFFEE. That is correct.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I think it is remarkable that this subcommittee and the full committee bring in by a unanimous report the greatest amount ever appropriated in the history of the world.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. COFFEE. I appreciate very much the statement just made by the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky, whom we all recognize as one of the leaders in thought in the House of Representatives. I think it is a tribute to the regard entertained for their colleagues by the Members of the House and for the integrity of the Navy itself that we were able to bring out a bill, unanimously reported by the subcommittee and the full committee, and that the Congress generally, in my judgment, will support this bill without any amendments being added to it. Our colleagues have to repose confidence in us because, as I mentioned awhile ago, we have to leave out a large portion of the testimony which they might have had if it were printed, not that we do not trust the Members of Congress, but that the printed hearings would become available to the country, and we know that regardless of the care with which we try to get at the spies and saboteurs from other countries, there are bound to be a few within our borders who would pick up and transmit to the enemy something of that nature.

I am deeply impressed with the officer personnel of the Navy.

The bureau heads of the Navy Department are men in whom we may repose the utmost confidence. Just to cite an example, Admiral Ben Moreell, one of the outstanding bureau heads of the Navy in charge of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, a man who has demonstrated time and time again a devotion to duty and a marvelous and inspiring grasp of the many and ramified problems in that field of the Navy, as the Secretary of the Navy has said, has been offered several times a job at $100,000 a year, which he promptly declined because he patriotically wanted to devote his great experience and skill to the people of the United States. We have comprising the various department heads men of similar character, such as Admiral Ross McIntyre, the head of the Medical Department of the Navy, who has an international reputation and who has done a masterly job in providing the medical and hospital facilities needed for the men of the Navy. If time permitted and your patience lasted, one could discuss in detail and pay fitting tribute to each of these admirals and men who are too often the butt of criticism on the part of unthinking or unknowing people. These officers would far rather be out on the scene of action, they would far rather be on the field of glory and the danger great, than to be here at home doing this work which is so necessary. Those of us who have talked with them know that, yet they are content to do this indispensable work, although it deprives them of the fame and glamor and publicity in the newspapers and press of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has again expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL].

OREGON CELEBRATES AFRICAN VICTORY

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Chairman, I am sure we all will gladly support this Navy bill. We must provide the finances for victory on every front.

Mr. Chairman, I am proud of my native State of Oregon. Today, pursuant to a proclamation issued by Gov. Earl Snell, the State of Oregon is holding a celebration, rejoicing over our all-out victory on the African front. Arrangements are made so that the war activities will not be required to close down or be interfered with by Oregon's celebration. Governor Snell issued the following proclamation:

I, Earl Snell, Governor of the State of Oregon, do hereby designate and set aside Wednesday, the 19th day of May 1943, as African Victory Day—as an occasion on which the people of this State will celebrate the redemption of the continent of Africa—the first continent reclaimed from our enemies.

The occupation of northwest Africa was an American program. The command of the African campaign was vested in our General Eisenhower. America's ground, aerial, and naval forces played a spectacular and vital part in the final battle of Tunisia.

Britain has rung its church bells and rejoiced throughout the land over the liberation; Russia and China have rejoiced. It is improper for America to leave to its comrades in arms the observance of the first decisive and absolute victory of the Second World War.

It is my hope that on the 19th of May every community in Oregon will join in this observance, in every way that it can be managed without interference with the war effort. And Oregon invites the States of the Union to join with her in celebration of the victory of our armed forces and the accomplishments of our home front.

On from Africa to the redemption of Europe and Asia!

EARL SNELL,
Governor, State of Oregon.

In issuing this proclamation Governor Snell said:

Freedom-loving people throughout the world are rejoicing over the decisive allied victory in north Africa. American Army, air, and naval forces made notable and decisive contributions to the success of the campaign. It is occasion for rejoicing and celebration. We must not detract from our all-out war effort. Further, we have a long and difficult road yet to travel to final and conclusive victory, but let us not leave the observance of this notable victory alone to the boys of our armed forces. Indeed it is an occasion for prayer and thanksgiving.

Mr. Chairman, from time to time I have had the honor and distinction of calling to the attention of the Members of the House the all-out war effort that has been made by the people of my State. I am certain that no State in the Union has evidenced more patriotic fervor or a more effective program in assisting in the prosecution of the war than have the people of my State. As we all know, in the construction of ships Oregon has led the Nation. The Kaiser yards have established the outstanding record of completing a Liberty ship in 8 days and a half. We have had no labor troubles. We have worked the clock around—men and women alike—bending their energies to the production of equipment necessary to bring success to our war effort. I doubt not that many of the ships, much of the equipment, and many of the airplanes which brought destruction to our enemies in Africa and success to our Army, were produced in the Northwest. The great hydroelectric plants on the Columbia River have been in operation day and night, furnishing the hydroelectric power for the production of aluminum and the turning of the wheels in the shipyards and other plants in making possible air superiority for the Allies, not only on the African front but on the European Continent as well.

Mr. Chairman, I join with my fellow citizens in Oregon in the celebration of this outstanding victory we have achieved on the African front, and our humble acknowledgment to Almighty God that He has willed that victory might be ours.

I trust that our military authorities and those who have the direction of the strategy of the campaigns will appreciate the necessity and the importance of concentrating our efforts upon an all-out offense against the cruel and dastardly Japanese, who are now digging in on the thousands of conquered islands and the other subjugated territory which they have seized, stretching from Australia to the Aleutians. We must assume the offensive in this great theater of war operations—the Pacific—and bring the war to the Japanese in their homeland. If we play a waiting game and relegate the Japanese conflict to second place and permit the resourceful and crafty Japanese to increase their resources and strength, marshal their assets in the conquered territories, and provide air bases, military outposts, and war installations and industries for future activities against us, we will later pay a fearful price for our complacency. Every hour we wait means the loss of additional American lives and the expenditure of millions of American dollars. May we not hope that the conferences now being held in Washington between our President and his staff and the Prime Minister of Great Britain and other high British officials may result in a plan to place the Japanese conflict of equal importance with the European battle front, requiring an all-out concentration of the strength of the Allies for immediate operation.

Mr. Chairman, we were all inspired today, I am sure, by the forceful historic address of the Prime Minister at the joint session just concluded, and the assurances and forthright promise he gave us that our British allies in this great struggle will stand by our side to the end in an all-out offensive against Japan until that barbarous nation is crushed to earth and her military establishments lie in ashes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE].

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] is unavoidably out of town today. He has asked me to read a statement in his behalf because of his personal interest in this particular measure. As you know, the gentleman from Georgia has the enviable record of having served on the House Legislative Committee on Naval Affairs during World War No. 1, and has served on that committee continuously since that time, and since 1930 has been chairman of the committee. He commands the respect and admiration of every Member of this Congress, I am sure. So, Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to read the statement which the gentleman from Georgia handed to me, which he prepared prior to his departure.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I read as follows:

Mr. Chairman, I shall be constrained to be absent when the House undertakes consideration of the 1944 naval appropriation bill. I have asked my colleague, Mr. COLE, a minority member of the Naval Affairs Committee, to express my approval of the measure that has been reported.

Owing to the courtesy of Chairman SHEPPARD, in charge of the bill, I have had an opportunity to examine both the original draft and the draft which the Committee on Appropriations has presented to the House, and it is my judgment that it is a generally good measure, well balanced, and thoroughly justified by the programs already legislatively approved.

Ships and airplanes control the measure basically, and the part pertaining to ships follows authorizations considered by the Naval Affairs Committee and which the House has approved. With respect to airplanes, the Naval Affairs Committee has lifted the ceiling upon the number of airplanes with which the Navy might be provided, for the duration of the war. The appropriation bill in the two respects indicated, therefore, is based upon proper legislative authorization.

The provision in the bill for enlisted personnel has been studied by the Naval Affairs Committee, at the instance of Chairman SHEPPARD, because he felt that by reason of the considerable increase the Department is advocating he would feel better about it and be in a better position if he had the views of the Naval Affairs Committee as to the matter.

The Naval Affairs Committee has had a hearing upon the matter, and we are thoroughly in accord with the number for which the bill provides.

I agree absolutely with the committee's report that the Navy's job ahead is a tremendous one, and that the Navy must be provided with every essential to make its accomplishment less difficult and absolutely sure and decisive. The cost is large, but so are the stakes, and, whatever the costs, we are out to win and we are going to win.

I wish to compliment Mr. SHEPPARD for the masterly way in which he has handled this measure and the 1943 supplemental naval appropriation bill, which he sponsored a few weeks ago. It is a new responsibility that has fallen upon him and the way he has discharged it is deserving of the highest commendation.

Mr. SHEPPARD has seen fit to counsel with me and the members of my committee, and in that way a better product is certain to ensue. We must have teamwork in providing for the war effort and I can assure the House that there never has been better teamwork between the Naval Affairs Committee and the Naval Subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations than presently prevails. I might say that it would be a distinct improvement in the interest of better legislation and congressional procedure if there were more of that kind of cooperation.

I trust that the House will give approval to the bill presented by Mr. SHEPPARD, which I hope will be supported by the members of the Naval Affairs Committee.

My judgment is that we shall reap handsome dividends not far hence from the legislation and appropriations we have been providing.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York yields back 5 minutes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, the lack of controversy which is apparent in the House on this appropriation bill of such a tremendous figure, twenty-nine and one-half billions, to my mind clearly demonstrates the unity of purpose we have in this country. It further substantiates the belief which I have found exists not because the Appropriations Subcommittee on Naval Affairs has found fit to recommend it to you, not because it has been brought to you by the whole committee, but because of the confidence the people of this country have in those who are leading us in our war efforts. The founding fathers of our country saw the advantages and wisdom of having the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of War, and the Commander in Chief selected from people in civil life.

They did that believing that the armed forces would be kept separate from the leadership of our country in a political or officeholding capacity. The civilian heads of these Departments have wisely seen fit then to leave the operation of the Navy and the War Department to the trained officers in those respective Departments who have the necessary training and experience to qualify as professional military men.

We on this committee have followed the same course.

Today as we come to you with this appropriation bill we are here as a subcommittee, not saying to you that we know that this money is necessary, but we come to you saying that we have had before us the trained military leaders as in the Navy Department who have charge, who have the experience, and who of necessity must lay the plans and carry on the operation of the plans for the conduct of this war. It may be that we should determine or designate this bill not as the Navy appropriation bill but as the cost-of-transport bill, the cost of transporting troops and supplies, the cost of defending our coast line during this war, and the cost of getting together the various elements that are necessary for the successful prosecution of the war and having them at the proper place at the proper time. That is the kind of bill we have brought here.

This morning you heard the Prime Minister of Great Britain say to you that we were getting ahead so far as preparation and the raising of a sufficient army is concerned, you heard him say we were getting ahead just as fast as we need to so far as the manufacture of munitions of war are concerned, but he further said any man who has knowledge of the matter will tell you that the big problem today is that of transportation, that of getting these armies together with ample machines of war and supplies to whip the enemy on the ground where we must wage the battles.

As stated the civilian heads of the Army and Navy have shown, I am glad to say, the good judgment of leaving the planning and running of this war in the hands of those expert officers who are trained and versed in the preparation and prosecution of the war. I take that credit for this committee because we too have followed that policy. We have diligently investigated each application for funds. We have required the proper officers of the Navy to justify the appropriations, much of the justification of necessity being off the record, but in each instance we have come back to the planning of the high naval officers to whom in the final analysis we must look for the proper preparation and handling of the Navy's part of this war.

Many items look unduly large in this appropriation bill. Frankly the amount of money involved passes human understanding. In that connection let me add, however, that the work of our Navy, the seven seas it must patrol, the number of troops it must transport and supply to the four corners of the globe, the miles of shoreline it must patrol is also so large as to practically be beyond human comprehension. Yet we must be prepared. We must have enough ships, enough ordnance, enough planes, enough men properly trained to beat the enemy to the punch on many fronts. God knows that we cannot risk having too little and being too late.

When this war is over, in all probability, we will ask ourselves how it was that we could ever have thought it necessary to amass the amount of munitions, planes, ships, and other materials as we will then have on hand. But Mr. Chairman, we cannot and must not raise that question at this time other than to be sure that we do not have more than enough to meet the planning of our admirals and our generals together with our allies to whom we must look for the winning of the war.

While we have worked hard, my association with the members of the Subcommittee on Naval Appropriations has been most pleasant. I, together with the distinguished Member from Washington [Mr. COFFEE], constitute the new members of the subcommittee. Of necessity we have had to spend much time in learning our work and in acquainting ourselves with the Navy set-up, its organization and operation. I believe I have learned much and give due credit to the senior members of the committee, the chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. SHEPPARD], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMAS], and to the minority, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER], the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY], and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON], who have been most helpful to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. COFFEE] and myself in our attempt to master this subject and work. It was a privilege to remain here during the Easter recess to expedite this work, if by so doing we could help a little more in this time of stress.

I sincerely hope that the time will soon come when the membership of this House will want to know how it could have appropriated this huge sum for the defense of our Nation and to carry on this war. For when that time comes it will mean that the war is over and we are once again turning our mind to peaceful pursuits. In the meantime we must of necessity supply every ship, every gun, every trained member of the Navy, every plane, and ample supplies of provisions and medical supplies to protect those men as may be necessary to win the war. Unless we do that we have been derelict in our duty. It is a pleasure for me to note that every Member of this House subscribes to that same view.

Mr. KNUTSON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Minnesota rise?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to call attention to the fact that this bill carries nearly $30,000,000,000 and there are only seven Democrats on the floor. I shall not make the point of no quorum because that is incumbent upon the majority. I am merely making that observation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, we are considering this afternoon a bill that provides for an expenditure of more than $29,000,000,000, the biggest appropriation bill ever presented to a Congress. It is all to be expended under the authority of the Navy Department, and since it is for the prosecution of the war, even though it is a tremendous sum, there will be no objection on either side of the aisle so long as the funds are spent judiciously. The first and paramount thing to be considered is that everything be done to bring this war to a successful conclusion at the earliest possible date and with the least possible loss of life.

Mr. Chairman, I was interested in the statement of the gentleman from Texas, who spoke a few moments ago, that in his judgment we should scrutinize every item of expenditure of public funds that does not contribute to the prosecution of this war. Following his statement, I believe it might be worth while to call your attention to a situation that I do not think is necessary or commendable. I have just observed in reading a press report with regard to the International Food Conference being held at Hot Springs, Va., that one of our Government departments has approved a permit calling for the delivery of 2,400 pints of liquor to be used at that conference. The report further states that each delegate and attaché is allowed in addition thereto to bring in at least 1 gallon of liquor on his own account. Personally, I do not think it should be necessary for a group of representatives, meeting in the United States for the purpose of considering the question of providing food for the people in various parts of the world, to be furnished a supply of intoxicating liquor. I just do not see how the furnishing and the use of liquor will contribute in attempting to bring about a solution of such an important problem.

Mr. Chairman, I observe that we do have some members of the Appropriations Committee on the floor, some of whom are in charge of this measure. I would like to know if someone who has the information can tell me whether or not the funds used to buy the liquor really comes from the Federal Treasury; and if so, from what particular fund? I ask this question for two reasons: First, because the press says that the request for permit to provide the liquor for the conference was by an official from the office of the Secretary of State; second, because, on other occasions, I have questioned the necessity of providing funds for our representatives abroad in the name of representation and entertainment. Only a few weeks ago I questioned an item in an appropriation bill of approximately $400,000 that was to be used, according to the report in the bill, for representation abroad.

Mr. STEFAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I am glad to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska, a member of the Appropriations Committee of the House.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the question of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] regarding information as to the mechanics in which whisky is purchased by our State Department for the activities at the food conference in Hot Springs, Va., I will state for the RECORD and in order to clarify the situation that the request for this liquor was made by the Department of State solely for the purpose of the entertainment of the approximately 500 delegates participating in the conference. I am assured that none of this liquor will go to any individual delegate but will be used entirely for the formal and official entertainments such as the official banquets for these delegates.

The gentleman is inquiring for information as to just where this money for the purchase of the 2,400 pints of whisky for the Hot Springs conference is coming from. For his information and for the information of the House, I will state that I am officially informed that this money comes from the $7,000,000 State Department emergency fund which is under the control of the President. It does not come from the President's discretionary fund or from lend-lease, but from the $7,000,000 emergency fund contained in the regular appropriation for the regular functions of the Department of State.

I want to repeat again that so far as the State Department is concerned and because of the laws of Virginia, the Department of State made the formal request from the officials of Virginia and received a courteous reply and is receiving courteous cooperation. Without giving my personal approval of these activities, but merely for the sake of giving official information, I want to repeat again that I am assured that none of this liquor is to go to any individual but to be used exclusively for the formal and official entertainments and banquets which are customarily held in connection with such conferences. I agree that we should eliminate funds for liquor. Sobriety is so important now.

I am informed that foreigners expect to have liquor served at these official functions and that they do serve liquor at similar functions in foreign countries, and the Department of State is merely reciprocating in order to meet the usual foreign customs which are carried out at these official gatherings.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Not at this time.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I want to know whether they drink it out of a glass or a bottle.

Mr. REES of Kansas. This connects up pretty well with the representation fund that we discussed a while ago.

Mr. STEFAN. The gentleman knows that I have fought against a large representation fund and that we did secure some cut in the appropriation for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman. Yes, I do know about the effort the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN] has made to cut these funds. I commend him for it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The gentleman thoroughly appreciates the fact that there is not a dime in this bill for what he is discussing, does he not?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I am sure that is correct, but we did have before this House a few weeks ago an appropriation bill carrying such an item.

Mr. SHEPPARD. No; not in this bill.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I had members of the Appropriations Committee before me at that time and I called attention to the question of "representation" funds on the floor of the House at that time, but I could not get a satisfactory answer as to how and where these so-called representation funds were spent. I thought now that some of the members of the Appropriations Committee are present, that they might explain if they have the information whether or not any of the money spent for the liquor I mentioned was so-called representation money, to which I directed the attention of the committee some weeks ago. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN] has furnished the information.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The gentleman should know now that there is no money in the measure before us for the uses to which the gentleman has reference. That is definite.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I understand there are no such funds in this bill before us. I simply presented the matter because of the discussion by a member of the committee on the general question of making sure that our Government should be careful about the expenditure of funds not required for the prosecution of the war. Since I had some of the members of the Appropriations Committee before me, I thought they might be able to supply the information.

And now, Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the statement by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN], a member of the Appropriations Committee, that this money comes from the $7,000,000 State Department emergency fund under the control of the President. Mr. Chairman, I realize that there are instances where the problems affecting international policies may not be discussed in public but I do not understand why a meeting that is purported to be held for the purpose of discussing the food problems of the world should be held in secret. Even if the public, generally, are not admitted I do feel that the least that could be done would be to permit Members of Congress, who are, after all, representatives of the people, to sit in on the conference and have first-hand information. I think the people of this country are entitled to that consideration and should have it because such problems, insofar as this country is concerned, will finally need to come to Congress for consideration. As I have said before, I do not believe any good reason or justification has thus far been given why representatives of the press should be barred from this meeting. If there are military secrets involved: of course, that is different but nothing of the kind, so far, has been suggested. It appears, Mr. Chairman, that John Barleycorn is admitted to the conference but not John Q. Public.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will this bill be read for amendment; and if it is read for amendment, will there be opportunity for the offering of pro forma amendments under the 5-minute rule?

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be read for amendment.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I cannot tell. I thought that was right, but I did not know.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is being considered under the general rules of the House and will be read for amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

WE FOLLOW AN UNSOUND FISCAL POLICY

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, one of the most impressive statements made by any member of the subcommittee is the one made by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY] in which, I believe, he stated he was in position to assume full responsibility, insofar as he is individually concerned, for the amount appropriated in this bill, the said appropriations to be used for the successful prosecution and winning of the war.

This bill calls for machinery, equipment, and supplies and other objectives against which none of us protest, and for all of which we agree. But there is another statement I wish to make in connection with the bill, and that is this, that so far as I am personally concerned I am in position to assume full responsibility as a Member of this House for whatever steps are necessary to be taken toward soundly financing this $29,500,000,000 and the other billions of dollars which we have appropriated and which we shall appropriate, and for the successful prosecution of the war. And this job I do not believe we have as frankly approached as have we for the appropriations.

The Prime Minister of the British Empire addressed us today. The most impressive thing he said to me, in effect, was that it is important to prosecute this war quickly and bring it to a successful conclusion, because in the game of war or a long fight certain things might develop which might create complications and bring about defeat, or at least make it supremely more difficult to win.

Mr. Chairman, we are playing with fire. We are playing with inflationary financing when we proceed to make appropriations of this type with no more than 25 or 30 Members on the floor of this House, Republicans and Democrats combined; and this, to me, is not partisan in the least, when I say we appear to be unconcerned about the cost of these objectives upon which we agree.

I wish to point out that during the year 1940 the gross savings of the people were approximately $16,100,000,000; in 1941, $25,000,000,000; in 1942, $38,900,000,000; and for the first quarter of 1943, $11,800,000,000, after paying the largest tax bill in our history; and the most significant feature or pattern of savings during the first quarter of 1943, and as for prior quarters, was the unusually high proportion of income that the public continues to put into current and demand deposits.

If such funds continue to grow at the present rate, the control over the inflationary tendency will become increasingly difficult. It may become impossible. I am going back now to what the Prime Minister said—if we let inflation take hold of this country, we will have economic, social, political, and industrial chaos. That is the point I want to make. Such a dislocation could cause defeat for our cause.

Mr. Chairman, it is my firm opinion that this Congress is not doing its duty with reference to the prevention of the operation of these inflationary forces, which, if permitted to continue to run, can bring about the disaster to which the Prime Minister of Great Britain referred this morning.

Permit me to say, Mr. Chairman, that Britain finances well; Britain finances soundly; Britain has no fear about financial chaos flowing from inflationary forces. And this is true because Britain, in her wide experience extending over centuries knows how to finance wars and at the same time preserve her internal economy. For instance, let me remind you that in 1933 the gross debt of Britain was $33,300,000,000; and as Hitler rose to power and England prepared for the great contest she well knew was ahead she had financed so soundly that in 1939 her gross debt amounted to only $36,800,000,000. But look at our situation, Mr. Chairman. Our Federal funded debt rapidly moves upward. May 7 it was $135,000,000,000 compared to $61,000,000,000 November 3, 1941, only a few days before our declaration of war. Present schedule calls for this debt to top $210,000,000,000 June 30, 1944. Some now advocate a cut-back in war production and resumption of manufacture of certain articles for civilian economy. Two elements may alter all this: First, a shorter war in Europe, and, second, the trek of international spokesmen to Washington seeking financial support for their future plans of world-wide scope.

United Kingdom—British—gross debt: March 31, 1939, Britain's debt was $36,000,000,000. After approximately 3½ years of war this debt had advanced to only $67,000,000,000—an increase of $31,000,000,000—while our Government debt, direct and guaranteed, advanced $74,500,000,000 the first 18 months we were in war. It is evident to any student of our fiscal policy and planned economy that England is doing a grander job at financing her war than we are. There is no need for confusion or misunderstanding about the miseries in which we are involved as related to price ceilings, rationing, wage levels, coal strikes, black markets, and other directly related factors. We suffer the consequences of our deliberate actions as a people, as a Congress, as an administration. If we are to pursue our present course, our miseries will increase.

We are following a highly destructive fiscal policy these days. To the successful prosecution of the war and the preservation of our enterprise system all that I have in material goods is available to the Government upon call. I make no mental or other reservation. I have never been, nor am I now, one of those who deems it unnecessary to count the cost of the attainment of the objectives—which objectives we all agree are desirable.

In my humble opinion we, as an administration, as a Congress, and as a people, proceed along disastrous economic lines. Here, I specifically refer to the manner in which we conduct our fiscal affairs.

We are participating in too much inflationary financing. We are overlooking the absolute necessity of our having fiscal stability if we are to win the war and preserve our enterprise system through the post-war storms. We know that we are not preventing inflation. We know that we follow a course which promotes inflationary forces with their distorting effects on our price and wage structures. In doing this we know that we promote social and political instability. We further know that we prepare the way for a break-down in our economy in the post-war period; that we make it more and more impossible for long-term commitments to be made, all of which will be so necessary if our private enterprise system is to give employment to the men and women when they return from the war fronts. We are not unacquainted with the fact that uncertainty as to taxes, the financing policy of Government, the instability of the buying power of the dollar are all great and powerful deterrents to investment and the promotion generally of the private-enterprise system.

Shall we further travel the road toward Government debt repudiation? Shall we further finance Government expenditures through commercial bank inflation?

Just why we follow such policies I am unable to specifically answer. Perhaps there is too much politics in the approach. But, this whole question is an issue. On one side we have millions of people who support the present policy, and on the other side we have millions of people who seriously question even if they do not aggressively oppose, the policy we now follow. In due course we shall have to settle the issue and solve the problem, but when this will occur I am unable to say.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVAL ESTABLISHMENT

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY

Miscellaneous expenses

For traveling expenses of civilian employees, including travel of dependents of employees to and from navy yards or stations outside the continental limits of the United States; expenses of attendance, at home and abroad, upon meetings of technical, professional, scientific, and other similar organizations when, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy (hereafter in this act referred to as the Secretary), such attendance would be of benefit in the conduct of the work of the Navy Department; physical examinations by civilian physicians and in other than naval hospitals of civilian employees engaged in hazardous occupations; expenses of courts and boards; purchase of law and reference books; expenses of prisoners and prisons; clerical assistance; witnesses' fees and traveling expenses; promoting accident prevention and safety in shore establishments of the Navy, to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary; newspapers and periodicals for the naval service; all advertising of the Navy Department and its bureaus (except advertising for recruits for the Bureau of Naval Personnel); costs of suits; maintenance of attachés and others abroad, including office rental and pay of employees, and not to exceed $900 for any one person for allowances for living quarters, including heat, fuel, and light, as authorized by the act approved June 26, 1930 (5 U. S. C. 118a); contingencies for the Director of Naval Intelligence, to be expended in his discretion, not to exceed $2,000; collection and classification of information pertaining to Naval Intelligence, and pertaining to the legal, physical, and engineering characteristics of naval facilities provided for the conduct of the war, including, for such latter purpose, personal services at the seat of government or elsewhere; telephone, telegraph, and teletype rentals and tolls (including not to exceed $300 for extension telephones between the telephone switchboards at the official stations of naval officials and the living quarters of such officials), telegrams, radiograms, and cablegrams for the Navy Department and the naval service; postage, foreign and domestic, and post-office box rentals; microphotographic services; necessary expenses for interned persons and prisoners of war under the jurisdiction of the Navy Department, including funeral expenses for such interned persons or prisoners of war as may die while under such jurisdiction; payment of claims for damages as provided in the act approved July 11, 1919 (34 U. S. C. 600); necessary expenses for maintenance and operation of a security inspection force (including personal services at the seat of government or elsewhere, by contract or otherwise, without regard to section 3709, Revised Statutes, or the civil service or classification laws); and other necessary and incidental expenses; in all, $32,423,605, of which $200,000 shall be immediately available.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOFFMAN: On page 4, line 2, strike out "$200,000" and insert "$250,000."

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, no Member of this body, so far as I know, is opposed to this bill. Perhaps that is the reason why the time for debate was limited and why some of us were unable to get time without offering these various amendments.

In view of the fact that the Navy Department and the War Department and four other departments of the Government have seen fit, within the last few days to send up to the Congress a joint protest against the consideration or the enactment of the Smith-Connally bill as reported out by the Committee on Military Affairs, it would seem that some attention should be paid to the method of the expenditure of the money we appropriate, to the surrender of our Army and Navy politicians—not the fighting men—to the unions.

Here is a bill for $29,500,000,000. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [MR. DITTER] said that it does not make very much difference what the bill calls for. Someone on the minority side said you could transpose the figures and make it $92,000,000,000 instead of $29,000,000,000, and if that move were made by the subcommittee at the request of the Navy Department, it could be put through just as quickly as if it provided $29,000,000,000. That I think is true. Let us pause to consider, in connection with the bill, that just a few hours ago this Chamber was packed. Some of us—and I happen to be one—were unable to get seats on the floor.

I tried to get from the Doorkeeper one of these step seats so I could get members of my family into the gallery. I got one ticket but I could not get another. Even if they wanted to sit on the floor in the gallery I could not get one. I do not know where all those seats went. I do not know why it is that a Member of Congress cannot get at least one or two members of his own family in the gallery, especially when he has members serving in the armed forces.

When I came back someone said, "Now don't be afraid to go in, the chairs and the carpet are still on the floor;" and they were. I was not surprised, because I did not think they were going to get that part of the country's resources out from under the Representatives. But I know this—I will take that back, I do not know this—I was told here that this bill carried more in one appropriation than Great Britain had appropriated in a year. If I am wrong, I will be glad to have the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of the bill tell me, because we do not want erroneous statements to go in the RECORD. Am I right or wrong?

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the information I have, it does exceed the British budget.

Mr. HOFFMAN. It does?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I am not finding any fault with that. Apparently we are to fight this war and win it, and when it is over we are to hold the bag.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I might say that the official figures which are available in the Congressional Library show that during the first 3½ years of the war the United Kingdom increased its debt $31,000,000,000 and during the first 18 months that we were engaged in this war we increased our debt about $72,000,000,000.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I thank the gentleman. No one finds any fault with the English statesman——

Mr. CRAWFORD. Not at all.

Mr. HOFFMAN. And the Prince and the Princess, or the Duke and Duchess, or whatever you call them, coming over here, but I do wish that when they travel up from their islands down in the southern sea, where they are doing whatever they are doing, I do wish they would come on their own boats and pay their own expenses, and not have my farmers work from the coming up of the sun to the going down of the sun to pay those expenses. There is altogether too much traveling by the higher-ups, so-called.

I wish when you buy 2,400 pints of liquor—the gentleman says they do not drink it individually—the cost did not come out of United States taxpayers. I never before heard of collective drinking of hard liquor. I do not see how it can be done unless you put four or five straws in a tub or a trough and go at it. The gentleman who made that statement about how the liquor is paid for is on the floor. Is it not a fact that that liquor was paid for by the tax money that comes out of the citizens of the United States?

Mr. STEFAN. Is the gentleman addressing his remarks to me?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes, the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. In reply to the gentleman, I took the floor in answer to a question of the gentleman from Kansas merely to explain where the money came from.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I want the gentleman to answer my question.

Mr. STEFAN. In order to answer the question the gentleman has propounded to me now, and that is——

Mr. HOFFMAN. Is not the money for that coming from the citizens of the United States?

Mr. STEFAN. The money does come from the taxpayers, of course. The bill or appropriation was in the State Department supply bill. You all voted for it because no one could know what the special fund was to be used for.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Oh, now, did I?

Mr. STEFAN. Yes. The bill passed the House of Representatives a few months ago.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Just a minute.

Mr. STEFAN. Let me answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I am voting against blank checks to the President and I intend to vote against them hereafter and I do not intend to vote money to buy liquor for anyone as a matter of entertainment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am very sorry that this question of the purchase of liquor for an official conference has come up in the debate on a naval appropriation bill which has nothing to do with the appropriation from which funds were taken for the purchase of the beverage under discussion.

I merely took the floor in answer to a question propounded to me by the gentleman from Kansas, who asked where the money for this beverage came from. I believe my previous statement answers that question. We had no way of knowing to what use the special funds were to be put. Our people do not condone the purchase of liquor from public funds and I agree with them.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEFAN. Yes.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I appreciate the fact that no such item is contained in this bill. I rose for the purpose of securing the information about which I inquired. I thought I had before me members of the committee that would know the answer, and I got the answer.

Mr. STEFAN. Does the gentleman agree with me that I have consistently endeavored to cut down representation allowances? I am not defending this item. I am merely giving official information.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I know the gentleman, who is one of the distinguished Members of this House, has consistently demanded that items for this purpose be materially reduced. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN] does not approve such things, and he is sincere about it.

Mr. STEFAN. Of course not. I have fought against it consistently. We must have sobriety in the conduct of the war. Sobriety is necessary now more than ever before.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I do not intend to use 5 minutes. I ask this time for the purpose of asking the chairman of the subcommittee a question.

I wonder if you can tell me how much money the Navy Department has in its possession now that they have secured under the renegotiation-of-contracts program?

Mr. SHEPPARD. At the end of March 1943 price reductions and cost refunds arranged by the Navy Price Adjustment Board amounted to more than $950,000,000.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. My real purpose in asking the question was to inquire for what purpose that money can be spent. Is there any restriction on it at all?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That portion representing cost refunds goes back into the Federal Treasury.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. That is what I wanted to clear up. I have had information from different departments in direct conflict. Some say it remains under the control of the Navy and others say it goes into the Public Treasury.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is my understanding that it goes back to the Treasury into "Miscellaneous receipts."

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. And they cannot spend that without an appropriation act on the part of the Congress?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is my understanding.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I thank the gentleman and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BUSBEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last five words.

I was extremely interested in the discussion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] when he pointed out to this Congress that 2,400 pints of liquor are being purchased for the Food Conference at Hot Springs, Va., where newspapermen and Members of Congress are barred.

It was not very long ago that the new Members of this Congress were entertained at the White House by the President. I think those new Members really have a "kick" coming. They bought, in addition to the 1 gallon each they are permitted to bring in, 2,400 pints of liquor for this Food Conference, from which we are barred, as well as the newspapermen, but all the freshmen Members of this Congress received when they were entertained at the White House was beer and pretzels. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last six words.

Mr. Chairman, during the debate, for purpose of information, I addressed one or two brief questions to the chairman of the subcommittee, the able and distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. SHEPPARD]. I think perhaps if I have any criticism of our national defense policy in the past—and I have often so expressed myself—it has been that we have not maintained the size Navy we should have maintained in peacetime. The same applies to our Regular Army. There have been many references made in the speeches to the fact that there has been such a limited membership on the floor this afternoon. There will be a time in the not too distant future when there will be a great deal of attention paid to the situation which will confront us.

I will vote for this appropriation. I do not think there is a Member of this House who is not willing to vote every dollar of money that is necessary for the defense of our country. My own personal feeling is that if it is necessary to use whatever I have in the way of dollars or property or whatever I may have, for the defense of this country, that is the perfectly proper thing. I think all of us feel that way. But I do want to call to your attention the fact that since July 1, 1940, we have appropriated for national defense, or authorized, between two hundred and forty-five and two hundred and fifty billion dollars. That does not include this appropriation, nor does it include the sum of $70,000,000,000, approximately, that will be asked for in the appropriation for the Army.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'HARA. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Can the gentleman inform us whether or not this $30,000,000,000 and the approximately $70,000,000,000 in the military item that is coming through roughly constitutes the $97,000,000,000 covered in the Budget for the coming fiscal year? Are those the two principal items?

Mr. O'HARA. I cannot tell the gentleman. I have no way of knowing. Perhaps the gentleman knows, but I do not.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I cannot answer that question, but I think perhaps the chairman of our subcommittee may tell us.

Mr. O'HARA. Does the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee know whether the $30,000,000,000 which are included in this bill and the approximately $70,000,000,000 being requested for the Army have been included in the Budget?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Army estimates have not come in yet.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I submit the question in this way: May we assume that this $30,000,000,000 in round figures is the naval portion of the Budget message as of January last for the coming fiscal year, substantially?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes; substantially. That is true.

Mr. STEFAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'HARA. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. I believe the gentleman is perhaps mistaken. I think the $29,500,000,000 included in this appropriation bill is included in the approximate total of $245,000,000,000 of over-all war appropriations and authorizations up to this time.

Mr. O'HARA. The gentleman probably is correct. I may have been misinformed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The pro forma amendments were withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINGENT, NAVY

For all emergencies and extraordinary expenses, exclusive of personal services, in the Navy Department or any of its subordinate bureaus or offices at the seat of government, arising at home or abroad, but impossible to be anticipated or classified, to be expended on the approval and authority of the Secretary, and for such purposes as he may deem proper, and his determination thereon shall be final and conclusive upon the accounting officers of the Government, and for examination of estimates for appropriations and of naval activities in the field for any branch of the naval service, $185,000.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOFFMAN: On page 4, line 14, strike out "$185,000" and insert "$190,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 5 minutes in support of his amendment.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN], who answered the question as to where that money came from to buy the 2,400 pints of liquor, took 5 minutes to answer that question, and the substance of his answer, as I got it, was that it was taxpayers' money. That was all I wanted to know. In brief, we are spending that money because the State Department is doing business as usual, is using liquor for the entertainment of foreigners who come asking for lend-lease money, and it was customary before, when we had entertainments for these foreign guests, to furnish liquor. Very well; but I do not believe in it.

The gentleman also said that I voted for the expenditure of this money to buy this liquor. If it was in a defense bill, then I did vote for it, but I did not know it was to be used to purchase liquor. It shows how impossible it is for a man to protect the taxpayers' money while new dealers are handling it. It shows the folly—the viciousness, may I put it that way—of giving blank checks to the President, to the executive department, or to any department, unless we try to safeguard it to the best of our ability; and even when we try we do not succeed because they do not follow our orders. Witness the expenditure of some $70,000,000 by the War Department when we told them to construct the Pentagon Building at a cost of not more than $35,000,000.

I knowingly would not vote one red cent to the State Department or to any other department to purchase liquor when our boys over in the South Pacific are without the things they need, the food, or the medicinal supplies. Let them go back home and get something to drink. That is my answer to those from foreign lands who want liquor.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. No; I cannot. I know it is delightful to hear the gentleman, but I want to point out something else, which is this: The Navy has sent up here this request that Congress should vote down this Connally-Smith bill, which has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

I remember distinctly that more than 3 years ago—in October of 1939—the Navy Department had ordered castings that they wanted for the navy yard in Philadelphia. These castings were in Detroit and were ready for delivery, but for a period of 41 days the C. I. O. refused to permit the Navy of the United States to send in its trucks and take out its own materials which were needed and which were going into defense ships and planes.

At that time, Acting Secretary of the Navy Edison said over his signature in a letter sent up to the committee that the Navy Department was not doing anything to end that practice.

That was the situation 2 years and more ago, yet today the Navy comes along and asks for $29,500,000,000, and also asks that we do not oppose activities of the unions which are costing unnecessary millions when we try to get munitions of war.

I ask you if it is not time we passed some legislation which cut the cost of construction of all our munitions of war? Do they not realize that, if we take $29,000,000,000 and spend it all on Sunday, we get but half as much material for the money? If it is spent on Saturday, you get just two-thirds of the material in those industries which are on a 35-hour week, as they are in the mines; that in producing materials over and above the 35 hours you get just two-thirds as much material.

Can you not figure it out and yet here come these six departments of the Government and say to the Congress, when they themselves have said time and time again that their construction was being held up, they come in now and tell us they must not adopt any of this legislation which has been favorably, yes unanimously, reported out by the Committee on Military Affairs. What is the matter with them? Are they under the thumb of the administration politicians? Have they anything in mind at all looking toward saving money to purchase more and more war materials to carry on the war? Or do they want that money to go into the union treasury?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. Chairman, my opposition is not germane and only develops from the fact that none of the discussion with reference to this particular matter is or has been germane to the bill that we are now undertaking to pass.

A controversy arose here originating in a discussion that was not germane, subject to a point of order had one been made, when certain questions were asked, and out of which has grown all of this much ado about nothing, having nothing to do with this bill.

I am neither for nor against this pending amendment.

I think the gentleman from Nebraska in undertaking to defend his subcommittee on State and Justice and having to do with the State Department appropriation bill properly and fully explained that it was impossible when the committee acted upon a certain blank-check method, so-called, to tell where that identic money appropriated for diplomatic and representation purposes was going to be spent, was going, or to whom it was going. So much for that; it was a complete statement.

So much for that, I say, but here is another thing, and while I am not the father confessor of anybody, nor assuming to be, nor trying to lecture anybody, I do get kind of sick and tired and a bit fed up with all this talk about nothing, and probably I am adding to it. The reason not so many Members of the House are present this afternoon, and everybody knows it, is due to the fact that most of those particularly interested in this bill have read the hearings, have read the report, have examined both with a fine-tooth comb, know what it is all about and the reasons therefor, and they are satisfied not to be here to make useless amendments. They would vote if they were here—which is not necessary as they will vote if they are called—for the bill, and any effort to get a quorum or to stop passage of the bill is purely dilatory and obstructive.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. HOFFMAN].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVAL RESEARCH LABORATORY

For necessary work of the Naval Research Laboratory for the benefit of the naval service, operation and maintenance of a laboratory, additions to equipment, maintenance of buildings and grounds, temporary employment of such scientific and technical civilian assistants as may become necessary at rates of pay not exceeding $25 per diem for any person so employed, and subscriptions to technical periodicals, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary, $2,475,000.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Amendment offered by Mr. HOFFMAN: Page 4, line 21, strike out "$25" and insert "$20."

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, far be it from me to attempt to enlighten the gentleman from Vermont as to whether or not any of these amendments are germane or whether the discussion is pertinent. If I might be so presumptuous, however, I would call his attention to the fact that the committee saw fit in its wisdom to limit debate on this bill carrying $29,500,000,000 to 1 hour on a side. It was impossible to obtain any time to discuss this matter when general debate was had on the bill. So now it becomes necessary to offer amendments to get into the RECORD certain ideas which I have.

I do regret that the gentleman should think that this first amendment which was offered by me adding $50,000 to the $200,000 to be made immediately available for plant security was not germane. The gentleman just is not aware of the situation which exists in many plants. The gentleman is not aware of the facts.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Will the gentleman read my remarks? I did not have anything to say about his amendment. I said I did not rise to oppose it except in a pro forma way. I said I was opposed to a discussion of those things which were not germane.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I cannot yield any further. The matters I am discussing are in my opinion germane. Here is the point: Although there is a law on the books forbidding members of the armed forces to belong to a union in these plants where this security force mentioned in the paragraph to which I offered an amendment is employed, those men, although they belong to the armed forces, are members of unions and some of those men I have been advised have stated that, if it came to a conflict between the order of the union and the order of a Navy man or an Army man who is charged with the security of the plant, they would have to follow the union.

And do you know that in one of these large plants being operated under the supervision of the Navy, the navy men in charge, officers of the Navy, have no authority to remove a guard from over there and put him over here, and direct his conduct? That the captain who is in charge of those guards follows the orders of the union rather than the orders of the Navy? It is unbelievable, is it not?

Mr. Chairman, it is about time that somebody made an investigation to learn whether or not construction is being carried on under the orders of the unions or under the orders of the armed forces. I pointed out when on the floor before how they defied the Navy back in 1939. They are at it again today, yet the Congress sits here and lets that situation go on.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment and to bring this matter to an end, I ask unanimous consent that that amendment may be considered now with this one, and then I will not take further time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOFFMAN: Page 5, line 6, strike out "$50,000" and insert "$55,000."

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I wish to ask the gentleman this question. I think he has given me some very interesting information I did not have before. Let us assume, for instance, that a strike develops in plant A in city X, we will say, Are those uniformed officers in charge of the security of that plant force, under the procedure which is now in force, under orders to carry out the instructions of the union leaders instead of the military authorities or Navy, whichever may be in charge of that plant?

Mr. HOFFMAN. No; the gentleman did not get me clearly. I did not mean that the Army or the Navy officials had to carry out the orders of the union. What I meant was this, as an illustration: Here are 50 or 60 women in a lavatory.

They are shooting craps and smoking cigarettes. Here is another woman who is a member of the guard or who is acting in a supervisory capacity. She goes up to the lavatory. Now, remember she must ultimately join the union. She goes up there. She is on probation. She tells them to get to work and then along comes the union and says, "We want her discharged." The Army or Navy man cannot protect her on that job and out she goes; that is all there is to it.

When it comes to production, the union in the end tells how rapidly the workers shall produce, how much shall be turned out and, in all too many instances, neither the Army nor the Navy nor any Federal official has anything to say about it.

All too often, any suggestions or orders from the Army or the Navy as to who should be employed, where they should work, how fast they should work, and how they should conduct themselves are disregarded by union members. Shop stewards rule the plants, determine the amount of production.

Of course, it hinders efficiency.

Mr. Chairman, with due respect to the opinion of my friend from Vermont, this amendment has to do with the adding of a certain amount—that is, $50,000—which shall be made immediately available. The purpose of this particular paragraph of the bill is to get oil. It has to do with the getting of oil brought into the eastern seaboard, so that those living there will not freeze to death or get cold or be hindered in the production of war materials.

Down here in Missouri, and I have told you about this two or three times before, they have been trying, since the 28th of April, to throw a pipe line across the Mississippi River. That line, if it were made available today, would carry 300,000 barrels of crude—that is, if it could be constructed—and 250,000 barrels of high-test octane gas. Why has its construction been delayed? Because Buck Newell, who was convicted back in 1937 of defrauding the Government—think of that, defrauding the Government—has ordered a strike down there, and the American Federation of Labor Hod Carriers Union and some A. F. of L. engineers went on strike and have carried on that strike. They get away with it because of politicians in the Navy Department; in the War Department, not because of the fighting men, not with the consent of the fighting officers; oh, no. There is a distinct difference. It is the politicians in the Navy Department who say that we must say nothing in respect of that pipe line, whether it could be constructed, or whether its construction is to continue, whether it should be completed expeditiously.

Is it not about time that this Congress got out from under?

It occurs to me that the President, having once before said he would not have anything to say about what we should do with respect to legislation, and then having yesterday it was, I believe, told us what to do about the Ruml plan, and having made Congress jump through the hoop, Democrats and some Republicans, and put on that exhibition as the ring master, now should take on John Lewis, of the United Mine Workers, and make him do a little exhibition jumping through the hoop.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

The amendments were rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Instruction: For postgraduate instruction of officers in other than civil government and literature, including such amounts as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of the act approved January 16, 1936 (34 U. S. C. 1073), and special instruction and education, including rental, maintenance, and operation of property for instruction purposes, and individual training of officers and enlisted personnel at home and abroad, including maintenance of students abroad, except aviation and submarine training otherwise appropriated for, $37,000,000: Provided, That no part of this or any other appropriation contained in this act shall be available for or on account of any expense incident to giving special educational courses or postgraduate instruction to officers with view to qualifying them or better qualifying them for the performance of duties required to be performed by or in pursuance of law by officers of the Supply Corps, the Corps of Civil Engineers, and officers assigned to engineering duty only, except present students and except such officers who are commissioned in such corps or have been assigned to engineering duty only or who have not been commissioned in the line of the Navy more than 3 years and 4 months prior to the commencement of such educational courses or postgraduate instruction;

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I have been corrected on some information which I gave the House. Let me say to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN] that the figure which I gave as the appropriation for national defense for the Army and the Navy ranged from $245,000,000,000 to $250,000,000,000 and includes moneys appropriated in this bill.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to revise and extend my remarks.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'HARA. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. I did not quite hear the gentleman's remarks.

Mr. O'HARA. The gentleman from Nebraska inquired of me when I was giving some figures on moneys appropriated for national defense.

Mr. STEFAN. And I was correct?

Mr. O'HARA. You were correct in your statement.

Mr. STEFAN. The gentleman made a fine contribution and I did not want to be critical, but I took the information from the Appropriations Committee records.

Mr. O'HARA. I thought I was correctly informed.

Mr. STEFAN. Then our total war appropriations apparently are between $240,000,000,000 and $248,000,000,000?

Mr. O'HARA. Two hundred and forty-five billion dollars to $250,000,000,000.

Mr. STEFAN. Including the $29,500,000,000 carried in this bill?

Mr. O'HARA. Yes; and may I say to the gentleman from Nebraska, and to the House, that I want to correct my statement, and I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the request of the gentleman from Minnesota will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. HOFFMAN (interrupting the reading of the bill). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GAVAGAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2713) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the previous question is ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time and was read the third time.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman withhold his point of order a moment?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes, Mr. Speaker.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WASIELEWSKI, for 2 days, on account of death in family.

To Mr. O'LEARY, indefinitely, on account of official business.

To Mr. CAPOZZOLI, indefinitely, on account of official business.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The Speaker announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 649. An act to grant the consent of Congress to a compact entered into by the States of Colorado, Kansas, and Nebraska relating to the waters of the Republican River basin, to make provisions concerning the exercise of Federal jurisdiction as to those waters, to promote flood control in the basin, and for other purposes; and

S. 1041. An act to extend the period during which direct obligations of the United States may be used as collateral security for Federal Reserve notes.

ADJOURNMENT

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point of order that a quorum is not present.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, May 20, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON THE POST OFFICE AND POST ROADS

The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads will meet on Thursday, May 20, 1943, at 10 a. m., for the consideration of H. R. 2250, H. R. 2419, H. R. 1169, H. R. 1565, and H. R. 2080. Public hearings will be held.

COMMITTEE ON THE MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold a public hearing on Thursday, May 20, 1943, at 10 a. m. on H. R. 2612, to extend the effective date of the act of December 17, 1941, relating to additional safeguards to the radio communications service of ships of the United States.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

There will be a meeting of the subcommittee on investigation of restrictions on brand names and newsprint of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, at 10 a. m., Monday, May 24, 1943.

Business to be considered: Public hearings pursuant to House Resolution 98 by Congressman HALLECK.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BATES of Kentucky:

H. R. 2740. A bill to amend the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act so as to place the various States on an equal basis with respect to contributions of employees, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HOLMES of Massachusetts:

H. R. 2741. A bill to lower the rate of tax imposed with respect to the transfer of certain small-game guns; and to lower the rate of tax imposed upon manufacturers and dealers in such guns; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. KING:

H. R. 2742. A bill to provide for increased assistance payments under the Social Security Act during the present unlimited national emergency to meet increased costs of living, to protect the interests of recipients of such payments who work during such emergency, and to provide special Federal aid to low-income States for their public assistance programs; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. GAVAGAN:

H. R. 2743 (by request). A bill to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Mrs. Marie Geiler; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McMILLAN:

H. R. 2744. A bill to authorize and direct the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to set aside the trial-board conviction of Herbert E. Brodie and Leo Murray and their resultant dismissal and to reinstate Herbert E. Brodie and Leo Murray as privates Metropolitan Police Department; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

817. By Mrs. BOLTON (by request): Petition of sundry citizens of Lakewood, Ohio, urging enactment of House bill 2082, providing for a bill to reduce absenteeism, conserve manpower, and speed production of materials necessary for the winning of the war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

818. By Mr. CUNNINGHAM: Petition of 315 citizens of Des Moines, Iowa, favoring enactment of House bill 2082, introduced by Hon. JOSEPH R. BRYSON, of South Carolina, to reduce absenteeism, conserve manpower, and speed production of materials necessary for the winning of the war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

819. By Mr. GRAHAM: Petition of 20 members of the West Liberty United Presbyterian Church, Slipper Rock, Pa., urging the passage of House bill 2082, introduced by Hon. JOSEPH R. BRYSON, of South Carolina, to reduce absenteeism, conserve manpower, and speed production of materials necessary for the winning of the war, by prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors in the United States for the duration of the war and until the termination of mobilization; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

820. By Mr. GRIFFITHS: Petition of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of Marietta, Ohio, petitioning the Congress of the United States to pass House bill 2082, introduced by Hon. JOSEPH BRYSON, of South Carolina, to reduce absenteeism, conserve manpower, and speed production of materials necessary for the winning of the war, by prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors in the United States for the duration of the war and until the termination of mobilization; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

821. By Mr. PLUMLEY: Resolutions adopted at the annual town meetings on March 2, 1943, in 10 towns in Vermont, pledging to help win at whatever cost the victory which will erase forever from the minds of all men ideas of master races and of people who have the destiny and power to dominate and enslave other peoples; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

822. Also, resolutions adopted in town meeting March 2, 1943, in 38 towns scattered over the State and 16 in Windsor County, pledging unstinting efforts to further food production, and petitioning the Federal Government to take necessary steps to provide sufficient labor, machinery, fertilizers, and other production factors, together with fair returns; to the Committee on Agriculture.

823. By Mr. ROHRBOUGH: Petition of the Association of West Virginia Live Stock Auction Markets, protesting against policies and regulations of Office of Price Administration relative to small packers and slaughterers as tending to discourage production of meats for the future and cause present slaughtering of cattle not ready for market; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

824. By Mr. SCHIFFLER: Petition of J. A. Burdette, commander, and S. W. Rife, adjutant, James C. Russell Camp, No. 11, Department of West Virginia, United Spanish War Veterans, Huntington, W. Va., urging the passage of House bill 2350, to liberalize the service pension laws relating to veterans of the War with Spain, the Philippine Insurrection, and the China Relief Expedition, and their dependents; to the Committee on Pensions.

825. Also, petition of Charles L. Kettler and a number of other residents of the First Congressional District of West Virginia, urging the establishment of a Chiropractic Corps in the armed forces now; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

826. By Mr. HEIDINGER: Communication from R. D. Bowden, head, department of sociology, Southern Illinois Normal University, Carbondale, Ill., urging the continuance of the National Youth Administration and that a sufficient appropriation be made therefor; to the Committee on Appropriations.

827. Also, resolution of Local Union No. 152 of Progressive Mine Workers of America, at Harrisburg, Ill., signed by Claude Winkleman, president, and Dennis Moore, secretary, urging the continuance of the National Youth Administration and that a sufficient appropriation be made therefor; to the Committee on Appropriations.

SENATE

THURSDAY, MAY 20, 1943

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father of our life, fountain of our being, we thank Thee for the light of Thy countenance which illumines our pathway with eternal splendor. Without that light we walk in darkness; without Thee as guide our boasted progress but leads to the quagmires of futility and oblivion; without Thee our science but whets the sword to a sharper edge and destroys us with our own wheels and wings; without Thee commerce cannot save us, for selfish trade but lifts the hunger of covetousness to a higher pitch; without Thee even education cannot redeem us, for we know now that the mere sharpening of the intellect, the massing and mastery of facts and figures, may but fit men to be tenfold more masterful in the awful art of slaughter.

In all our ways may we not miss the way. Shatter our delusions, shine through our blindness, shame our pride, that we stray not in folly away from Thee. Bring us without fear to meet the flaming of eternal dawn. In the dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday, May 19, 1943, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 649. An act to grant the consent of Congress to a compact entered into by the States of Colorado, Kansas, and Nebraska relating to the waters of the Republican River Basin, to make provisions concerning the exercise of Federal jurisdiction as to those waters, to promote flood control in the basin, and for other purposes; and

S. 1041. An act to extend the period during which direct obligations of the United States may be used as collateral security for Federal Reserve notes.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREE ON TAX BILL

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair announces the appointment of the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] as a member of the conference committee on the part of the Senate on the tax bill, in place of the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

NOTICE OF MEETING OF CONGRESSIONAL WAR PARENTS ASSOCIATION

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that there will be a meeting of the Congressional War Parents' Association at 4:30 p. m. on Monday afternoon, May 24, in the room of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives in the Capitol Building. Members of the Senate and House who have sons in the service and are members of the association are invited to attend.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following communications and a letter, which were referred as indicated:

ESTIMATE OF APPROPRIATION, WAR PRODUCTION BOARD (S. Doc. No. 46)

A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation, fiscal year 1943, in the form of an amendment to the supplemental estimate previously submitted for the War Production Board, amounting to $100,000 (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

ESTIMATES OF APPROPRIATIONS, BITUMINOUS COAL DIVISION, INTERIOR DEPARTMENT, AND OFFICE OF BITUMINOUS COAL CONSUMERS' COUNSEL (S. Doc. No. 47)

A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the Bituminous Coal Division, Department of the Interior, and the Office of Bituminous Coal Consumers' Counsel, fiscal year 1943, amounting to $800,000 and $16,000, respectively (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SUSPENSION OF DEPORTATION OF CERTAIN PERSONS

A letter from the Attorney General, transmitting, pursuant to law (and making reference to his letter to the Congress dated January 7, 1942—H. Doc. No. 541), a report stating all the facts and pertinent provisions of law in the cases of 412 individuals whose deportation has been suspended for more than 6 months under authority vested in the Attorney General, together with statement of the reason for such suspension (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Immigration.

ADDITIONAL REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON REDUCTION OF NONESSENTIAL FEDERAL EXPENDITURES—HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION (S. DOC. NO. 48)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], chairman of the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures, submitting an additional report of the joint committee relating to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the report of the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures just laid before the Senate by the Vice President and referred to the Committee on Appropriations be printed at this point in the body of the RECORD, and also printed as a Senate document. The report relates to the liquidation of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report referred to by the Senator from Virginia will be printed in the RECORD, and also as a Senate document.

The report is as follows:

REDUCTION OF NONESSENTIAL FEDERAL EXPENDITURES—REPORT ON THE HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION—REPORT TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, THE VICE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES AND PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE, AND THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

In accordance with title 6 of the Revenue Act of 1941, Public Law 250, Seventy-seventh Congress, an additional report herewith is presented by the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures.

In this report the committee will concern itself with the functions and activities of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. First the history of that corporation will be outlined. Then there will be presented the results of the committee's investigation and pertinent evidence adduced at the hearings on February 25 and March 29, 1943. Conclusions and recommendations will be made in the light of this evidence as it relates to congressional intent when the Home Owners' Loan Corporation was created.

At the outset the committee wishes to commend those who have been charged with the duty of administering the Home Owners' Loan Act, because it is believed that had not those persons been imbued with the desire to act quickly in the face of a national emergency the American home owner would not be in as favorable a position financially as he is today. However, the committee believes that the Federal Government should respond to a period of national economic prosperity just as quickly as it did to a period of depression and, therefore, it now seeks to determine when, in the best interests of the people, the government should withdraw from the field of real-estate credit.

RECOMMENDATIONS

It is recommended:

1. That the Home Owners' Loan Corporation completely liquidate all of its holdings by the end of the fiscal year 1945 (June 30, 1945). Also, that such forced liquidation be legislatively guaranteed by an act of Congress, prescribing generally the manner in which it shall be effected.

2. That the Home Owners' Loan Corporation immediately plan, and for the next 2 years and 2 months execute, an intensive campaign among their mortgagors and lessees to induce them to increase their equity in their homes, to buy them outright, or to transfer their loans to a local home-financing institution.

Liquidation protects home owner: In making its recommendation for an early liquidation of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation the committee was careful to provide that the home owner did not suffer. Under the proposed legislation, or through independent action of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, the transfer of the mortgages and vendee accounts to private lending institutions will be accomplished so that the terms of the contracts are not changed in the least. In other words, under the method hereinafter outlined the only change, insofar as the home owner is concerned, will be that the same payments now being made to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation will thereafter be made to local home-financing institutions.

Also, under the proposed method of liquidation the present occupants of the properties owned by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation are given an opportunity to purchase them at current appraised values with down payments as low as 10 percent and terms not exceeding 15 years. Occupants who do not wish to take advantage of the offer will not be prejudiced, because these properties will be transferred to the Federal Housing Administration to be disposed of by that agency in the same manner as other properties held by that agency.

Liquidation will not increase Home Owners' Loan Corporation personnel: Under the proposed method of liquidation the Home Owners' Loan Corporation need not increase its personnel. Provisions may be made for the utilization of personnel of other departments and agencies who can assist in the sale and transfer of the mortgages and vendee accounts to local private home-financing institutions. Upon complete liquidation the employees of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation will be transferred to other departments and agencies of the Government more closely connected with the war program.

History of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation: Prior to the passage of the Home Owners' Loan Act, 1933, the Nation's home owners faced the imminent danger of great numbers of foreclosures, because of the absence of long-term real-estate credit at low interest rates. When the depression descended upon the country it was clear that the average citizen could not afford to continue the high payments which were customary in times of prosperity. Therefore, Congress set up the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to enable the home owner to save his property by extending to him the type of credit he needed. The hearings on the original bill show that there was no intent on the part of the legislators to have the Government enter the real-estate credit field in competition with private enterprise. The United States was then faced with a condition, not a theory, which called for immediate action and a practical approach. It is believed that the same practical approach has been taken by the committee in this report.

The Home Owners' Loan Corporation was created by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board[1] under statutory authority given the Board by the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933.[2] The Federal Home Loan Bank Board was authorized to create a corporation which would be an instrumentality of the United States; which would have authority to sue and be sued in any court of competent jurisdiction; and which would be under the direction of such Board and operated by it under bylaws, rules, and regulations as the Board would prescribe for the accomplishment of the purposes of the act. The creating section also provided that the members of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board should constitute the board of directors of the Corporation.

The provisions of the original Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act of 1933 have been amended by the acts of Congress of April 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 643), guaranteeing the bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and for other purposes; June 27, 1934 (48 Stat. 1264), defining the terms "home mortgage" and "real estate"; and August 11, 1939 (53 Stat. 1403), allowing the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to extend the period of amortization of home loans from 15 to 25 years.

The Home Owners' Loan Corporation was grouped with other agencies to form the Federal Loan Agency by Reorganization Plan I, part 4, section 402 (c), effective July 1, 1939 (4 Fed. Reg. 2730; 53 Stat. 1429), and later was transferred to the National Housing Agency under the immediate direction of the Federal Home Loan Bank Administration,[3] also a part of the National Housing Agency, by the terms of Executive Order 9070, dated February 24, 1942.

The Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act of 1933 expressly provides that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation shall operate under a board of directors composed of the members of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board and that the "members of the Board shall constitute the board of directors of the Corporation and shall serve as such directors without additional compensation." However, under the direction contained in Executive Order 9070, of February 24, 1942, the exclusive functions, powers, and duties of the board of directors of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation were given to the Commissioner of the Federal Home Loan Bank Administration, leaving the Corporation without a board of directors, whereas the language of the original enactment specified and still requires that there shall be a board of directors for the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. Under the terms of the First War Powers Act, 1941 (Public Law 354, 77th Cong., approved December 18, 1941), the Presidential authority extended to the "redistribution of the functions among the executive agencies," including "governmental corporations"; however, a further proviso in the same act states, that "the authority by this title granted shall be exercised only in matters relating to the conduct of the present war." Prior to the present conflict the termination date of the activities of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation had been provided for by two provisions of law[4] specifically relating to its liquidation. It is difficult to conceive that the Corporation is connected with the conduct of the war in such a manner as to come within the provisions of the First War Powers Act with respect to the redistribution of its functions and duties. Subsequent Executive action had the theoretical effect of dissolving the Home Owners' Loan Corporation as such, because of the abolition of the board of directors.

Purpose of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation: The general purpose of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation was to grant long-term mortgage loans, at low interest rates, to distressed home owners who were unable to procure financing through normal channels, and to help stabilize the real-estate and home-mortgage field during the depression. Refinancing was accomplished by exchanging Home Owners' Loan Corporation bonds for home mortgages. Loans were made by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation only to those who were otherwise unable to procure needed financial assistance and such loans were secured on dwellings valued at not more than $20,000 and accommodating not more than four families. Originally, loans were written for a term not to exceed 15 years, but by an amendment to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act, dated August 11, 1939 (53 Stat. 1403), this period was extended to a maximum of 25 years in cases where the borrower's circumstances and the condition of the security justified such an extension.

Interest rates: Practically all loans were originally made at an interest rate of 5 percent per annum. In 1939 the corporation made provisions to accept, until further notice, interest at the rate of 4½ percent per annum on all payments due on and after October 16, 1939, on the indebtedness of home owners to the Corporation arising from any loan, advance, or sale of property. On all purchase-money obligations taken on or after October 1, 1939, in connection with the sale of real property by the Corporation, interest was to be charged at the 4½-percent rate until otherwise directed by the Federal Home Loan Bank Commissioner.

Lending operations: In accordance with law,[5] the Home Owners' Loan Corporation terminated its lending activities on June 12, 1936, at which time 1,071,824 loans had been made, which represented $3,093,451,321 for mortgage-lending purposes.

Since June 12, 1936, the date when its lending period ceased, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation has advanced approximately $175,000,000 more to its borrowers to help them meet tax payments, and its work has been that of assisting borrowers to keep their homes, liquidating its own loans, and disposing of properties it has been forced to acquire.

[1] The Federal Home Loan Bank Board itself was created under the provisions of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act of 1932 (12 U. S. C., 1940 ed., 1421, approved July 2, 1932, 47 Stat. 725).

On March 31, 1942, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation was collecting on approximately 820,000 accounts, comprising 626,000 original borrowers and 134,000 purchasers of repossessed properties. However, 140,251 loans had been paid in full, which represented receipts amounting to $341,710,854.

Evidence adduced at hearings: On February 25 and March 29, 1943, Mr. John H. Fahey, Commissioner of the Federal Home Loan Bank Administration, appeared before the committee and presented evidence showing the present activities of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and to what extent it had liquidated since 1936.

Mr. Fahey stated that at its inception the Home Owners' Loan Corporation was authorized $200,000,000 for capital stock, which later was legislatively supplemented by a bond-issue authorization of $4,750,000,000. This allowed the Corporation to expand its investments to $4,950,000,000. Of this, $400,000,000 was authorized to be used in financing necessary repairs and reconditioning of homes securing the Corporation loans. Also, $300,000,000 was set aside by Congress for investments in the shares and deposits of qualified home-financing institutions.

The Mead-Barry amendment to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act passed in 1939, explained Mr. Fahey, was particularly timely, because it authorized the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to extend its loans under certain circumstances from the original 15 years up to as much as 25 years from the date such mortgage was written, and forestalled the necessity of great numbers of foreclosures. The extension of the amortization period of 253,565 borrowers under the Mead-Barry Act, and thus eliminating their delinquency, Mr. Fahey believed, operated to retard the rate of liquidation of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, because the payments on their loans were reduced by about 40 percent over what was necessary to liquidate within the original 15 years.

It was pointed out that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation between June 13, 1933, and June 12, 1936, received a total of 1,886,491 applications, and approved 1,017,821 loans. However, by June 12, 1936, the Corporation had completed its lending operations, and had in its portfolio mortgages of distressed home owners secured by properties in every community with a population of 2,500 or more and in all but 64 out of the total of 3,072 counties in the United States, and in Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and Alaska, as well.

Liquidation: From 1936 until the present time, Mr. Fahey said the Home Owners' Loan Corporation has been engaged in an orderly process of liquidation. Original borrower and subsequent vendee accounts which amounted to $3,278,000,000 had been reduced to $1,567,000,000 by December 31, 1942, a reduction of 52 percent of the total loan amount, and the number of accounts had been reduced to 780,000 (appendix 1).

The present status of these accounts is as follows:

Mortgage loan and vendee accounts, classified by amortization

Percentage of principal reduced	Number	Estimated amount of balance
None	12,000	$46,023,720
10 percent	28,600	103,918,100
10 to 20 percent	114,000	355,261,600
20 to 30 percent	132,900	351,017,200
Over 30 percent	462,500	588,779,380
Total	750,000	1,445,000,000

During the Corporation's existence it acquired 194,163 properties, but has sold 164,236 properties, which leaves 29,927 properties on hand. Fifty-one of these properties have been charged off for various reasons. On December 31, 1942, 1,745 properties were in the process of acquisition. The 31,621 properties owned or in the process of being acquired by the Corporation on December 31, 1942, had a capitalized value of $226,925,000.

Analysis by the committee: Mr. Fahey stated the crux of the problem when he said, "No one can foresee the future," in order to ascertain at what time the Corporation should liquidate its holdings. The committee agrees. The only purpose of this investigation is to determine when the most opportune time should be.

At the hearings Mr. Fahey submitted the Corporation's December 31, 1942, condensed balance sheet (appendix 1) and a projection of estimated losses from forced liquidation over a 5-year period (appendix 2). This projection was based upon current trends and present real-estate values. Mr. Fahey estimated that forced liquidation would result in the following losses for the years indicated:

Net loss from forced liquidation

1945	351,214,000
1946	285,046,000
1947	229,913,000
1948	180,449,000

As shown in appendix 2, Mr. Fahey estimates that total net loss from forced liquidation at the end of 1945 would be as shown below:

1. Debtor accounts	$212,654,000
2. Property	78,960,000
3. Bond interest	6,500,000
4. Total losses	298,114,000
5. Less net income	12,500,000
6. Net losses	285,614,000
7. Add previous net losses	65,600,000
8. Total net losses	351,214,000

The committee carefully reviewed the estimated losses from a forced liquidation (appendix 2) It was stated that aproximately $212,000,000 would be lost on debtor accounts if liquidation was within 2 years. Assuming that the Corporation is allowed 2 years and 2 months to liquidate as recommended by this report, and considering the fact that about 96 percent of the vendee accounts are current or less than 90 days delinquent, and the fact that the average loan balance is approximately $2,000, the committee believes that liquidation by June 30, 1945, will not result in a loss of over $100,000,000 on debtor accounts.

The Corporation estimates property losses in a 2-year liquidation period to be $78,000,000. This appears reasonable if the property is disposed of at 30 percent off the book value of $226,925,000. Recognizing, however, that the book value of this property is a highly controversial item, and cannot under any circumstances represent the market value, it is conceivable that the properties might be sold higher than at 30 percent off book value, particularly if the resident is given an opportunity to purchase the property with the Home Owners' Loan Corporation selling the paper (vendee account) along with the remainder of its assets.

The same table (appendix 2) shows that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation estimates a bond interest loss of $6,500,000 if liquidation occurred within 2 years. It is pointed out that by June 30, 1943, the following unmatured bonds will be outstanding:

3-percent series A, callable for payment May 1, 1944	$778,578,075
1½-percent series M, callable for payment June 1, 1945	754,904,025
1-percent series Q, callable for payment at any time	225,000,000

Thus by June 30, 1945, all bonds may be retired, and the Federal Treasury will benefit to that extent. The committee believes that insofar as the Federal Government as a whole is concerned this loss item should be eliminated entirely, because at no time are these funds idle. From investments in mortgages the funds move directly to the United States Treasury. There is no loss to the United States Government. Further, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation does not carry this as a loss item if liquidation is assumed to occur in 1946.

The estimated loss statement carries an item of $65,000,000 designated as "previous net losses." Since the 1944 column in the Home Owners' Loan Corporation estimate contains an item of $63,000,000 opposite "previous net losses," it is illogical to assume that a $65,600,000 loss will be sustained by liquidation in 1945 as compared with any other year. It distorts the true picture of the liquidation process to show past cumulative net losses as a part of the loss which will be sustained by liquidating on any date prior to the time such losses could be wiped out by a net profit as a result of shrewd business operation.

From the estimates furnished by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation the committee was unable to determine which of the entries in appendix 2 included costs for operating the Home Owners' Loan Corporation for each of the years during the 5-year period. However, if it is assumed that this expense is taken into consideration under "net income," then the true picture should include an additional item of $10,000,000 (estimated annual operating expense), which brings the gross income up to approximately $22,500,000.

From the foregoing analysis the following table shows what the committee believes is a more correct picture of loss to the Federal Government if liquidation is ordered by June 30, 1945:

Estimated losses from liquidation by June 30, 1945

1. Debtor accounts		$100,000,000
2. Property		78,000,000
3. Bond interest
4. Total losses		178,000,000
5. Gross net income	$22,500,000
6. Operation expenses	10,000,000
7. Less net income		12,500,000
8. Net losses from forced liquidation		165,500,000
9. Add cumulative net loss		65,600,000
10. Total net loss		231,100,000

In other words, the committee believes that possibly the estimated losses computed by the officials of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation are excessive by $120,000,000. Therefore, it is clear that discounting the original $200,000,000 appropriated by Congress the complete liquidation of the Corporation would result in a loss of only $31,000,000.

Manner of liquidation: The committee has been aware throughout its consideration of this problem that the Government would sustain a loss, regardless of when liquidation took place, but agrees with Mr. Fahey when he said:

"The influence which the Congress exerted by the Home Owners' Loan Act has had far-reaching effects in revolutionizing the home-mortgage business in the United States. It gave a very definite impetus to the development of the sound, long-term, amortized mortgage, at a reasonable rate of interest. As a result, the amortized mortgage principle is now pretty generally accepted over the country and, when the Federal Housing Administration was set up, that organization followed the same principle.

"The immediate effect, of course, was to end the mortgage panic and to check promptly the threat of foreclosure on millions of homes. Real-estate values were stabilized, mortgage-lending markets were strengthened, and help was given to towns and cities which found themselves financially mired because of excessive tax delinquency."

Mr. Fahey has said, and the committee agrees, that liquidation of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation presents a difficult problem. The real question, however, is whether the task will be any easier or any more advantageous to the Government at a later date than at present. The committee thinks not.

The committee believes that the time has come to put the liquidation machinery into full operation, and trusts that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation will carry out the recommendations of the committee in the same courageous and intensive way in which the affairs of that Corporation have been administered in the past.

Therefore, a bill is proposed to be introduced which will facilitate the liquidation of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation through the transfer and cash sale of its assets to individuals and to local banks, mutual savings banks, savings and loan associations, cooperative banks, trust companies, insurance companies, and other mortgage institutions. Legal consideration for such transfer and sale shall be either cash or United States bonds. The Corporation, upon the effective date of the act, should list all pertinent data concerning their holdings, and accept bids thereon which are equal to or in excess of the present balance, and the terms and conditions of these contracts shall not be changed. The Corporation should allow the present occupants of Corporation properties the opportunity of purchasing at current appraised values upon reasonable terms. All properties not sold should be transferred to the Federal Housing Administration. The Corporation when expedient should utilize personnel from all Government agencies which could lend aid in the interests of a more orderly process of liquidation. The complete liquidation should be effected by June 30, 1945.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the VICE PRESIDENT:

A letter in the nature of a memorial from the Chinese Consolidated Benevolent Association (and affiliated Chinese associations), New York City, N. Y., remonstrating against the enactment of the bill (H. R. 2076) to authorize the deportation of aliens to countries allied with the United States; ordered to lie on the table.

A resolution of the House of Representatives of the Territory of Hawaii; to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Twenty-second Session of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, That the Congress of the United States of America be, and it is hereby, respectfully requested and urged to propose that the perpetual calendar be adopted by all nations at the peace conference and to propose to all nations that they now appoint a national committee to study the perpetual calendar with a view toward its acceptance at the peace conference.

A joint resolution of the Legislature of California; to the Committee on Appropriations:

"Senate Joint Resolution 26

"Joint resolution relative to deduction of earnings from agricultural labor from old-age assistance

"Whereas House Joint Resolution 96, as passed by the Senate of the United States, included, as subdivision (f) of section 5 thereof, provisions that no person should be deemed not to be a needy individual by reason of remuneration paid to such person for any agricultural labor performed by him from the enactment of the resolution until 6 months after the termination of hostilities in the present war; and that no State should be required, in determining need in the case of any individual, to take into consideration any income or resources derived by him from agricultural labor; and

"Whereas conference reports amending House Joint Resolution 96 were adopted by both Houses of Congress, whereby the benefits of the subdivision were withheld from any State which had increased the amount of aid payable to recipients of old-age aid since April 30, 1943; and

"Whereas the State of California has at the present session of the legislature increased the maximum monthly individual grant of aid to the aged from $40 per month to $50 per month; and the State of California is the only State which has increased the amount of aid payable to recipients of old-age assistance since April 30, 1943; and

"Whereas House Joint Resolution 96, in the form in which it was put by the amendments made by the conference report, is flagrantly discriminatory against the State of California, and penalizes this State for its action in increasing the amount of aid to an amount more nearly adequate, under present conditions, for the maintenance of health and decency; and

"Whereas the farm-labor shortage in the State of California is no less severe than in other States whose contributions to the production of food and other agricultural products do not surpass, nor even equal, the contribution of the State of California: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and the Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the Legislature of the State of California does hereby protest the action of the Congress of the United States in passing legislation so unfair and unjust to the State of California, and does most urgently request the Congress of the United States to take such measures as may be necessary immediately to correct their ill-advised and discriminatory action; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the senate is hereby directed to send copies of this resolution to the President and the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Member of the Senate and the House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States from California."

A joint resolution of the Legislature of California; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

"Senate Resolution 142

"Resolution relative to memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact S. 971 or H. R. 2426, Seventy-eighth Congress, first session, providing for Federal participation in financing of a post-war highway construction program

"Whereas two measures are pending in the Congress of the United States, namely, S. 971 and H. R. 2426, to authorize Federal assistance to the States in financing a post-war construction program on rural and urban highways; and

"Whereas such legislation is designed to, and will, provide useful employment for those returning from services in the armed forces, or released by war industries after the war, and will, accordingly, tend to prevent unemployment, and the necessity for unemployment relief; and

"Whereas necessary wartime restrictions on gasoline and highway transportation have resulted in curtailment of revenues received by the highway departments of the States, and restrictions on use of materials have curtailed construction and reconstruction of needed highways during a period in which many highways have been damaged by heavy wartime truck traffic, engaged in transportation for the war effort; and

"Whereas such legislation will assist the States in bringing their highway systems and their highway-construction programs back to normal, and in making up the time lost due to necessary deferment of highway construction during the war; and

"Whereas there will be particular need to provide employment in California, following the war, due to the large number of war industries in this State; and

"Whereas there will be particular need in California for reconstruction of highways due to such war conditions: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the Congress of the United States be, and the same is hereby, memorialized to enact either S. 971 or H. R. 2426; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to the chairman of the House Committee on Roads, and to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States from California."

By Mr. WALSH:

Resolutions of the General Court of Massachusetts; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

"Resolutions in favor of the amendment of the Federal Motor Carrier Act, 1935, so-called, now part II of the Interstate Commerce Act

"Resolved, That the General Court of Massachusetts hereby memorializes the Congress of the United States to enact, and the President of the United States to sign, an act amending the Federal Motor Carrier Act, 1935, so-called, now part II of the Interstate Commerce Act, so as to limit to actual producers and private carriers the exemption of vehicles transporting farm produce and fish and to make said Motor Carrier Act applicable to vehicles transporting such commodities for hire or compensation and to the owners and operators of such vehicles; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the Commonwealth forthwith transmit copies of these resolutions to the President of the United States, to the Presiding Officer of each branch of Congress, and to the Members thereof from this Commonwealth."

By Mr. BROOKS:

A resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Illinois; to the Committee on the Judiciary:

"House Resolution 53

"Whereas it is essential to the successful prosecution of the war that the national morale be kept at the highest possible level; and

"Whereas this purpose can be achieved only if all parts of the population have an effective voice in the Government and are permitted to live free from fear of unlawful incursions upon their personal safety: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Illinois House of Representatives, That we respectfully urge the Congress of the United States to enact into law House bills 7 and 51, popularly known as the poll-tax and antilynch bills, respectively; and be it further

"Resolved, That a suitably engrossed copy of this preamble and resolution be forwarded immediately by the secretary of state to each Member of the House of Representatives and Senate of the present Congress now representing the State of Illinois."

By Mr. CAPPER:

A petition of sundry citizens, members of the Fourth District Kansas Federation of Women's Clubs, praying for the enactment of pending legislation extending the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act; to the Committee on Finance.

A petition, numerously signed, of sundry citizens, members of the First Methodist Church, of Hays, Kans., praying for the enactment of Senate bill 860, relating to the sale of alcoholic liquors to the members of the land and naval forces of the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs:

H. R. 1900. A bill to prevent the payment of excessive fees or compensation in connection with the negotiation of war contracts; without amendment (Rept. No. 255).

By Mr. BAILEY, from the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 1702. A bill to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Memphis, Tenn.; without amendment (Rept. No. 256).

By Mr. OVERTON, from the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 1731. A bill granting the consent of Congress to the State of Louisiana to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Calcasieu River at or near Lake Charles, La.; without amendment (Rept. No. 257).

By Mr. WILEY, from the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 2077. A bill to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the St. Croix River at or near Hudson, Wis.; without amendment (Rept. No. 259).

By Mr. McCARRAN, from the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 1670. A bill to amend section 2 of the Civilian Pilot Training Act of 1939, as amended; with an amendment (Rept. No. 260).

By Mr. RADCLIFFE, from the Committee on Commerce:

S. 1063. A bill to extend the effective date of the act of December 17, 1941, relating to additional safeguards to the radio communications service of ships of the United States; with amendments (Rept. No. 261).

EXTENSION OF RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT—REPORT OF THE FINANCE COMMITTEE

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, from the Committee on Finance I report back favorably with an amendment House Joint Resolution 111, to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended. I ask unanimous consent that I may have the privilege of filing a report during the adjournment of the Senate, if it cannot be prepared before the Senate adjourns this afternoon.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not know just what House Joint Resolution 111 is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the joint resolution by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 111) to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended.

Mr. McNARY. What is the request of the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. GEORGE. I am merely reporting the joint resolution from the Finance Committee for the calendar, but the request was for permission to file a report during the adjournment, if the Senate shall adjourn before the report is ready for filing this afternoon.

Mr. McNARY. On the theory that the Senate might adjourn until Monday, the Senator desires to have opportunity to file a report?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. A majority report and minority views?

Mr. GEORGE. The request is for permission to file a report on the joint resolution, and I may file minority views for the minority. I should like to say that, according to previous announcement, the measure will not be called up in the Senate before Monday.

Mr. McNARY. I should not wish at this time to agree to have it called up Monday.

Mr. GEORGE. I shall make a motion Monday to bring it up. I give notice that I will do that.

Mr. McNARY. If that is the attitude of the Senator, I do not know that I desire to grant the permission that the report be filed.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well, Mr. President; I withdraw the request, and I will either file the report or not file it during the afternoon.

Mr. McNARY. That is the Senator's privilege, of course.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes.

Mr. McNARY subsequently said: Mr. President, earlier in the day, for substantial reasons, I objected to the request of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] to file during the adjournment of the Senate a report—either a majority report or minority views—from the Committee on Finance on the extension of the Trade Agreements Act.

I have discussed the matter with the Senator from Georgia, and I think we have come to an agreement as to the date when the measure may be considered in the Senate. For that reason I withdraw all my objections, so that the report may be submitted at any time between now and the next session of the Senate, on Monday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Georgia is agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE subsequently, from the Committee on Finance, submitted a written report (No. 258) on House Joint Resolution 111, heretofore reported by him with an amendment.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE NATIONAL DEFENSE PROGRAM—LIMIT OF EXPENDITURES

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably Senate Resolution 146, and ask for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the limit of expenditures under Senate Resolution 71, Seventy-seventh Congress, first session, agreed to March 1, 1941, and Senate Resolution 6, Seventy-eighth Congress, first session, agreed to January 25, 1943 (relating to the investigation of the national defense program), is hereby increased by $100,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection of the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. McNARY. May we have some explanation of the nature of the resolution?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, this is a resolution submitted by the so-called Truman committee. They are asking for another $100,000 to carry on the activities of the committee. I have conferred with the minority members of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and they are favorable to the adoption of the resolution. I have also conferred with the majority members. There does not seem to be any question about furnishing funds to the so-called Truman committee, and that committee is now asking for the amount carried in this resolution, and the Committee to Audit and Control, think they should have this sum in order to continue the magnificent work they have been doing throughout the country.

Mr. McNARY. Did the committee report unanimously after the matter had been fully considered?

Mr. LUCAS. I conferred by telephone with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS], and I could not reach the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE]. The Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Illinois agree that the work should go on, and that the amount asked for should be appropriated. I have enough proxies in my pocket on the majority side to handle that situation.

Mr. BARKLEY. How much has the committee had up to date?

Mr. LUCAS. I am not sure how much has been appropriated for the investigation, and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] is not present this morning.

Mr. HATCH. I think it is in the neighborhood of $200,000.

Mr. LUCAS. I think that is correct. I believe originally the sum of $15,000 or $25,000 was appropriated, and later perhaps $60,000, I think $200,000 all told.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 150) submitted by Mr. TRUMAN on May 4, 1943, was considered and agreed to.

MARBLE PEDESTAL FOR BUST OF FORMER VICE PRESIDENT GARNER

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report favorably Senate Resolution 150, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 150) submitted by Mr. CONNALLY on May 14, 1943, was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved That the Architect of the Capitol hereby is authorized to procure a marble pedestal for the bust in the Senate wing of the Capitol of former Vice President John N. Garner, the expense thereof, not exceeding $300, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the Senate Committee on the Library.

VERNON L. TALBERTT

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably Senate Resolution 144, which is a resolution recommended by our committee, authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Senate to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate to Vernon L. Talbertt, son of William B. Talbertt, late a laborer of the Senate, a sum equal to 1 year's compensation at the rate he was receiving at the time of his death.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 144) submitted by Mr. BARKLEY on May 3, 1943, was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate to Vernon L. Talbertt, son of William B. Talbertt, late a laborer of the Senate under supervision of the Sergeant at Arms, a sum equal to 1 year's compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

BILLS AND A JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HOLMAN:

S. 1118. A bill to amend the Nationality Act of 1940, providing for loss of nationality; to the Committee on Immigration.

By Mr. LUCAS:

S. 1119. A bill imposing additional duties upon the postmaster at Lincoln's New Salem, Ill.; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. REYNOLDS:

S. 1120. A bill to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the posthumous appointment to commissioned or noncommissioned grade of certain enlisted men and the posthumous promotion of certain commissioned officers and enlisted men," approved July 28, 1942; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BROOKS:

S. 1121. A bill to provide for the return of unabsorbed premiums for war damage insurance, to amend the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. ELLENDER (for the Special Committee to Study and Survey Problems of Small Business Enterprises):

S. 1122. A bill to provide for the distribution of motor-vehicle tires, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. WHEELER:

S. 1123. A bill authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish headstones to mark the honorary burial places of deceased members of the armed forces who are buried at sea, in foreign lands, or at unknown places; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BONE:

S. J. Res. 61 (by request): Joint resolution requesting the President to proclaim the third Sunday in June of each year as Father's Day; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

COMPARISON OF MEAT PRICES IN CANADA AND WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I have in my hand a photostatic copy of an advertisement in the Montreal Daily Star of Thursday, May 13, 1943. I also have a copy of the Washington Post of the same date. In these newspapers are given meat prices in Montreal, Canada, and Washington, D. C., on May 13, when the new "roll-back" prices were established by the Office of Price Administration.

On May 13, the Office of Price Administration brought out a new price schedule on meats in Washington, D. C. As advertised in the daily press, the new O. P. A. meat prices were "roll-back" prices.

On the same day, May 13, the daily press of Montreal, Ottawa, and Toronto, Canada, published the grocery advertisements for meat prices in Canada.

A comparison of these prices shows that O. P. A. "roll-back" prices on meats in Washington, D. C., overtop meat prices at 12 leading retail grocery houses in Montreal, Ottawa, and Toronto by from 30 percent to as high as 90 percent.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. Am I correct in understanding the Senator to say that meat prices are as much as 90 percent higher in Washington than they are in Canada?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes; according to the advertisement of the grocery stores in Montreal and the announcement in the Washington Post for the same date, giving the new prices under the schedule of the O. P. A.

The average increase of O. P. A. meat prices over and above Canada approximates 50 percent.

Take porterhouse and sirloin steak and roast. In Washington, D. C., the O. P. A. ceiling price for porterhouse and sirloin was jumped from the former price top of from 50 to 59 cents a pound to 66 cents for choice steak at grocery chain stores and 70 cents at smaller independent stores, the advertised "roll back" being an increase or "roll up" of from 10 to 15 cents a pound.

But the true roll back appears in Canada. Of eight leading grocery houses or chains in Montreal, Ottawa, and Toronto, advertising on May 13 in the daily press, porterhouse and sirloin, the average porterhouse price was 39 cents, or approximately 30 cents a pound below the O. P. A. roll-back price in Washington.

Now comes the big story. A. & P. Food Stores, the leading chain retail grocery of Montreal, advertised porterhouse, boneless sirloin, and boneless round, both steak and roast, at 35 cents a pound—and I have a photostatic copy of their advertisement—on the same day that the Office of Price Administration in Washington set the top price for porterhouse in Washington at the so-called roll-back price of 66 cents a pound, or 90 percent above the Montreal price.

The O. P. A. roll-back swindle not only jumps Washington prices by something like 20 percent over the former retail price level, but it climbs Mount Ararat with meat prices one-half again higher than in the cities above our northern border.

I present and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a brief tabulation of O. P. A. meat prices effective in Washington, D. C., beginning May 13, and, in parallel column, an average of Canadian retail prices as advertised in leading dailies of Montreal, Ottawa, and Toronto, all on the same day, May 13, 1943.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the table will be printed in the RECORD.

The table is as follows:

Meat cut	Washington price (Office of Price Administration "roll-back")	Price in Canada, average	Office of Price Administration excess

NOTE.—Independent store price given for Washington, choice grade.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senate note that the O. P. A. meat price "roll back" in the District of Columbia rises upward of 40 degrees above the normal prices of Canada.

Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent that the advertisement from the Montreal Daily Star and the price list published in the Washington Post, to both of which I have referred, may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the advertisement and price list were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Montreal Daily Star, May 13, 1943]

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. I have listened with a great deal of interest to what the Senator has said on the subject of meat prices. I understand that in Canada the Canadian Government is subsidizing some of these set-ups, and I am wondering if the Senator has any information, for instance, as to how much a product costs a store, how much the farmer gets for his product in Canada and what he gets here, and what is the spread between what the producer gets and what the retailer gets. It seems to me, in order properly to judge the situation, one has got to take into consideration what we have generally been told, namely, that Canada and Great Britain both have put into operation a system of subsidies.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. WILEY. On top of that there is the question also of wage control in Canada, which we have not had here. For instance, we have seen in this country that in certain areas as high as $5,000 a year has been paid for milk delivery, whereas the milk-producing farmer in our section is getting about 6 cents a quart; and whereas a cheese-producing factory in our section sells its cheese at 27 cents a pound, we here in Washington are paying about 55 or 60 cents a pound for it.

If we took that picture, and put into it the subsidy, and the difference between the wages being paid, it seems to me it would be important.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. WILEY. A parliamentary inquiry. What is the regular order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business has not been concluded. The introduction of bills and joint resolutions is the present order.

Mr. WILEY. I thank the Chair. I thought we had passed that order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The introduction of bills and joint resolutions is still in order. If there be no further bills or joint resolutions, the presentation of amendments and concurrent and other resolutions is in order.

AMENDMENT TO INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. LA FOLLETTE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 1762, the independent offices appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

On page 66, line 7, before the period insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the purchase of oleomargarine or butter substitutes, except for cooking purposes; but if the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs finds at any time that the procurement of an adequate butter supply is not feasible, this appropriation shall be available for the purchase of oleomargarine or butter substitutes to the extent that such Administrator finds to be necessary to meet the requirements of the Veterans' Administration facilities for other than cooking purposes."

W. J. KING—REFERENCE TO COURT OF CLAIMS OF SENATE BILL 1017

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, on April 19 I introduced Senate bill 1017, a bill for the relief of W. J. King. Mr. King has a claim, not exceeding $100 in amount, arising out of a cotton certificate matter under one of the earlier agricultural adjustment acts.

At this time I desire to have the claim referred to the Court of Claims, in order that the Court of Claims, under section 151 of the Judicial Code, may consider the claim along with a number of other claims which have already been sent there, not with the idea of the court making any award of money to Mr. King, but only with the idea that the Court of Claims may make a report to the Senate on the character and nature of the claim, so that the Senate may have the information for such action as it may see fit to take on the bill.

In this connection, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I now submit, which is a routine resolution for the reference of a bill to the Court of Claims, to obtain this information for the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 152) was read, considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 1017) entitled "A bill for the relief of W. J. King" now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims pursuant to section 151 of the Judicial Code, as amended; and the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act and report to the Senate, giving such conclusions as shall be sufficient to inform Congress of the nature and character of the demand, either as a claim, legal or equitable, or as a gratuity against the United States, and the amount, if any, legally or equitably due from the United States to the claimant; and the said court shall so proceed with the same and report to the Senate, irrespective of any statute of limitations bar, and irrespective of any administrative requirement as to filing claim therefor.

THE GLOBAL ALPHABET (S. DOC. NO. 49)

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present and have printed as a Senate document a manuscript entitled "The Global Alphabet" by former Senator Robert L. Owen, of my State of Oklahoma.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the manuscript presented by the Senator from Oklahoma will be printed as a Senate document.

REPORT OF BERMUDA CONFERENCE ON THE REFUGEE PROBLEM

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to incorporate in the RECORD at this point in my remarks a release which has been agreed upon by the American and British Governments in the same general terms, in connection with the recent Bermuda conference on the refugee problem.

There being no objection, the release was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The delegates appointed by the American and British Governments to confer at Bermuda upon the refugee problem have now terminated their discussions and have submitted a report to their respective Governments. The two Governments have received this and are at present engaged in carrying out its recommendations. Throughout the discussions at Bermuda the United States and British delegations as well as the two Governments worked in complete harmony and in a spirit of mutual cooperation. The report was submitted as a joint report and contains no divergence of opinion.

While the details must be regarded as confidential so long as a knowledge of the recommendations contained therein would be of aid or comfort to our enemies or might adversely affect the refugees whom all are trying to aid, certain facts may now be made public.

The two delegations accomplished the useful task of dividing suggestions and proposals for the solution of the refugee problem into two categories: (1) What was possible under existing war conditions, and (2) what was impossible under these same conditions.

All suggestions were measured by two strict criteria. In the first place, nothing could be recommended that would interfere with or delay the war effort of the United Nations, and, secondly, any recommendation submitted must be capable of accomplishment under war conditions.

The shipping problem was recognized to be of the utmost urgency and it was agreed that any plan looking to the diverting of Allied shipping from the war effort to remove or care for refugees would present considerations of a military character which would disclose almost insuperable difficulties. It was also agreed that no negotiations with Hitler could be undertaken since his entire record has left no doubt that he would only agree to such solutions as would be of direct aid to the Axis war aims.

The conference was, however, able to recommend measures both for removing refugees from neutral countries and, in those cases where such removal was not possible, for giving assurances of international cooperation in the future of the refugee problem so far as it affected them.

It also recommended a number of temporary refugee havens to which refugees could be transported and maintained if and when shipping should become available. At least one such movement has been effected.

Certain measures of a financial nature to cover necessary expenses and a declaration of intention to provide for repatriation upon the termination of hostilities were also recommended.

The conference also submitted a plan for an expanded and more efficient intergovernmental organization with increased authority to meet the problems created or likely to arise under war conditions.

Some of these measures are now being put into effect and others, it is hoped, will soon be possible. It is therefore believed that the practical results of the recommendations submitted by the conference will soon become apparent.

THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. The routine morning business is concluded.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of measures on the calendar to which there is no objection, beginning with Calendar No. 208.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield, if I have the floor.

FLOODS AND FOOD PRODUCTION—BUTTER AND OLEOMARGARINE

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I desire the attention of the Senate for a few moments in relation to the matter of food production throughout the country. Senators may have noticed in reading the newspapers today that throughout Indiana and other sections of the United States floods are taking a tremendous toll. We heard the Prime Minister of Great Britain, Mr. Winston Churchill, yesterday vividly describing the work of the Royal Air Force in attacking certain areas in Germany and destroying dams, thus flooding great acreages and driving some 150,000 persons out of their homes. During the present spring season all over the United States nature has gone on a rampage. In certain areas there have been serious droughts. In other sections we are now having great storms. The result is that the production of foodstuffs has been delayed, and the question is what the percentage of loss will be compared to the total production. This situation, Mr. President, calls for serious consideration on the part of everyone.

There came to my desk this morning a letter from one of our county agents saying that in the area he represents the farmers are in need of farm help and that many of the old folks on the farms who thought they could get through this period are now giving up. I sent that letter to one of the Government departments in Washington and hope that a remedy will be found.

Mr. President, today I received a letter from the Wisconsin Cheese Makers Association, at Plymouth, Wis. Plymouth, of course, is known all over the country as one of the great centers for the production of that important food. My attention has been called to the fact that less milk is now being produced than was produced a year ago. Butter production is below the production of last year, and the trend of production is downward. The production of Cheddar cheese is 24 percent below the 1942 production. Some sections of the United States are showing as much as 63 percent less production of Cheddar cheese than a year ago. It has been estimated that Wisconsin will produce about 19 percent less Cheddar cheese this year than last. It is not simply a question of fields which should be in production, but we find a great production front—to wit, the cow—which is not producing as it should. This is a subject which merits consideration by Congress. I have said as much on previous occasions.

In this connection, Mr. President, I wish to call attention to something which was placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 17 by a colleague of mine, Hon. REID F. MURRAY, Representative in Congress from the Seventh Wisconsin Congressional District. He called attention to the fact that one Edward Sard, an employee of the O. P. A., a graduate of Cornell, 29 years of age, was going through the Middle West—think of it, Senators—this young man whom we are paying under O. P. A. was going through the Middle West using public funds to promote the idea or advisability of the people of the Middle West eating oleomargarine instead of butter.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] has the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. I should like to have submitted to the Senate for action my unanimous-consent request that we proceed to the consideration of unobjected-to bills on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky has made a request for unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the call of the calendar beginning with calendar No. 208.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky yielded to me, and I shall take but a short time.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thought the Senator from Wisconsin had concluded.

Mr. WILEY. No. I shall not take very long. I expect the usual courtesy to which a Senator is entitled. I thought we had arrived at the point where, if a Senator obtained the floor, he was entitled to proceed.

Mr. BARKLEY. I propounded a unanimous-consent request to take up the calendar, but that request has not as yet been acted upon.

Mr. WILEY. Will the Senator let that request bide a wee.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will let it abide; I do not know whether I will let it bide a wee.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I have already yielded to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. CONNALLY. I ask the Senator from Kentucky to yield so I may ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; I yield for that purpose.

Mr. CONNALLY. As I understand, the Senator from Wisconsin is denouncing oleomargarine.

Mr. WILEY. No.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator is complaining that someone has to eat oleomargarine instead of butter from Wisconsin. I should like to call the Senator's attention to the fact that scientific analyses and statistics show that oleomargargine does not have tuberculosis, nor does it catch it either in the form it is caught by the cow or the milk which comes from the cow. [Laughter.] The producers of oleomargarine contend that it has been discriminated against by the Government by reason of the imposition of discriminatory taxes in order to try to force butter down the throats of people who may not want it. So I want to express my resentment at the Senator's attack on one of the staple vegetable products of this land, healthful and invigorating. Those who try it usually prefer it to old, greasy, sour butter which has been retreated two or three times to make people think it is fresh. I wanted the RECORD to show that I resent this attack on a great industry of this country.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I am surprised at the distinguished Senator from Texas, who usually exercises much wisdom in his statements on the floor, but who now shows his ignorance in no small manner about the value of butter. I have not attacked oleomargarine. I am attacking a policy of government which will permit taking the people's money and using it to send out agents to propagandize one article which is produced in this country as against another article produced here. I say again that the Senator from Texas either was deaf or dumb, or simple; he did not hear what I said on the subject. What I said was that the O. P. A. sent out one of the little eastern boys who graduated from Cornell recently, one of the chaps who come out with initials after their names, but no experience in life, and no knowledge of the real problems which confront the people of the country, to instruct our people what to eat.

Mr. President, I do not have to apologize for butter. I say that when the Government sends one of its agents into the West, and pays his salary and permits him to become a propagandist in favor of one product which is made out of cottonseed and against the product that comes from the udder of the cow, then Government becomes a menace to society. That is the point I was making.

Mr. President, I am extremely sorry that the distinguished citizen from Texas interjected into this picture the element of filth——

Mr. CONNALLY. The element of what?

Mr. WILEY. Of filth, I repeat, at the time I spoke of the product of the cow. For centuries the cow has been the mother of the race. Its product has nourished the babe and the man. And because I object to Government using the people's money, which you, Mr. President, and I and the people on the farm contribute, to send forth into the West for purposes of propaganda a little lad who recently came out of college, who probably never saw a cow—because I object to that procedure is no reason why the distinguished Senator from Texas should attempt to jump on the cow. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. Yes; I shall be very happy to yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Wisconsin complains because the Senator from Texas was speaking in behalf of a product from his section. Yet this whole colloquy arose by reason of the Senator from Wisconsin reading from a letter he received from a cheese factory in his State of Wisconsin complaining about the situation that now exists. I was deeply touched by the Senator's reference to the cow as being the mother of the race, and in view of the Senator's speech I may also suggest that the cow is the mother of lots of "bull." [Laughter.]

Mr. WILEY. I am very happy to hear that bit of Socratic wisdom from the gentleman from down by the Rio Grande. If there is any place in the world where they handle bull, it is that section. Bull comes from that section, both literally and figuratively; and we have seen it here. In the last 4 years and 6 months I have seen no "bull" peddling exponent greater than my distinguished friend.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. I think the bull factory is the range of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN] where 19 bull calves came in quick succession and only 1 heifer calf. I say to the Senator that I need not defend that cow. I have many cows in my own State; and I think the Senator forgets one great truth about the source of both oleomargarine and butter—namely, that both have one common source of production. Oleomargarine comes from cottonseed which comes from green grass, and the milk in the udder of the cow also comes from green grass. They both come from green grass which comes from Republican air and sunshine; is not that true? [Laughter].

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I will not disagree with that conclusion, and I am sure the Senator from Texas will not disagree. I want to make it clear, and I think the RECORD will demonstrate it, that I said nothing obnoxious or obscene about the State of Texas. I even like the "bull" which comes from the other side of the aisle. It is real "bull." Generally it is clear-sighted and goes to the point.

Mr. President, let us see just what the situation is.

Does the dairy industry want oleomargarine abolished? Decidedly not. Oleomargarine has its place, but that place is not as an imitation of butter, which is simply—and I am speaking of butter—the fatty constituent of milk separated by agitation after a lactic fermentation in the cream. Oleomargarine is not butter. It has its own characteristics, just as butter has its own characteristics and color.

Even under the new standards, oleomargarine will not contain certain fatty saturated acids which, according to a widely known biochemist of the University of Wisconsin, are exceedingly important to the growth of human beings. What the dairy industry wants is to see that oleomargarine is definitely sold on its own merits, that it does not masquerade as butter, and that its sales are not promoted by government—I repeat, promoted by government—to the detriment of the post-armament dairy market. In this age of synthetics and ersatz products, that is a problem which may confront other segments of agriculture; and that is why all agricultural interests are concerned with this precedent, and that is why the public is also concerned.

Mr. President, millions of persons are engaged in the dairy industry, producing milk and butter and cheese, and millions more are engaged in handling the products thereof; and government, which is supposed to lend a helping hand, instead employs such standards and promotional methods as this to interfere with the established right of this segment of the farm industry.

Nothing that I said today can be interpreted as a personal attack upon any other industry.

We know that oleomargarine—whether it is fortified or not—does not contain certain specific saturated fatty acids which are important to growing individuals.

But, with Representative MURRAY, I say, "Why is O. P. A. using public funds for such a purpose?"

Mr. President, I now ask to have incorporated in the RECORD at this point and appropriately referred the resolutions adopted by the Wisconsin Cheese Makers' Association, at Fond du Lac, Wis., on April 15, 1943. I shall leave the matter of "throwing the bull" to the Senator from Texas.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I

Whereas subsidies have been, and are now being, paid to producers for a twofold purpose—first, to effect prompt increase in the production of essential products; and second, a means of preventing inflation; and

Whereas since December 1, 1942, a subsidy has been paid on all Cheddar cheese to the producers of milk used in the manufacture thereof; and

Whereas current reports indicate the failure of the subsidy to increase production and the amount involved insufficient to affect, much less prevent, inflation: Therefore

Resolved, That the cheese makers of Wisconsin, manufacturers of over half of the Nation's cheese, urgently recommend the immediate removal of the subsidy on Cheddar cheese and raising the ceiling price to at least 28 cents per pound; and

That this recommendation be promptly forwarded to the proper Federal officials.

II

Whereas cheese in general, and Cheddar cheese in particular, have been projected into the spotlight of selected foods by this emergency because of their valuable food elements, advantages in shipping space, keeping qualities, palatability and potential production, and consequently subjected to regulatory measures intended to accomplish a variety of objectives—the subsidy to increase production, the set-aside order to assure Government requirements and equalize the obligation of sellers and rationing to insure equalization of consumer supplies, all of which require the preparation of separate monthly reports of production coupled with deliveries; and

Whereas these reports could be simplified and much valuable time saved the cheese maker if they were based on the month's production without affecting their accuracy: Therefore

Resolved, That we recommend revision of present cheese factory production reports by eliminating the deliveries during the month and report only the month's production.

III

Whereas it has become necessary in the conservation of critical materials to standardize and simplify all manufacturing equipment, and a committee of the War Production Board is now studying all types of equipment for the purpose of recommending the standardization thereof, including cheese factory equipment; and

Whereas it appears the standardization of certain cheese factory equipment will neither conserve materials nor labor in the manufacture thereof, and will directly interfere with the efficient and economic equipping of cheese factories: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the cheese makers of Wisconsin respectfully petition the Special Standardization and Simplification Committee of the War Production Board for opportunity to be heard before action is taken changing the present standards of cheese factory equipment, and that the proper officials be informed of the action taken at this conference; and further, that our sincerity of purpose and desire to aid the war effort be tested by examination of our record of production.

IV

Whereas producers delivering milk to cheese factories customarily get their families' cheese requirements at the cheese factory and records show such requirements in the past do not exceed 1 percent of the factories' total production; and

Whereas such factory patrons must hereafter surrender ration points for all cheese, thereby adding more clerical work to the cheese-makers' steadily increasing labors: Therefore

Resolved, That we recommend that cheese factories be permitted to sell or deliver cheese to patrons of the plant in an amount not exceeding 1 percent of the total production without the surrender of ration points.

V

Whereas the Federal Government has authorized the purchase of cheese on the Wisconsin Cheese Exchange and is now buying thereon; and

Whereas there is doubt as to the policy to be followed in the future;

Resolved, That this conference of Wisconsin cheesemakers record its confidence in the Wisconsin Cheese Exchange and urge the Food Distribution Administration to continue buying thereon for the duration of their purchase program.

ORDER FOR CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] has requested that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected-to measures on the calendar, beginning with Calendar No. 208. The request calls for unanimous consent. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HILL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BALL in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Ellender	Overton
Andrews	George	Radcliffe
Austin	Gerry	Reed
Bailey	Gillette	Revercomb
Ball	Green	Reynolds

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. SCRUGHAM[are absent, attending the funeral of the late Representative Englebright, of California.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] is out of the city conducting hearings on behalf of the Special Committee to Investigate the National Defense Program.

The Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] are necessarily absent.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. THOMAS] is absent because of the death of his wife.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HAWKES] and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] are necessarily absent.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, my colleague the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] is absent in Detroit, Mich., where he is attending to his duties as a member of the Truman committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

WAR LABOR BOARD DECISIONS

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the Senate adopted Senate Resolution 130, directing the War Labor Board to furnish certain information respecting the decisions made by that Board. The information furnished, Mr. President, in my judgment, was totally inadequate. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD a letter I have written to Mr. W. H. Davis, Chairman of the War Labor Board, at Washington.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MAY 20, 1943.

Hon. W. H. DAVIS,
War Labor Board, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. DAVIS: With respect to your letter of May 10 and with reference to the report filed by the War Labor Board on that date responding to Senate Resolution 130, asking for certain information from the War Labor Board, I wish to state that by careful analysis of the report made to the Senate, it is clear to me that the information furnished was neither adequately nor properly submitted in compliance with the direction of the resolution. In addition to the information given to the Senate by your report of May 10, the following information requested was omitted:

First. A statement of the changes expressed in amounts in the basic hourly rates of wages and the average weekly earnings which have resulted from your decisions and orders in the case of each employer or industry affected thereby.

The Senate directed you to submit a list of all decisions and orders with the name and address of each employer or industry affected and a statement showing in each instance the changes that resulted from your order in the basic hourly rates and the average weekly earnings. Your report gives only the average change in basic hourly rates, while the resolution specifically requests the changes in the hourly basic rates for each industry or employee. It follows that with the change in the hourly basic rate of wages in each case decided by the War Labor Board, the average weekly earnings can be fairly accurately estimated, as you say.

Second. The Senate resolution requests a definition of policy upon which substandard wages and inequalities have been decided, together with illustrative examples of decisions made in conformity with such policy. The report submitted does not clearly give such a definition, which is of primary importance to establish the policy of the Board in such decisions.

Third, the resolution further requested a statement of each individual case, with reasons therefor, in which wage increases have been authorized or provided by the Board, which constitute a departure from the so-called Little Steel formula.

This was not given. Your report is not by any means adequate to provide the basis for a clear understanding of the effect of the decisions of the War Labor Board, nor does it enable a checking of the actions of the Board so as to determine the full effect of such decisions.

Your statement that the wage adjustments approved by the War Labor Board have had only a microscopic effect upon prices cannot be determined without full and complete information in each individual decision as made by the Board. It is, of course, true that a decision made by the War Labor Board establishes a precedent just as does a decision made by the Supreme Court of the United States, and that when such a decision is made, a number of voluntary wage increase requests by employers may follow, because the War Labor Board has already given a decision in a case that may be on a comparable basis. Therefore, it cannot be assumed that the effect of the decisions of the War Labor Board are confined only to those instances when a controversy is submitted as between employees and employers.

Resolution 130 passed the Senate unanimously, and I ask that the information which was omitted in your report be promptly furnished in a supplemental report.

With best wishes, I am,

Cordially yours,

HARRY F. BYRD.

CONTINUATION OF FARM PROGRAMS

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point an article entitled "Idle Acres Will Help Enemies, F. S. A. Head Says," published in the Landsford (N. Dak.) Leader; also, a letter from Arthur T. Boyd, secretary and treasurer of the Medora Grazing Association, of Medora, N. Dak.; and a letter from Engel A. Stafne, son of the former railroad commissioner of North Dakota, written from Hettinger, N. Dak., under date of April 20, 1943, together with an article entitled "FSA Has Successful Year."

There being no objection, the articles and letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Landsford (N. Dak.) Leader]

IDLE ACRES WILL HELP ENEMIES, FARM SECURITY ADMINISTRATION HEAD SAYS

The patch of ground that could produce food but is not in production is doing its bit for the enemy, believes George E. Lawrence, county Farm Security supervisor for Bottineau County. Its failure to produce robs America and the Allies of just that much food energy and makes it just a speck easier for Japan, Germany, and Italy to fight us effectively.

Idle acres is a name applied to productive land not in production, or only in partial production due to "scrap farming" practices. Bottineau county has its quota of such acres, according to reports from farmers who are lining up to put these acres to work. Perhaps the farmer himself is the only one who knows about his idle acres. Maybe his neighbors know about them. Lawrence believes there are hundreds of idle acres in this county—acres wholly or partially idle. The State total runs into hundreds of thousands of acres. Every idle acre is a potential threat to the success of the war effort. Although idle acres constitute a national problem, they are first of all a local problem. Correction of the evil is entirely local, a problem for the home folks to take care of. The farmer himself has the best chance to change idle acres into fighting acres.

The Secretary of Agriculture has asked each community to help fight the idle acre menace. The county United States Department of Agriculture war board is directed to assist in mobilizing such land in each community for maximum productive use. County and community Agricultural Adjustment Administration committeemen are asked to keep a weather eye open for productive pieces of land in their own neighborhoods that need attention. They are using their own initiative to work out adjustments to put this land into full production. Cases they cannot handle are to be reported to the county war board, then the board will help locate people who will farm the acres. When necessary, the board can finance operations through available loan programs, and can help operators obtain labor or machinery if that is what it takes. All member agencies of the war board, the extension agent, Farm Security Agency county supervisor, and others, are helping in the program. The county war board selects a member to serve as a clearing center for farmers with idle acres they cannot farm themselves and for those who could sell them.

The county Farm Security supervisor is expected to aid a great deal, Lawrence said, because he has much to do with tenure problems, group services, and loan supervision.

MEDORA GRAZING ASSOCIATION,
Medora, N. Dak., May 6, 1943.

Hon. WILLIAM LANGER,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. LANGER: It has been brought to my attention that the House has passed the agricultural appropriations bill, eliminating parity payment, incentive payments, crop insurance, and greatly restricted soil-conservation payments and loans on war-risk crops.

As I understand this bill, it restricts any one cooperator from earning through these various means more than $500. In a broad sense, this appears justified, and no doubt it would eliminate continuance of some undesirable features of the program, but in our particular case, and no doubt in others similar to ours, it creates a different picture.

Two years ago we earned through compliance with the Agricultural Adjustment Act approximately $2,500. This money was earned and spent for the construction of dams, well, springs, etc. This work was done on lands leased by the association from various sources, namely, railroad, State school, county, nonresident-owned, etc. We earned only $720.20 last year, due to the shortage of labor and materials.

This summer we plan on drilling an artesian well, development of several springs, and the construction of as many dams as time, labor, and our allowance will permit. If we are restricted to the maximum amount of $500, we will be unable to accomplish any of this. The water developments made through compliance with the Agricultural Adjustment Act are used in common by our 148 members and forty-odd temporary permittees.

It is for the above-mentioned reasons that we would like to see this bill amended making it possible for nonprofit cooperative associations such as ours to continue to improve and develop a sound conservation and utilization program and at the same time make any desired adjustments that may be needed to the agricultural program.

I do not wish to convey to you the idea that we are asking for special favors or privileges not granted to other citizens. I am writing to you only to explain how this restriction would affect us.

We fully realize the responsibilities placed upon you and Congress and the sacrifices necessary to ordinary operations for the successful prosecution of the war and realize that this matter is controversial in all respects, and we ask that you give this your usual careful consideration when this bill appears before the Senate.

With thanks and personal regards, I remain,

Very truly yours,

ARTHUR T. BOYD,
Secretary and Treasurer.

HETTINGER, N. DAK., April 20, 1943.

Hon. WILLIAM LANGER,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR LANGER: I have served on county committees of many different Federal agencies and have been on the Farm Security Administration Rural Rehabilitation Committee since 1936.

My observation has been that the local community, county, State, and Federal Governments have received greater returns from the Farm Security Administration loans than from the money spent by any other Federal or State agency and respectfully ask your help and cooperation to have the appropriation for the Farm Security Administration continued.

Sincerely yours,

ENGEL A. STAFNE.

FARM SECURITY ADMINISTRATION HAS SUCCESSFUL YEAR

Obert Thorson, Chairman of the Farm Security Administration Rural Rehabilitation Committee, reports that since the beginning of the fiscal year July 1, 1942, 17 standard-loan borrowers and 21 emergency-loan borrowers have paid their loans in full. Total collections from July 1, 1942, to March 1, 1943, amount to $67,860.35. From the beginning of the Farm Security Administration program to March 1, 1943, 286 nonstandard and 42 standard borrowers have paid their loans in full and 21 of the 42 paid-up standard borrowers own their farms, he stated.

From July 1, 1942, to March 15, 1943, seven new standard loans have been made to farm families who had no other source of credit. These loans were made largely for livestock and poultry, which will help to produce essential war foods. The standard borrowers, according to their 1943 farm and home plans, expect to produce the following percentages in comparison with 1942 actual recorded production:

	Percent
Calves to be dropped	116
Pigs to be farrowed	146
Eggs to be produced	113
Butterfat	115
Chickens to be raised	141
Cows to be milked	117
Acres of garden	129
Vegetables to be canned	145
Fruit to be canned	161
Potato acreage	136
Flax acreage	337

These borrowers, believes Mr. Thorson, will show the greatest gains in production—first, because they are on family-size farms and utilize their own labor; second, because in the past they have not been properly equipped with machinery, livestock, wells, and buildings; third, there has been lack of food reserves; fourth, the family labor was not fully utilized; fifth, because many are sharing equipment and labor and reducing cost by buying cooperatively.

Ninety percent of the low-income farmers, when properly assisted with equipment, livestock, and tenure, will not only repay their loans but will be substantial citizens of the community. Of the 42 standard paid-up loans, 24, or 57 percent, will be paying Federal income tax this March. Of the 90 present standard borrowers, 28, or 30 percent, will be paying Federal income tax this year.

This over-all picture, based on facts, remarked Mr. Thorson, speaks well for the usefulness of the Farm Security Administration.

I AM AN AMERICAN DAY CELEBRATION AT PHILADELPHIA—DANGER OF POLLUTION AND FLOOD FROM SCHUYLKILL RIVER

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, on Sunday last I had the distinct privilege of addressing an I Am an American Day gathering of some 20,000 citizens in the great city of Philadelphia. On that day 1,500 men and women who stood among that throng received their citizenship papers—a clear title to the most precious of all possessions—citizenship in the Republic of America.

There in the city of Philadelphia, that historic landmark of American history, those 1,500 men and women, like those venerable men of another age who signed those immortal documents of human liberty, the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States, turned their backs upon the oppression and tyranny of the old world and went forward to embrace a new world—a world of freedom, justice, and equality. There in the shadows of Independence Hall, which enshrines the Bell of Liberty which first pealed out its toll of freedom more than a century ago; there where such undying patriots as Jefferson, Franklin, Hancock, and Washington struck their great and resounding blows against compulsion and took up for themselves and for their fellows a citizenship in America—that land where liberty, tolerance, and growth still abide; there in the city of Philadelphia, the essence of America stands enshrined forever in the works and deeds of immortal men.

I have stood in the great square of Philadelphia on many another occasion; but truly, Mr. President, there has never been another occasion like that. All America was assembled there. Men and women of all races, creeds, and colors were gathered there—dressed in the garbs of the respective nations from whence they came to take up the mantle of citizenship in America. Those people were immigrants and descendants of immigrants. They were Catholic, Protestant, Jew, and gentile. They were old and young. They were merchant and banker, soldier and worker. They were at once the diversity and strength of an America united.

There in that crowd the courageous faith of those honored dead who built America was more than justified. There the productive powers of an industrious and thrifty people gave ample credence to the impassioned claims of Alexander Hamilton that only when enterprise is free, only when the paths of progress are open to all, will men achieve unto the utmost of their talents. Mighty are the blows which free enterprise has struck against oppression and regimentation. But none more mighty than those which are being struck today as the materials of war, produced by free labor and free management in the free economy of America, speed to the battle fronts of the world in ever-increasing numbers, there to rain blow after blow upon the distraught and harried forces of tyranny and aggression. This is a crisis for all men, but the free-enterprise system in America has shown that it can overwhelm the efforts of all other economies combined. The men and women gathered under the shadow of the flag stood grateful that those who founded this Republic founded with it an economy based upon free enterprise. For they know and we all know that the creations of free enterprise will sustain our liberty and redeem the world.

Those citizens felt the rich wisdom and high courage which men like Washington and Jefferson displayed when they proclaimed the majesty of the individual man. For here in this land, unfettered by the yoke of regimentation, the people of America remain sovereign and supreme. No power, no force, no issue can strike them down, nor depose them of the constitutional rights which have helped them to a stature of attainment unequaled in all the world. Freedom of religion has kept them faithful and made them tolerant. Freedom of person has kept them independent and made them cooperative. Freedom of the press has kept them informed and made them vigilant; and all these together have kept and shall keep them free.

Mr. President, a man without a country is a man without a destiny. But an American is a man whose own destiny and whose country's destiny are unlimited. For, as the march of freedom is eternal, so, too, is the march of America and its citizens eternal. One had only to look out upon that throng of American citizens to realize this truth. For they are the apostles and defenders of mankind. They march in the cause of justice. Theirs is the destiny of triumph—such a triumph as shall extend to all peoples and encompass all lands.

The truth of these words is spoken in the fact that among that crowd were 1,500 men and women who had just become citizens of this great Republic. It was a proud day for them, and it was a proud day for America. I am sure that those new citizens felt as my own father felt when he received his citizenship papers more than 60 years ago—a citizenship of which I have been the proud and fortunate beneficiary. His eyes shining and his heart proud, he held those papers up for all men to see and said, "This is the greatest diploma in the world; it is the latchkey to freedom and to progress." Today there are 1,500 new American citizens in the State of Pennsylvania; 1,500 more latchkeys to freedom and progress.

Those who have come here to embrace this citizenship—one of whom was Eugene J. Houdry, that enterprising American of French descent, who has developed a revolutionary process for making rubber out of oil—have come here to accept the opportunities extended by free economic enterprise, the enduring heritage of constitutional government, and the full responsibilities of complete American citizenship. For they know and we all know that these truths are eternal: That freemen shall liberate the world; and liberated, the world shall go forth into the peace and progress of a new, inspiring day.

I was privileged on that occasion, Mr. President, to tap the historic Liberty Bell 13 times in commemoration of those Thirteen Original Colonies which, in high resolve and deep determination, first took up the struggle for American freedom and independence more than a hundred years ago. As I felt and heard the vibrations of that great bell, I felt and knew something of the deep inspiration which the tolling of the bell had given to those honored American patriots of another day when its mighty peals first sounded "to proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof." Mr. President, the privilege of tapping out the call to freedom on this time-honored Liberty Bell is indeed a signal honor—such an honor as I who am a foreign-born American had never dared hope would ever come to me in my lifetime.

As I beheld this occasion, and as I listened to the inspiring remarks of Mr. Houdry and the other distinguished speakers, I was grateful to God that my parents had possessed the foresight and vision to leave the ways of the Old World behind and to take up their abode and secure their citizenship in this great land of freedom and opportunity which is America.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a copy of the address which I delivered on the occasion of I Am an American Day in Philadelphia on Sunday, May 16, 1943—an occasion which was admirably presided over by Mr. Charles Grakelow, director of the department of supplies and purchases for the city of Philadelphia—and an occasion which was heightened by the memorable addresses delivered by the Honorable Bernard Samuel, mayor of the city of Philadelphia and the Honorable John Bell, Lieutenant Governor of the State of Pennsylvania.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

It is with deep honor and abiding hope that I meet with you today—you citizens of America—you sons and daughters of freedom—who pause for a moment in this grave hour of crisis to pay homage to that greatest, most inspiring heritage that the minds of men have ever known—citizenship in the Republic of America.

The enduring history of this America is always brought home to me in all its awesome fullness whenever I come to the great city of Philadelphia. Here in this eternal monument to America, here where the spirit of the founding fathers still abides, here where the tolls of American liberty first resounded across the countryside, here where men and women alike first took up the fight for freedom and humanity, here in the very surroundings and spirit of the times the significance of America comes home to me.

More than a hundred years of human progress look down upon this citadel today—more than 100 years given to the building of hope and human decency in America. Here in those hundred-odd years people of every race, creed, and color have been welded together in an unshakable solidarity. Here under the empowering incentives of republican government, free enterprise, and productive competition this America has grown into the most powerful and enduring citadel of human rights and material progress that the world has ever known.

And well it has. For today that citadel stands imperiled—its principles, purposes, and validity challenged by the forces of tyranny and barbarism. Today, the American people are being called upon to vindicate democracy, to restore freedom, and to insure justice. Today, as in years previous, the American people have resolved to secure their freedom and to preserve their way of life.

The misguided and violent leaders of fascism have thrown down their gauntlet on the altar of war. They have cried out to the world: "America is doomed! Her people are soft. They cannot work. They will not fight. They grovel in the lap of luxury. They are decadent and dead. The forces of regimented power, under the unfailing leadership of one master shall destroy their world."

Oh, what travesty on prophecy were those words. What futile and aimless misconception of the power and purpose of freemen. What was a love of peace was taken by our enemies to be a fear of force. What was an abiding tolerance was presumed to be a lack of decision. What was an inner confidence was presumed to be a pervading weakness. Swathed in a sea of misconception, these diabolical demons unleashed the force and fire of their hellish fury upon the people of America. In a dastardly stroke of treachery which was Pearl Harbor, they sank our ships, they killed our men, and they laid waste our creations. But that America which was to fall asunder and cry out for mercy did not fall asunder and it did not cry out for mercy.

In the face of this infamy, the power of freemen, the power of America was mustered into an unswerving unity. This land of freemen went forward as it has always gone forward in the cause of right and justice.

And so it was that our great industrial empire built up over the years by the inspired hands and hearts of freemen turned toward the tasks of war. And so it is that in this short time those same men and women who were too soft to work are producing more of the implements of war than all the rest of the world combined. These men and women who toil in America are freemen; they are not shackled; they are not driven; they need no fuehrer. For theirs is the strength of freemen, theirs is the strength that has made and shall keep the world.

But it is not only on the production front that the power of freemen is being felt. Young American men from the field, the factory, and the forests have gone forward to meet the enemy. Theirs is not an army of professionals, schooled in the traditions of militarism and conquest; theirs is an army of the whole people, moving forward with the heartbeat of the Nation. They go forward to destroy the enemy, and they shall not fail.

Only this week in north Africa we beheld the force and power of freemen. There on the hills and plains of Tunisia a vast army of Hitler's supermen laid down their arms in abject surrender. When they were confronted with the righteous wrath of freemen, these German supermen, these Axis invincibles, quit cold. They surrendered. And they surrendered to that same generation of free Americans which the Axis had called poor weaklings.

Well, the Nazis and the Japs will meet more of these poor weaklings. They will meet them in Tokyo and Berlin. They will continue to meet them until those Axis brigands surrender themselves, their tanks, their guns, and all their war material. They will continue to meet them until the forces of America take that one thing—the only thing we want from our enemies—unconditional surrender.

These Axis leaders no longer question the ability of the American people to fight, for they have read the record—that glorious record written in the rock cliffs of Bataan, the steaming jungles of New Guinea, and the endless sands of north Africa. They shall continue to read that record until the final chapter is written with the outright capitulation of Toyko and Berlin.

As the Axis leaders no longer question the ability of America to fight, neither do they doubt our ability to work. For they have seen the creations of Americans at work, and they have trembled at the sight. They have seen our aircraft overhead. They have heard the whistling of our bombs as they loose destruction on the war plants of the Reich. They have beheld and felt the power of our tanks, guns, and aircraft in Africa, in Russia, in Britain, and in China. They see our ever-increasing naval and merchant fleets moving endlessly across the seas. They see all these things, and they shall see more. For these are the works of freemen, and they are limitless. Our enemies shall behold a constant flow of men, materials, and munitions which shall continue across the high seas of the world in an ever-ascending crescendo until the resultant force and power which shall be wrought upon them shall bring them down into an absolute, final, and overwhelming defeat. How can it be otherwise? Freemen have answered the challenge! Free Americans are in the fight.

It will not, it cannot, be otherwise. For this I Am an American Day finds all Americans standing, working, and fighting in one all-encompassing unity, and we shall stand in unity until the end. We shall each continue with high resolve at our appointed task. We shall let no issue, no grievance, no disaffection interfere with our great work even for a split second. For we Americans know that wars are not won and victories are not fashioned save on the anvils of unity and cooperation. We have that unity and we have that cooperation. And through them we shall redeem the world.

As we Americans stand in unity today, may we also highly resolve to stand in unity tomorrow. For in so doing we shall add immortal luster to the spirit and significance of this day. We shall make clear to the world that the skill, ingenuity, and determination of free Americans are united—to the end that this suffering, this injustice, this unbridled chaos shall never again rise up to plague the bastions of human liberty or the outposts of universal justice, and that all men shall go forward together in progress and in peace until the end of time.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Pennsylvania how much more time he expects to take. We have not even started the call of the calendar.

Mr. DAVIS. I shall take only 2 minutes longer.

Mr. BARKLEY. I hope the Senator will not take any longer. I wish to proceed with the call of the calendar. Senators are waiting to take action on the measures on the calendar.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, it was only after leaving this inspiring American Day celebration that I had occasion to learn of another, less inspiring adjunct to the city of Philadelphia. I speak now of the deplorable state of the Schuylkill River, part of whose waters are used to power many of the important industrial plants in the Philadelphia area, and part of whose waters are used for domestic consumption by a great number of the good American citizens in this area.

Now, Mr. President, by reason of the fact that this stream has been necessarily used by certain large industrial concerns as a dumping and draining ground, this very strategic region is faced with two imminent and menacing dangers—epidemics and floods. First, by reason of the tremendous amount of filth already dumped into this stream, the dangers of pollution to this necessary water supply are both obvious and alarming. Moreover, the continued accretion of silt and refuse has almost completely destroyed the channel of the stream—a condition readily conducive to serious and damaging floods.

If either of these disasters should occur—and, if present conditions continue, there is strong likelihood that one or both of them shall certainly occur—the war effort of this Nation, not to mention the safety and welfare of vast numbers of its citizens and many of its industries, would be in grave peril.

In this strategic area millions of dollars' worth of essential war materials are being produced every single day. Coal is being mined. Steel is being made. Ships are being built, and other war materials too numerous to mention are being fashioned in the many hundreds of industrial plants which mark this region. Should floods strike this area, the mine properties would be flooded; hydroelectric stations, which supply power to many war plants and buildings, would be damaged or washed away. Production would be halted, and the war effort of this Nation would be dealt a heavy and a serious blow.

Should an epidemic occur in this area, the effects would be very grave, indeed. It is a populous area. Homes are close together. Thousands upon thousands of people work side by side in great war plants. Schools, churches, and other public buildings, as well as all transportation facilities, are crowded to the utmost, bringing many thousands of people into close and almost constant personal contact. To fight an epidemic in such surroundings as these would constitute an almost insuperable task. Countless lives would be lost; homes would be broken; and the entire region clothed in a tragedy bordering upon complete ruin. Furthermore, the productive efforts of millions of skilled and ardent workers who reside in this area and produce the vast stores of war materials which flow from this area, would be threatened with a complete halt, and the war effort of the entire Nation would be seriously undermined.

While it is true that the Schuylkill River as such is completely confined within the borders of the State of Pennsylvania, and while, because of this fact, the control of the stream is regarded as purely a State matter, since the Federal Government concerns itself only with those streams which are interstate in nature, I should like to point out that the Schuylkill River has interstate ramifications of the first order, and that for the following reasons, the control and conditions of this stream should be subjected to the utmost scrutiny and concern of the Federal Government:

First. This river — the Schuylkill — flows into and is a tributary of the Delaware River, which, in turn, flows through three States—New Jersey, Delaware, and Maryland—before it empties into Chesapeake Bay. It is obvious that any pollution of the Schuylkill River might very easily lead to pollution of the Delaware River. Such pollution would extend the probable danger of epidemic throughout the heart of one of the most populous and productive regions on the entire Atlantic seaboard—the States of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, and Maryland. An epidemic of those proportions would certainly be a matter of interstate concern, and a matter of concern to the Federal Government.

Second. The products which are fashioned by the power generated by the Schuylkill and the products transported on that river are concerned not only with interstate commerce, but with international commerce as well, for many of the products which it carries are the very sinews of war which are finding their way across the oceans of the world to numerous and far-flung battle fronts where our citizens and allies are fighting the battles which shall liberate the world. These materials and these battles are certainly a matter of concern to the Federal Government.

Mr. President, I submit that it is a sad and stinging commentary on the war effort of the United States that the Federal Government lifts not a hand to correct the grievous conditions which now attend the Schuylkill River, and which bid fair to undermine the health and welfare of the many millions of American citizens who are dependent upon this river for the very water which they drink. I submit also that it is neither wise decision nor legal necessity which permits these conditions to go uncorrected, for one day a raging flood may rise up from this very stream and blackout a considerable portion of this Nation's productive strength—a strength sorely needed by us and by our allies in this hour of peril.

Mr. President, these people and these industries are serving their Government to the utmost of their abilities in the present crisis. Their ingenuity, skill, and toil are given to the fashioning of the materials of war which are so necessary to the attainment of that complete and final military victory which their Government has pledged itself to attain in the great military struggle which now engulfs the world. Is it asking too much of that Government, Mr. President, to request that action necessary to protect the health and welfare of these American citizens, as well as to secure the continued productivity of these industries be taken—especially in view of the countless millions of dollars which have been appropriated to that Government for this and related purposes?

Mr. President, I ask that immediate action be taken by this Government to resolve the serious problems which the Schuylkill River in its present condition poses for the millions of patriotic American citizens in the Philadelphia area.

THE CALENDAR

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair). Pursuant to the order heretofore entered, the clerk will proceed to state the measures on the calendar, beginning with Order No. 208.

CONSERVATION AND UTILIZATION OF THE PACIFIC SALMON FISHERIES

The bill (S. 74) to assure conservation of and to permit the fullest utilization of the salmon fisheries of the Pacific and for other purposes, was announced as first in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, this bill and the one which follows, which affect the crustacean resources of the country, were prepared by the Fish and Wildlife Service, and recommended by the Special Committe on the Conservation of Wildlife Resources. They are bills to conserve the salmon industry on the coasts and the crustacean resources along the Gulf, the Atlantic, and the Pacific coasts. I have filed a full report from the committee. A similar bill passed the Senate last year without any objection. It was too late, however, to be acted upon in the other House, though the House committee reported favorably upon it. That is the reason the bills are on the calendar at the present time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 74) to assure conservation of and to permit the fullest utilization of the salmon fisheries of the Pacific and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Special Committee on the Conservation of Wildlife Resources, with an amendment, on page 3, line 18, after the words "license or permit", to insert a semicolon and the words "and may make such other regulations as may be found necessary for carrying out the provisions of this act", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act shall be known by the short title of the Pacific salmon fishery law.

SEC. 2. That in order to assure conservation of and to permit the fullest utilization of the salmon fisheries of the Pacific consistent with the maintenance and reasonable development of such fisheries from year to year—

(a) It shall be unlawful at any time, by any means, or in any manner, to fish for, or catch, or attempt to fish for, or catch any salmon, or any species thereof, found in the offshore waters of the Pacific coast south of 50° north latitude, unless and except as permitted by regulations made, as hereinafter provided; and

(b) It shall be unlawful to land on or bring into any place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, for any purpose whatsoever other than for personal use, any salmon, or any species thereof, taken in the waters of the Pacific Ocean south of 50° north latitude, unless and except as permitted by regulations made as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 3. That subject to the provisions of this act, and having due regard to the distribution, abundance, economic value, natural history, and the times of occurrence and recurrence of such salmon as are found normally in the waters heretofore referred to, the Director of the Fish and Wildlife Service, Department of the Interior, is authorized and directed to conduct such investigations as may be necessary to determine when, where, to what extent, if at all, and by what means the fishing for, or capture of, any such salmon or species thereof may be permitted, and to what extent, if at all, the landing on or bringing into any place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States of salmon taken in the waters of the Pacific Ocean south of 50° north latitude may be permitted, and to adopt regulations from time to time permitting and governing the same in accordance with such determinations, which regulations shall be effective when published in the Federal Register.

SEC. 4. That the regulations herein provided for shall (a) divide the offshore waters of the Pacific coast into fishing areas; (b) require, without discriminating between those eligible, every person, company, corporation, or association engaged in fishing to obtain a license or permit prior to engaging in such operations; (c) require the owner of any vessel or boat employed or engaged in the fishery industry to obtain a license or permit covering the use of the same; and may (d) specify the number and type of boats, nets, and other gear or apparatus that may be employed in each fishing area; (e) specify reasonable terms and conditions of such permits or licenses, including a provision for temporary suspension or revocation thereof for violation of the provisions of this act or regulations authorized hereunder; (f) require the payment of a fee of not to exceed $5 for any such license or permit; and may make such other regulations as may be found necessary for carrying out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 5. That any person, company, corporation, or association establishing, in accordance with reasonable requirements to be prescribed by the Director of the Fish and Wildlife Service, that he was actually engaged in fishing, during any of the calendar years 1939, 1940, 1941, or 1942 with any boat, net, or other gear or apparatus, the maximum number of which is specified by regulation authorized under this act, shall be entitled to file, prior to January 25, 1943, application for a permit or license to fish with such boat, net, or other gear or apparatus, and the Director, subject to the provisions of this act and any regulations authorized hereunder, shall grant such permit or license. If, subsequent to January 25, 1943, and in succeeding years, the Director shall determine that additional permits or licenses may be issued, he shall give public notice of such determination, and application for such additional permits or licenses may be received up to February 15 of that year, and shall be issued for each area by lot from among the applications complying with the requirements prescribed by the Director.

SEC. 6. That every person, company, corporation, or association engaged in catching salmon in the offshore waters of the Pacific coast shall make such detailed reports thereof to the Fish and Wildlife Service of the Department of the Interior, on blanks furnished by it, as the Director of the Fish and Wildlife Service shall deem necessary to determine the distribution, abundance, economic value, and natural history of such salmon.

SEC. 7. (a) That within 20 days after publication in the Federal Register of any regulation adopted by the Director of the Fish and Wildlife Service, any person, company, corporation, or association whose fishery operations, including employment, are affected directly by such regulation, shall be entitled to have the same reviewed by the Secretary of the Interior in accordance with such reasonable procedure as the Secretary shall prescribe, including the right of both the applicant and the Director to appear in person or by representative to introduce pertinent evidence and to be given a reasonable opportunity to be heard.

(b) The Secretary of the Interior shall have authority to affirm, set aside, modify, or refer back to the Director for modification in conformity with his decision, any regulation that shall be found unreasonable for carrying out the purposes of this act and his decision shall be final.

(c) It shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to render a written decision upon each and every matter presented to him in accordance with the provisions of this section within 20 days after the presentation thereof.

SEC. 8. (a) Any person, company, corporation, or association violating any of the provisions of this act or of any regulations made under authority of this act shall be fined, upon conviction thereof, for each offense, and each day's continuance of such a violation shall constitute a separate offense, not more than $5,000 nor less than $50, or shall be imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or may be fined and imprisoned, or both.

(b) All fish taken or captured contrary to the provisions of this act or of any regulations made pursuant thereto, shall be forfeited; upon a second violation, any vessel, boat, gear, or other apparatus used in capturing or taking such fish may be forfeited and all fish so captured or taken shall be forfeited; upon a third violation by any person, company, corporation, or association of any provision of this act or of any regulation made pursuant thereto, any vessel, boat, gear, or other apparatus used in the capturing or taking of such fish and such fish shall be forfeited.

SEC. 9. That any employee of the Department of the Interior authorized by the Secretary of the Interior to enforce the provisions of this act shall have power, without warrant, to arrest any person committing a violation of this act or of any regulations issued pursuant to the provisions of this act in his presence or view and to take such person immediately for examination or trial before an officer or court of competent jurisdiction; and shall have power to execute any warrant or process issued by an officer or court of competent jurisdiction for the enforcement of the provisions of this act. The several judges of the courts established under the laws of the United States, and the United States Commissioners, may, within their respective jurisdictions, upon proper oath or affirmation showing probable cause, issue warrants in all such cases. All fish taken or captured and any vessel, boat, gear, or other apparatus used or which may be used in the capture or taking of fish, or any species thereof, contrary to the provisions of this act or of any regulations made pursuant thereto may, when found, be seized by any such employee, or by any marshal, or deputy marshal, and subject to the provisions of subsection 8 (b) of this act, upon conviction of the offender or upon judgment of a court of the United States that the same were captured or taken, used, or capable of use, contrary to the provisions of this act or of any regulation made pursuant thereto, shall be forfeited to the United States and disposed of as directed by the court having jurisdiction: Provided, That any such fish, vessel, boat, gear, or other apparatus seized as aforesaid shall be released upon the posting of a bond in lieu thereof in the value of the thing so seized as fixed by the court having jurisdiction.

SEC. 10. That it shall be unlawful for any person to deliver or knowingly receive for transportation, or knowingly transport, by any means whatsoever, from any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, to or through any other State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or to or through any foreign country, any salmon or any species thereof, if such salmon has been either caught, killed, taken, sold, purchased, possessed, or transported, at any time, contrary to the law of the State, Territory, or the District of Columbia in which it was caught, killed, taken, sold, purchased, or possessed, or from which it was transported; and no person shall knowingly purchase or receive any such salmon which has been transported in violation of the provisions of this section; nor shall any person receiving any shipment of salmon transported in interstate commerce make any false record or render a false account of the contents of such shipment.

SEC. 11. That the violation of any provision of this act may be prosecuted in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction of the defendant. And it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to enforce the provisions of this act and the rules and regulations made thereunder. It shall be the duty of the United States attorney to whom any violation is reported by any agent or representative of the Department of the Interior to institute proceedings necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 12. That there is authorized to be appropriated, from time to time, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the Fish and Wildlife Service of the Department of the Interior, such amounts as may be necessary to carry out the provisions and to accomplish the purposes of this act and regulations made pursuant thereto, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, out of such moneys, to employ in the city of Washington and elsewhere such persons and means as he may deem necessary for such purpose and may cooperate with other Federal agencies and with local authorities in the protection, preservation, and development of the salmon fisheries of the Pacific Ocean and make the necessary investigations connected therewith.

SEC. 13. That nothing contained in this act shall be construed to affect any existing treaty or convention to which the United States is a party.

SEC. 14. That if any clause, sentence, paragraph, or part of this act shall, for any reason, be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, such judgment shall not affect, impair, or invalidate the remainder thereof, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph, or part thereof directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered.

SEC. 15. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INVESTIGATION AND SURVEY OF CRUSTACEAN FOOD RESOURCES

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 11) providing for an investigation and survey of certain crustacean food resources of the United States, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, through the Fish and Wildlife Service, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation and survey with respect to the life history and habits of shrimps, crabs, common lobsters, spiny lobsters, oysters, and commercial varieties of clams, their distribution in the coastal waters of the United States, the various methods by which they are caught or taken, their economic importance and value for food purposes, the causes of their depletion in recent years, and the most feasible and practical methods that may be used for their proper conservation in the public interest. The Secretary of the Interior shall report annually to the Congress the results of such investigation and survey, together with his recommendations, if any, for necessary legislation.

SEC. 2. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this joint resolution there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000.

AUTHORIZATION TO SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR TO SETTLE CERTAIN CLAIMS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 364) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to settle certain claims, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to accept the surrender of any lease issued pursuant to any of the provisions of the act of February 25, 1920 (41 Stat. 437; 30 U. S. C., sec. 181 and the following), or any amendment thereof, where the surrender is filed in the General Land Office subsequent to the accrual but prior to the payment of the yearly rental due under the lease, upon payment of the accrued rental on a pro rata monthly basis for the portion of the lease year prior to the filing of the surrender. The authority granted to the Secretary of the Interior by this act shall extend only to cases in which he finds that the failure of the lessee to file a timely surrender of the lease prior to the accrual of the rental was not due to a lack of reasonable diligence, but it shall not extend to claims or cases which have been referred to the Department of Justice for purposes of suit.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAYMENTS UNDER NONMINERAL LEASES OF PUBLIC LANDS IN ALASKA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 328) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior, because of military operations, to defer or waive payments under nonmineral leases of public lands in Alaska, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, to strike out the words "during the present national emergency" and insert "occurring prior to the end of 6 months after the termination of hostilities in the present war as proclaimed by the President, or such earlier date as the Congress by concurrent resolution may prescribe."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

CUMBERLAND GAP NATIONAL HISTORICAL PARK

The bill (H. R. 1896) to amend sections 1 and 2 of the act approved June 11, 1940 (54 Stat. 262), relating to the establishment of the Cumberland Gap National Historical Park in Tennessee, Kentucky, and Virginia, and to grant the consent of Congress to such States to enter into a compact providing for the acquisition of property for such park, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NOTICE OF INTEREST OF UNITED STATES IN REALTY OR PERSONALTY UNDER FACILITIES CONTRACTS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 215) to authorize the filing of certain notices to serve as constructive notice of the interest of the United States in realty or personalty under facilities contract, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, at the end of the bill to add a new section, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That as used in this act the term "governmental agency" means any executive department, commission, independent establishment, corporation, created, owned, or controlled by the United States or any agency thereof, board, bureau, division, service, office, authority, or administration, in the executive branch of the Government.

SEC. 2. In order to protect the interest of the United States under certain contracts without incurring the danger of disclosing information pertinent to war or defense through recording or filing such contracts in full pursuant to local laws, the governmental agency which is authorized to enter into and to file of record any contract which provides for the construction, acquisition, establishment, enlargement, or extension of facilities for or in connection with the manufacture, construction, reconstruction, reconditioning, outfitting, processing, handling, storage, or repair of articles, supplies, materials, or equipment of any kind (including, but not limited to, buildings, vehicles, aircraft, vessels, watercraft, machinery, machine tools, any parts or components thereof, or any spare parts, plans, or equipment therefor) and by which the United States, through any governmental agency, acquires an interest in realty or personalty owned by, or in the possession of, the other party or parties to such contract, may file a notice of such contract, whether heretofore or hereafter executed, in the office of the clerk of the district court of the United States for the judicial district in which the property is situated, or in the office of the clerk of the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, if such property is situated within said District. Each such notice shall contain the names of the parties, the date and Government file number of the contract, and a description of the realty, and a summary or generalized description or identification of the personalty, involved in such contract. Whenever any such notice shall have been so filed, a like notice shall also be filed in the office of record prescribed by the law of the State, Territory, or possession in which such property is located. Notices of any amendment, alteration, or modification in any such contract may be filed in the same manner as in the case of original notices.

SEC. 3. The filing of such notices shall serve as constructive notice that the property referred to therein is subject to an interest of the United States, and such interest of the United States shall be valid as against any right, title, or interest in such property acquired by any person subsequent to such filing.

SEC. 4. Whenever the interest of the United States in any property referred to in any such notice terminates, the governmental agency which filed such notice shall immediately file notices of the termination of such interest in the offices in which the original notices were filed.

SEC. 5. The provisions of this act shall remain in force and effect only until December 31, 1944.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXPEDITION OF PAYMENTS FOR LAND

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 919) to expedite the payment for land acquired during the war period, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment on page 3, line 2, after the words "December 31, 1944", to strike out ", or until such earlier time as the Congress by concurrent resolution, or the President, may designate.", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That, notwithstanding the provisions of the act of April 26, 1888, entitled "An act to facilitate the prosecution of works projected for the improvement of rivers and harbors" (25 Stat. 94; 33 U. S. C., sec. 591); section 2 of the act of August 1, 1888, entitled "An act to authorize condemnation of land for sites of public buildings, and for other purposes" (25 Stat. 357; 40 U. S. C., sec. 258); the act of July 2, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize condemnation proceedings of land for military purposes" (40 Stat. 241; 50 U. S. C., sec. 171), as amended; section 4 of the act of May 15, 1928, entitled "An act for the control of floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and for other purposes" (45 Stat. 536; 33 U. S. C., sec. 702d), or other provisions of law, in every case instituted in any court of the United States in the continental United States and Alaska, except the District of Columbia, for the condemnation of property, or any interest therein, by the United States, any department, agency, commission, or board thereof, or Government-owned or Government-controlled corporation, except the Tennessee Valley Authority, the issues shall be determined only by the court: Provided, however, That any party may demand a trial by jury of the issue of compensation by filing with the clerk of the court a demand therefor in writing at any time after the commencement of the condemnation proceeding and not later than 10 days before the trial. In the event that a jury trial is demanded, the jury shall be selected and impaneled as in other civil actions.

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect upon its approval and shall apply in all cases hereafter instituted and in all pending cases except those in which the commissioners or other persons by whom the amount of compensation is to be determined shall have been appointed and qualified and shall have entered upon the performance of their duties.

SEC. 3. The provisions of this act shall remain in force and effect only until December 31, 1944.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 875) to provide for the preparation of high-school students for wartime service was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

USE OF AMERICAN NATIONAL RED CROSS IN TIME OF ACTUAL OR THREATENED WAR

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 676) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the use of the American National Red Cross in aid of the land and naval forces in time of actual or threatened war," which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That effective from December 5, 1941, the act of April 24, 1912 (37 Stat. 90; 36 U. S. C. 10, 11), entitled "An act to provide for the use of the American National Red Cross in aid of the land and naval forces in time of actual or threatened war," is amended to read as follows:

"That whenever in time of war, or when war is imminent, the President shall find the cooperation and use of the American National Red Cross with the land and naval forces to be necessary, he is authorized to accept the assistance tendered by the said Red Cross and to employ the same under the land and naval forces in conformity with such rules and regulations as he may prescribe.

"SEC. 2. That when the said Red Cross cooperation and assistance with the land and naval forces in time of war or threatened hostilities shall have been accepted by the President, the personnel entering upon the duty specified in section 1 of this act shall, while proceeding to their place of duty, while serving thereat, and while returning therefrom, be transported and subsisted at the cost and charge of the United States as civilian employees employed with the said forces, and no passport fee shall be charged or collected for any passport issued to such personnel so serving or proceeding abroad to enter upon such service, and the Red Cross supplies that may be tendered as a gift and accepted for use by the land and naval forces shall be transported at the cost and charge of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MEMORIAL DAY FOR DECEASED FIREMEN—JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 26) authorizing the President to proclaim the Sunday before Memorial Day as a day for memorial services for deceased firemen was announced as next in order.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, apparently Senate Joint Resolution 26 was called up in the Judiciary Committee at a time when I was necessarily absent. I know that there was considerable objection to it in the committee. The committee, as a matter of policy, has unanimously frowned upon the addition of new memorial days.

I have been informed by one of the members of the committee that when action was last taken in the committee on this joint resolution the words "as a memorial to deceased firemen" were stricken from the joint resolution. I do not know whether that is a fact. I do know, Mr. President, that if we are to have a special memorial day, and this joint resolution is to apply to deceased firemen, I should wish to be recorded as being strongly in favor of suitable recognition of all the magnificent services which are rendered by firemen during the performance of their duties. However, I should equally hope that we might amend the joint resolution to include policemen and detectives. I believe we should also make some mention of our loyal school teachers and our faithful nurses.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask that the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PAY AND TRAVEL ALLOWANCES UNDER THE WAR DEPARTMENT

The bill (S. 966) to provide for the payment in advance of pay and travel allowances to persons in or serving with the military and naval service and to civilian officers and employees in or under the jurisdiction of the War Department was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I should like to ask for an explanation of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator who reported the bill [Mr. CHANDLER] is not now present in the Chamber, and the bill will be passed over for the time being.

Mr. CHANDLER subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to revert to Senate bill 966, which was passed over a few moments ago.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I inquire what is the calendar number of the bill?

Mr. CHANDLER. It is Calendar No. 222, Senate bill 966.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, if I may obtrude my opinion, I think it is more logical to complete the call of the calendar consecutively, then return to bills, consideration of which is desired.

Mr. CHANDLER. This will take but a moment. I wish the Senator would not object.

Mr. McNARY. I think I might wish to ask some questions about the bill. It disturbs the sequence of the order to leave the calling of the calendar and go back under unanimous consent to some bill which has been passed over.

Mr. CHANDLER. It will take but a moment.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator will not have to wait long. The moment the Senator is now occupying is only putting off the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Connecticut has concluded.

Mr. McNARY. I think the other practice is very much better, and I will cooperate with the Senator after a moment.

Mr. CHANDLER subsequently said: Mr. President, I repeat the request I made a few moments ago, that the Senate recur to Calendar No. 222, Senate bill 966.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, when the able Senator from Kentucky proposed returning to this bill a moment ago, I objected, and I shall always object to breaking into a call of the calendar for such purpose, but in this instance I am advised that the Senator is compelled to leave the Chamber on important public business, and that being an emergency situation, I shall not persist in my objection.

Mr. CHANDLER. I appreciate the statement of the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 966) to provide for the payment in advance of pay and travel allowances to persons in or serving with the military and naval service and to civilian officers and employees in or under the jurisdiction of the War Department or the Navy Department under certain conditions, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, during the present war and for 6 months thereafter, under such regulations as the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, not to exceed pay for 3 months may be advanced to any person in or serving with the military or naval service and to any civilian officers and employees in and under the jurisdiction of the War Department and the Navy Department when ordered to or from sea duty, or to or from duty at any place beyond the continental limits of the United States, and to and from Alaska. Any such person traveling under orders outside of the United States and entitled to expenses of subsistence or per diem in lieu thereof may be advanced an amount for such expenses or per diem in lieu thereof, as authorized by law and his orders, for a period equal to the estimated time of absence from the United States, not exceeding 1 year. Any excess advanced under this act over and above the actual amount legally due, if not otherwise refunded, may be collected from any amounts otherwise due or accruing from the United States to the person to whom the advance was made.

SEC. 2. Necessary adjustments of advance payments made under authority hereof shall be made on subsequent vouchers and pay rolls and any overpayments to persons no longer in the service of the United States and occurring solely by reason of payments made under authority of this act, if proper and timely efforts have been made to collect, or provide for collecting, any excess over amounts legally due, shall be passed to the credit of, or shall not be charged in the accounts of, the disbursing officers involved.

UTILIZATION FOR WAR PURPOSES OF GOVERNMENT-OWNED SILVER—BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 35) to authorize the use for war purposes of silver held or owned by the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, in behalf of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] and myself, I wish to make a statement.

I am sure that all Senators from the so-called silver States favor the passage of Senate bill 35 at the earliest possible date. However, some time ago the House passed what was called the Celler amendment to the Treasury and Post Office appropriation bill, which would practically repeal the present silver legislation. The Senator from Nevada is working with Members of the House leadership and is making fair progress in his efforts to have the Celler amendment stricken from the appropriation bill.

I have talked with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY], who is a member of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, regarding Senate bill 35, sponsored by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], and I understand that he has kindly agreed to allow the bill to go over for the present in the hope that during the day, or by tomorrow, the Senator from Nevada will know definitely what can be done with regard to the Celler amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection, the bill will be passed over.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, in this connection I should like to say that my acquiescence in the request of the distinguished Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] and the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK] was given with great reluctance. This measure is one of much importance. The departments in Washington that are in need of the authorization to provide sufficient silver for the war effort have been constantly pressing the Senator from Connecticut, as have others. The bill was unanimously reported by the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, and subsequently by the full committee.

There is, as I understand, no objection to the bill; but, unfortunately, there is a situation particularly disturbing Senators from the so-called silver States. I am very hopeful that the Senator from Nevada will come to a realization of his hopes today, because I intend to try to move, not later than Monday next, that the Senate consider this proposed legislation which is very important to our war program.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. President, we are fully cognizant of the situation and are just as anxious as is the Senator from Connecticut to have the bill passed. I think, not later than Monday, that can be done.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, in my opinion, one statement just made is not substantiated by the facts. I refer to the statement that the departments downtown are in need of this proposed legislation in order to make silver available to the war effort. That is not, as I understand, correct.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. MALONEY. The statement I made is correct. Whether or not the departments need the silver I cannot be absolutely certain, but they have advised me and other members of the committee that they need it very badly and at once. So I assume the Senator is not saying that my statement is incorrect.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. No; I make the statement to this effect: That there is no legislation needed to enable the Treasury Department to make available to the War Production Board all the silver that is necessary for the purposes of that Board. The proposed law is not necessary, for the obvious reason that the Treasury Department has already made available to the War Production Board approximately a billion and a half ounces of silver, and every department of the Government that wants silver and can show a need for silver is getting silver. So there is no particular need for this bill, and there is no pressure being exerted upon Congress to pass it in order to get the silver, for the silver is already available.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. MALONEY. The Senator has just stated that the departments of the Government are able to get all the silver they require if they can prove a need for it. I am not sure that covers the situation with which we are confronted. There are many industries engaged in the war work that have a great need for silver, and I am wondering if the Senator from Oklahoma is excluding that particular group?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. No; not at all. I understand that the silver industry are getting the silver they need. If they can make a showing that it is necessary in their business to have the silver they are getting it. Not only are they getting the silver, but the War Production Board is getting the silver it needs for use in making and fabricating machinery, planes, and necessary war equipment. Not only that, but the foreign nations that need silver for coinage purposes are getting it, and foreign nations that want silver for use in the manufacture of equipment for war purposes are likewise getting it.

I am not objecting to the passage of this bill, I will say to the Senator from Connecticut, but I did not want the RECORD to show that the failure to pass the bill was holding up any necessary use of our stock of free and unobligated silver.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. MALONEY. I think technically the able Senator is correct, that up to this moment they are getting silver, but the supply of available silver is dwindling so very rapidly that in a matter of days, so I am advised, the situation, without the passage of this bill, might become very acute.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, under the present policy the only silver the Treasury Department wants to retain is the silver which is used as backing for the outstanding currency in the form of silver certificates. We have in circulation now something over $1,900,000,000 of silver certificates and the Treasury Department is holding as a backing for those certificates silver to the extent that is necessary on the basis of its monetary value of $1.29 an ounce. That leaves free or unobligated silver in the Treasury that has heretofore been accumulated under the Silver Purchase Act of almost 1,500,000,000 ounces. The Treasury Department can use all that silver that it deems proper and in the public interest under existing law because it is free and unobligated. The silver that is being furnished to foreign governments is on a loan basis—that is, the silver loaned is to be returned ounce for ounce. The silver being used domestically is, in the main, in a nonconsumptive manner, hence the silver to be used will not be destroyed and will be reclaimed and returned to the Treasury.

I repeat, I am not objecting to the passage of this bill and shall vote for it upon final passage, but I wanted to make this statement for the RECORD.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, are the departments able to get the silver at the prices fixed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair). The time of the Senator from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I shall be very glad to answer the question of the Senator from Louisiana if I can do so by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. How much time does the Senator from Oklahoma ask?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Merely sufficient time to answer the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator from Oklahoma may proceed.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. They are now able to get the silver at the prices and under the conditions specified in the bill.

COMMISSIONED RANK FOR WARRANT OFFICERS IN THE NAVY, MARINE CORPS, AND COAST GUARD

The bill (S. 973) to amend sections 2 and 4 of the act approved June 27, 1942, entitled "An act to authorize the appointment of commissioned warrant and warrant officers to commissioned rank in the line and staff corps of the Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that Calendar No. 256, House bill 2587, is identical with the Senate bill.

Mr. WALSH. I ask unanimous consent that the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill and be now considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2587) to amend sections 2 and 4 of the act approved June 27, 1942, entitled "An act to authorize the appointment of commissioned warrant and warrant officers to commissioned rank in the line and staff corps of the Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard, and for other purposes."

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, at that point I rise to ask the Senator from Massachusetts how long it is intended the operations of the proviso contained in the bill may be availed of?

Mr. WALSH. This bill is an amendment to previous legislation which permits warrant officers to apply for commissions in the Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard within a certain period of time if they come within the age limit prescribed. It has developed that certain warrant officers who are eligible to take advantage of the law are in remote sections of the world and have not been able to make application within the time specified. This bill simply permits such officers who have had the misfortune to be located where they could not make application or as to whom the age limit had been passed to make application as provided by the original law.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. As I read the proviso, it says that if such warrant officers are, because of service conditions, unable to present themselves or even to apply for appointment or examination prior to June 27, 1943, they would, under this proposed act, be permitted later so to apply. Having applied, let us say, in the fiscal year 1945, is it the intention of the Senator or the department which sponsors the bill that commissions granted in the fiscal year 1945 shall date back to June 27, 1943, and the men so commissioned shall be allowed to take rank as of that date?

Mr. WALSH. In my opinion, yes. If a warrant officer is stationed somewhere in the Pacific Ocean, away from the central government, had no knowledge of the original law and was unable to communicate his wishes, the pending bill would permit such an officer, who would otherwise be denied that right, under regulations prescribed by the Navy, to make application, to be given the rank he was entitled to and would have had, if he had been in America and was within the age limit.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. The bill is not limited to a certain period, but proposes permanent legislation. Assume a state of facts where, let us say, war has been concluded by July 1, 1945, would it then be the Senator's understanding that warrant officers who by virtue of service conditions were unable to present applications before June 27, 1943, should have their commissions date back to this year?

Mr. WALSH. It is my opinion that they would, and that they should. If, by reason of causes beyond their control, there was delay in making their application, they should not be denied the right as warrant officers to receive commissions providing they meet the requirements of age and of education.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment to be offered, the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 973 will be indefinitely postponed.

PENALTY FOR VIOLATION OF NAVAL REGULATIONS

The bill (S. 995) to provide a penalty for violation of regulations or orders with respect to persons entering, remaining in, leaving, or committing certain acts within or upon vessels, harbors, ports, and water-front facilities was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whoever shall enter, remain in, leave, or commit any act within or upon any vessel, harbor, port, or water-front facility, contrary to any regulation or order for the security or protection thereof, promulgated or approved by the Secretary of the Navy, pursuant to authority conferred upon him by any Executive order or proclamation of the President, shall, if it appears that he knew or should have known of the existence and extent of the regulation or order and that his act was in violation thereof, be liable to a fine of not to exceed $5,000 or to imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both.

REORGANIZATION OF THE MARINE CORPS

The bill (S. 1064) to provide for the reorganization of the Marine Corps, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I know nothing of this bill other than what is contained in the title printed in the calendar. I should like to have the able Senator from Massachusetts, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, discuss the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, first of all, we should have an identical House bill substituted. I move that House bill 2583, Calendar No. 258, be substituted for the Senate bill, and be now considered.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2583) to provide for the reorganization of the Marine Corps, and for other purposes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the bill has for its purpose a coordination and consolidation of certain activities connected with administration in Headquarters, United States Marine Corps. It would abolish the Office of Adjutant and Inspector and the Adjutant and Inspector's Department, and transfer the functions of that department to a director of personnel, Marine Corps.

The bill authorizes the appointment of a line officer on active duty in the Marine Corps to be director of personnel. Funds now available to the Office of Adjutant and Inspector are transferred to the newly created director of personnel. It also authorizes necessary changes in the administration of the Marine Corps to streamline the functions into the newly created office. Inconsistent or conflicting laws are repealed.

By placing the activities of the existing Adjutant and Inspector's Department and of certain other independently operating divisions in Marine Corps Headquarters under one head, a redistribution of duties will be accomplished that will effect a saving in personnel and will eliminate duplication of certain records and files that are now necessitated by the existing administrative organization.

The various sections of the Adjutant and Inspector's Department will be regrouped and reorganized with the existing Division of Recruiting, the Division of Personnel, and the Division of Reserve under one administrative head.

A study of the proposed reorganization by the management engineers of the Navy Department indicates that the proposed organizational change in headquarters will effect a saving in personnel.

The enactment of this bill will result in no additional cost to the Government.

Mr. McNARY. There is no over-all reorganization of the Corps intended?

Mr. WALSH. Not at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 1064 will be indefinitely postponed.

ALLOWANCES TO MIDSHIPMEN OF THE NAVAL RESERVE

The bill (S. 1067) to amend the first paragraph of section 10 of the Pay Readjustment Act of 1942 to provide for allowances to midshipmen of the Naval Reserve for quarters and subsistence when not furnished in kind was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first paragraph of section 10 of the Pay Readjustment

Act of 1942, approved June 16, 1942 (56 Stat. 363; 37 U. S. C. 110), is hereby amended by adding after the period at the end thereof the following:

"Midshipmen of the Naval Reserve when not furnished quarters or subsistence in kind shall be granted the same allowance for quarters and subsistence as is granted hereunder to enlisted men not furnished quarters or rations in kind."

PAYMENTS UNDER CONTRACTS FOR HEAVY ORDNANCE

The bill (S. 972) to amend section 7 (c) of the act of May 21, 1920 (41 Stat. 613), as amended by section 601 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 417), was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 7 (c) of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes," approved May 21, 1920 (41 Stat. 613), as amended by section 601 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 417; 31 U. S. C. 686), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(c) Orders placed as provided in subsection (a) shall be considered as obligations upon appropriations in the same manner as orders or contracts placed with private contractors. Advance payments credited to special working funds shall remain available to the procuring agency for entering into contracts and other uses during the fiscal year or years for which the appropriation involved was made and thereafter until said appropriation lapses under the law to the surplus fund of the Treasury."

SEC. 2. Section 8 of the act approved June 22, 1936 (49 Stat. 1648), is hereby repealed.

EXTENSION OF BITUMINOUS COAL ACT

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask, out of order, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 253, House Joint Resolution 122, to extend the provisions of the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937 for a period of 90 days. The joint resolution was reported unanimously from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and, as I understand, there is no objection to it, and I ask for its consideration at this time because I have to leave the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCFARLAND in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana?

Mr. MCNARY. The Senator's statement complies with what I believe to be the best practice. If the Senator can demonstrate to me that an emergency exists involving the public service, I shall be willing to accede to his wish.

Mr. WHEELER. I have to leave the Chamber immediately, since several persons are waiting for me right now in connection with a hearing, and I was wondering if we could not take up the joint resolution out of order.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is referring to a meeting before the Committee on Interstate Commerce?

Mr. WHEELER. No; a number of people are waiting in my office in reference to a hearing in one of the departments in this city on a very important matter.

Mr. MCNARY. I think that statement takes the case out of my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 122) to extend the provisions of the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937 for a period of 90 days was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Vice President be authorized to sign, during the adjournment of the Senate following today, the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 122) to extend the provisions of the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937 for a period of 90 days.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

LT. (J. G.) SVEND J. SKOU

The bill (S. 397) for the relief of Lt. (J. G.) Svend J. Skou, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the retired pay of Lt. (J. G.) Svend J. Skou, United States Navy, retired, shall be three-fourths of the highest pay of his grade: Provided, That no back pay or allowances shall be held to have accrued under the provisions of this act prior to the date of its enactment.

SIMPLIFICATION OF NAVAL ACCOUNTING PROCEDURE

The bill (S. 1065) to abolish certain naval trust funds and deposits thereto, and simplify naval accounting procedure, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Calendar No. 257, House bill 2584, is an identical bill and, without objection, will be substituted for the Senate bill and will be now considered. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2584) to abolish certain naval trust funds and deposits thereto, and to simplify naval accounting procedure, and for other purposes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to amend the bill by adding to the House bill section 3 of the Senate bill, and renumbering section 3 of the House bill to read section 4.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, after line 19, it is proposed to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 3. Commencing June 30, 1944, there shall be deducted from the pay of each person in the naval service on the last day of each fiscal year the sum of $2.40, to be deposited into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 20, after "Sec.", to strike out "3" and insert "4."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 1065 will be indefinitely postponed.

CONSTRUCTION OF HOSPITAL AT ST. LAWRENCE, NEWFOUNDLAND

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 16) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to construct and the President of the United States to present to the people of St. Lawrence, Newfoundland, on behalf of the people of the United States a hospital, dispensary, or other memorial, for heroic services to men of the United States Navy, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to undertake the construction at St. Lawrence, Newfoundland, of a hospital, dispensary, or other memorial, such authorization to include the acquisition of land necessary therefor, at a cost of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to effectuate the purposes of this joint resolution.

SEC. 2. The President of the United States is authorized to present such hospital, dispensary, or other memorial to the people of St. Lawrence, Newfoundland, in token of appreciation of the United States of America to the people of St. Lawrence, Newfoundland, of their heroic action in saving the lives of officers and men of the U. S. S. Pollux and the U. S. S. Truxtun, wrecked near St. Lawrence in the year 1942.

REIMBURSEMENT OF ENLISTED MEN FOR LOSS OF PROPERTY ON THE "HUGH L. SCOTT"

The bill (S. 954) for the reimbursement of certain enlisted men of the Navy for personal property lost in the loss of the Hugh L. Scott, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the aggregate sum of $462.25, to reimburse certain enlisted men of the Navy for the loss of their personal property, as herein next provided, to wit: The sum of $268.50 to reimburse Donald Robert Leighton, water tender, first class, United States Navy, and the sum of $193.75 to reimburse Libero Quiero, machinist's mate, first class, United States Navy, for the value of personal property on board the Hugh L. Scott lost by them, respectively, as a result of the loss of the Hugh L. Scott on or about November 18, 1942, in the north African action: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

REIMBURSEMENT OF LT. COL. FRANK P. SNOW

The bill (S. 1086) to provide an additional sum for the payment of a claim under the act entitled "An act to provide for the reimbursement of certain Navy and Marine Corps personnel," was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum or sums, amounting in the aggregate not to exceed $1,333.33, as may be required by the Secretary of the Navy to reimburse, under such regulations as he may prescribe, Lt. Col. Frank P. Snow, United States Marine Corps, for the value of personal property lost or damaged in the hurricane and flood at Parris Island, S. C., on August 11-12, 1940: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with these claims, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

JACK LECEL HAAS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 391) for the relief of Jack Lecel Haas, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon persons honorably discharged from the United States Navy, their widows, children, and dependent relatives, Jack Lecel Haas shall be held and considered to have been discharged with a good discharge, under honorable conditions on April 27, 1928: Provided, That no pension, pay, bounty, or other benefit shall be held to have accrued prior to the enactment of this act by reason of its enactment.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts tell us what a "good" discharge is? In line 7 of the bill it appears that this particular claimant would be held entitled to a "good" discharge. Is there something technical or descriptive about the use of that language?

Mr. WALSH. There are several forms of discharge, as the Senator knows. There is an honorable discharge, a dishonorable discharge, a discharge for the good of the service, a discharge for physical disability, a discharge at the request of the applicant in the service. This man was given an unsatisfactory discharge, and the Navy Department, feeling it made a mistake, has submitted this bill to the Committee on Naval Affairs to correct its own error, and to give this enlisted man a "satisfactory" or "good" discharge.

Mr. DANAHER. The man is not being reenlisted in the Navy, is he?

Mr. WALSH. No; he is not.

Mr. DANAHER. Apparently he was discharged for falsification of his enlistment record.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; he said he was not married, when in reality he was married.

Mr. DANAHER. He said that only a week after he had been married. Moreover, within a very short time thereafter he asked to be discharged on the ground that his wife was dependent on him. Yet the facts are that she was trying to get a job, and under the civil-service rules could not get a job unless her husband was not providing support for her. I am wondering whether the term "good" discharge means that it is good for something special from the Treasury. I should not like to think that as a matter of policy we were making this man the only holder in the whole world of a "good" discharge.

Mr. WALSH. It means it is not a dishonorable discharge.

Mr. DANAHER. Does it mean that he is going to be entitled to benefits under the Veterans' Administration law?

Mr. WALSH. If he can make out a case; yes.

Mr. DANAHER. It is stated in the report that it is probable that the Veterans' Administration would be involved. What is the man's physical condition now that might entitle him to some special relief, perhaps?

Mr. WALSH. I personally do not know. The Navy Department, in reviewing this man's application and case, reached the conclusion that on all the facts he was entitled to a discharge of a different character from that given to him. It is their recommendation, and it is upon their recommendation that the bill has been reported.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 375) for the relief of the Phoenix-Tempe Stone Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. DANAHER. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

MAJ. GEORGE E. GOLDING

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 426) for the relief of Maj. George E. Golding, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment on page 1, line 11, to strike out "$2,175.76" and insert "$2,161.31", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to George E. Golding, major, United States Marine Corps, retired, who was relieved from active duty because of physical disability on August 2, 1941, and who was returned to active duty for the period from November 12, 1941, to April 1, 1942, for appearances before a board of medical survey and a Navy retiring board, the sum of $2,161.31, representing pay and allowances for such period of active duty: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES T. DULIN

The bill (H. R. 761) for the relief of Charles T. Dulin was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MEADOW BROOK CLUB

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1001) for the relief of the Meadow Brook Club, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, at the end of the bill to add a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to settle and adjust the claim of the Meadow Brook Club, of Westbury, Long Island, N. Y., for reimbursement of the cost of removing a 160-foot flagpole from its premises on or about December 20, 1941, at the request of the commanding officer at Mitchel Field, and to allow in full and final settlement of the claim not to exceed $500. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the payment of the claim: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DR. DOUGLAS E. LAWSON

The bill (S. 929) for the relief of Dr. Douglas E. Lawson was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Work Projects is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money available for the payment of compensation to officers and employees of the Work Projects Administration, to Dr. Douglas E. Lawson, of Carbondale, Ill., the sum of $134.50, in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for payment of the unpaid portion of the compensation agreed upon for the services rendered by him during the Wyoming Adult Education, Recreation, and Nursery School Workers Training Conference held at the University of Wyoming, Laramie, Wyo., from August 18 to 30, 1941, inclusive: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 897) to amend the act known as the Insecticide Act of 1910 (36 Stat. 331), approved April 26, 1910, was announced as next in order.

Mr. O'DANIEL. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

CONSTRUCTION OF CERTAIN AUXILIARY VESSELS FOR THE UNITED STATES NAVY

The bill (H. R. 1563) authorizing the acquisition and conversion or construction of certain auxiliary vessels for the United States Navy, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, that is a House bill. Is it similar to the bill immediately following, Senate bill 1066? I notice that both bills provide for acquisition and conversion or construction of certain vessels.

Mr. WALSH. No, Mr. President. House bill 1563 provides for authorizing the acquisition and conversion or construction of certain auxiliary vessels. The bill following on the calendar would authorize the acquisition and conversion or construction of certain landing craft and special boats for the United States Navy. One bill provides for authorization in connection with certain auxiliary vessels and the other for a new type of landing boats which are used for invasion.

Mr. McNARY. Will the Senator discuss the two bills briefly?

Mr. WALSH. I shall be glad to do so. First of all, as the Senate knows, auxiliary vessels are vessels of various types which are auxiliary to the combat vessels of the fleet. They consist of auxiliary aircraft carriers, ammunition ships, refrigerator ships, mine sweepers, transports, evacuation transports, rescue tugs, tank landing ships, tankers, repair vessels, hospital vessels, and supply vessels which at sea supply the naval vessels with the fuel and necessities of transportation which they would receive from shore if they were in a harbor.

Bills of this nature frequently come before Congress. By the act of June 14, 1940, we authorized the construction of 75,000 tons of these vessels. Money has been appropriated under that authorization, and all the vessels constructed. On June 19, 1940, an act was passed providing for the authorization of 100,000 tons of vessels. By the act of May 24, 1941, we provided for 550,000 tons. By the act of December 17, 1941, we provided for 800,000 tons, and by the act of July 9, 1942, we provided for 1,200,000 tons.

Mr. McNARY. What is the authorization in money requested under House bill 1563, and also under Senate bill 1066, which immediately follows it on the calendar?

Mr. WALSH. Approximately $1,250,000,000 for this bill and approximately $1,700,000,000 for the next bill. Let me say a word about the type of vessels provided in the other bill, Senate bill 1066. In this bill landing craft and district craft are authorized. Landing craft are a new type now employed by the Navy. They are the vessels which have been designed and are being constructed for the purpose of landing soldiers upon foreign soil. They are of a particular type which can be run ashore on a beach, and the invaders, whether they be marines or of the Army, can land from them. They also carry ashore the invaders' war paraphernalia. Already some of these vessels have been built. Heretofore they have been built under a general authorization, without any specific authorization being made for this particular type of vessel. This is the first time an authorization is asked of Congress for the Navy to pursue a program of building such landing boats.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I may say to my colleague that quite recently I had the privilege of seeing the personnel that are manning the landing craft which are referred to in this bill. This is a new and adventurous service in which the Army and Navy work together in the most complete brotherly union. It embraces men from all the different States of the Union, and I am glad to take advantage of this opportunity to pay my compliments to them, and thank the Senator for giving me this opportunity to do so.

Mr. WALSH. As my colleague knows landing from boats against enemy opposition is one of the most hazardous undertakings of the war. I venture to say that possibly several Senators have received a few requests from enlisted men, and perhaps also from officers in this particular branch of the service, asking for transfers. The service of manning these small boats is not one which is particularly congenial to all officers and enlisted men, and it is considered to be very hazardous and dangerous. My colleague very properly commends the type and personnel who are undertaking this most difficult and most dangerous and most hazardous part of the whole war effort. The personnel, I agree, is doing a fine job and is entitled to high commendation. It is important that these vessels be built as speedily and quickly as possible, in view of the constant assertion that we are preparing to open up a new front in Europe.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1563) authorizing the acquisition and conversion or construction of certain auxiliary vessels for the United States Navy, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, line 9, after the word "conversion" to insert the following proviso: "Provided, That the authority contained in this section shall be limited to the tonnage authorization contained in section 1 hereof and to similar authorization heretofore or hereafter enacted."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] has an amendment to the bill which he desires to offer.

Mr. BAILEY. I send forward an amendment to House bill 1563, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 1, after the word "which", it is proposed to strike out the words "was heretofore or."

Mr. BAILEY. I wish to take a moment to explain the amendment. The effect of the amendment when we strike out the word "heretofore" is to strike out the retroactive effect of the proposed legislation.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I am disposed to accept the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina, because he raises a question on which there is a difference of judgment between the Maritime Commission and the Navy Department. I informed the Senator that I thought an effort ought to be made, if possible, to bring together these two Departments of the Government, and that therefore I would accept the amendment and allow it to go to conference, where it might be possible to hear both parties.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in connection with the bill which has just been passed, I should like to have printed in the RECORD at this point a memorandum which the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] will have a chance to peruse later.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE NECESSITY FOR SECTION 2

Several months ago the Navy Department drafted a bill authorizing the President of the United States to acquire and convert or to undertake the construction of 1,000,000 tons of auxiliary vessels for the Navy. This proposed bill was forwarded to the Bureau of the Budget with the request that the Navy Department be authorized to submit this bill to the Congress for its consideration. The officials of the Bureau of the Budget did not approve of the Navy Department's request. Senators know that the Navy Department is not authorized to request the Congress to enact legislation or to make appropriations without receiving prior approval of the Bureau of the Budget.

A Member of the Congress obtained a copy of the proposed bill and introduced it on his own initiative. This bill was passed unanimously by the House of Representatives. The House also adopted an amendment which provided that the Navy should have the sole right to the possession of vessels built or acquired for it by the Maritime Commission.

The officials of the Bureau of the Budget were convinced that the Navy Department needed an additional million tons of auxiliary vessels for the effective prosecution of the war. Instead of following the usual procedure in authorizing the Navy Department to request the Congress for legislative authority to construct or acquire these vessels, they proposed that the Maritime Commission or the War Shipping Administration transfer or loan vessels to the Navy Department, and that additional funds be requested of the Congress to build additional ships for the Maritime Commission. It is understood that the decision of the officials of the Bureau of the Budget to follow this method of procuring additional vessels was based upon a proviso contained in an appropriation act approved July 25, 1942, which reads as follows: "Provided, That when vessels are transferred or assigned permanently by the War Shipping Administrator to other departments or agencies of the United States Government for operation by them, funds for the operation, loading, discharging, repairs, and alterations, or other use of such vessels may be transferred from the War Shipping Administration fund to the applicable appropriations of the department or agency concerned in such amounts as may be approved by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget."

Senators know that the normal procedure established by the Congress is as follows: The legislative committees of the two branches of the Congress consider, and the two Houses then enact legislative authority to undertake certain projects. The Appropriations Committees of the two Houses thereafter recommend and the two Houses appropriate the necessary funds for the construction of these projects. The decision of the Budget Bureau to transfer or loan vessels built for or acquired by the Maritime Commission or the War Shipping Administration to the Navy Department circumvents the procedure established by the Congress. If the decision of the Bureau of the Budget is allowed to stand it will mean that the Naval Affairs Committees of the two Houses, the Navy Department, and the Congress itself will have little or no control over the Navy's auxiliary ship programs. It means, furthermore, that the control of naval auxiliary vessels will be to a great extent in the hands of the civilian officials of the Bureau of the Budget and the civilian officials of the War Shipping Administration and the Maritime Commission.

The purpose of section 2 of the present bill is to reestablish the normal procedure giving Congress and the Navy Department control of the Navy's auxiliary ships by requiring that the Navy Department obtain legislative authority to construct auxiliary vessels and thereafter obtain the necessary funds to build these vessels from the Appropriations Committees of the Congress and by providing that the Navy Department shall have the sole right to possession of all vessels built or acquired for it by the Maritime Commission.

When hearings were held on the bill by the Senate committee the Chairman of the Maritime Commission requested that the word "heretofore," on page 2, line 2, be deleted from the bill. The Navy requested that this word be retained in the bill. If the word "heretofore" is deleted from the bill it will mean that the Navy Department may or may not have the right to sole possession of the vessels built for it by the Maritime Commission between the dates of July 25, 1942 (the date of the act under which the officials of the Bureau of the Budget deem that they have a right to control the Navy's auxiliary ship program) and the date of the approval of this act. If the word "heretofore" is retained in the bill it will mean that the Navy Department will have the right to sole possession of all vessels built for it by the Maritime Commission.

The committee recommends that the word "heretofore" be retained in the bill.

The amount of money required to be appropriated by the Congress will remain the same regardless of which method is adopted. If the method proposed by the Budget Bureau is adopted, the funds will be appropriated to the Maritime Commission and the vessels constructed or acquired by the Commission may or may not be transferred or loaned to the Navy Department at the discretion of the Bureau of the Budget. In other words, if this method is adopted, the Navy Department will not have absolute control over its own auxiliary vessels.

If section 2 of the present bill is adopted, it will mean that the long-established procedure of the Congress is followed; that the money will be appropriated to the Navy Department; that the vessels will be transferred by the Maritime Commission to the Navy; and that the Navy will have full and complete control of its own auxiliary vessels. The committee is of the opinion that the Navy cannot operate efficiently unless it has auxiliaries in sufficient number and under the absolute control of naval authorities.

It recommends therefore that section 2 as now worded be retained in the bill and that the bill be approved by the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, request a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. WALSH, Mr. TYDINGS, and Mr. DAVIS conferees on the part of the Senate.

LANDING CRAFT AND OTHER NAVAL VESSELS

The bill (S. 1066) authorizing the acquisition and conversion or construction of certain landing craft and district craft, and special boats for the United States Navy, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that House bill 2581, Calendar No. 251, is an identical bill. Without objection, the House bill will be substituted for the Senate bill, and will be considered at this time.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 2581) authorizing the acquisition and conversion or construction of certain landing craft and district craft for the United States Navy, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 1066 will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. WALSH subsequently said: Mr. President, in view of the interest in Senate bill 1066, Calendar 244, a bill authorizing the acquisition and conversion or construction of certain landing craft, district craft, and special boats for the United States Navy, and for other purposes, and in view of the fact that it is in the nature of an authorization of a new type of naval vessel, I ask that the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs be printed in the RECORD in connection with the discussion of the bill.

There being no objection, the report (No. 241) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1066) authorizing the acquisition and conversion or construction of certain landing craft, district craft, and special boats for the United States Navy, and for other purposes, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with amendments, and recommend that the bill as amended do pass.

Amend the bill as follows:

Page 1, lines 5 and 6, strike out the comma after the words "landing craft" and strike out the words "and special boats," and insert the word "and" between the words "landing craft" and "district craft,".

Amend the title to read as follows: "A bill authorizing the acquisition and conversion or construction of certain landing craft and district craft for the United States Navy, and for other purposes."

The purpose of the bill is to authorize the acquisition and conversion, or construction, of 1,000,000 tons of landing craft and district craft, of such size, type, and design as the Secretary of the Navy may consider necessary and best suited for the conduct of amphibious operations, for service to the fleet and shore-based forces, and for naval districts, stations, bases, and operating areas at home and abroad. Such craft are to be additional to all auxiliary vessels or craft heretofore authorized. The bill authorizes the appropriation of such sums as may be necessary to effectuate its purposes.

The types of ships and craft covered by the bill are all required in the conduct of the war and are generally as follows:

Landing craft which include the various types designed for amphibious operations, except transports. They range in size from the small rubber boats to the landing ship dock. Transports are classified as auxiliaries.

District craft, including craft of various designs and types which are used in districts, stations, bases, and operating areas at home and abroad. Among such types are tugs of several sizes, oil, gasoline, and water barges, lighters, seaplane wrecking derricks, aircraft rescue boats, aircraft fuel boats, plane rearming launches, plane personnel boats, and bomb target boats, as well as other special designs of craft and boats which are required in war operations at many locations in the continental United States and at practically every advanced base location.

This is the first bill providing for the authorization of landing craft and district craft as such. Prior to the present war, the number of craft of the type covered by the bill was small. No large landing craft were built. Only enough landing boats were built to provide for training in landing operations. These boats, together with district craft and special boats, were generally built under authority of appropriations made available for "Maintenance, Bureau of Ships." With but a few exceptions, no separate authorizing authority for such craft and boats was secured, but the necessary authorization was incorporated in appropriation bills. This method worked satisfactorily in peacetime, because the number of such craft and boats and the amounts of money involved were small. In the case of district craft, construction was little more than sufficient to maintain the Naval Establishment, i. e., very little expansion of this type of craft took place.

With the commencement of the war the need for ships and craft of these types was large and immediate. They were required to mount our amphibious operations and to equip and supply services to our expanding bases, both at home and abroad. The number required was necessarily indefinite, depending as it does on losses in training, the number of operations undertaken in a year, the losses in these operations, the rate at which advanced bases are established and developed, and other factors. Other factors are that the Navy is the sole source of supply of amphibious craft to the Army and a partial source of supply thereof to our allies.

In the past year the Navy Department has constructed craft of the types authorized by the bill without authorization by legislation specially enacted for the purpose, its authority having been derived from various appropriations and authorizations. These types have been constructed under the general directive of the projects of the combined chiefs of staff, and as required by the tactical situation and the development of our bases, both land and air. Operations with which the Congress is familiar have been successfully undertaken with craft so built. Most of the larger landing craft were charged against the 1,799 Vessels Program Act of February 6, 1942, which authority is now substantially exhausted. The small landing and special craft were constructed against maintenance appropriations for the Bureau of Ships, and placed on the moneys so appropriated an extremely heavy drain which was not contemplated when the appropriation was made. The construction of district craft imposed a similar heavy and unforeseen drain on the Bureau of Ships.

It was therefore necessary for the Navy Department, at the time the Supplemental Naval Appropriation Act, 1943, was before the Congress, to seek funds to recuperate the maintenance funds of the Bureau of Ships which had been expended for these craft. The committee is of the opinion that the procedure which has heretofore been followed in connection with the construction of this type of craft is not satisfactory and recommends that hereafter construction of this nature be undertaken only on the basis of authorization by legislation enacted for that purpose according to the regular procedure for naval authorizations preceding naval appropriations.

The type of boat under consideration is generally small and quickly constructed. The numbers required and the losses suffered are not subject to exact prediction. The Navy Department representative stated to the committee that requirements for the vessels contemplated in this bill, especially landing craft, are necessarily subject to change, in details, types, and other factors, as a result of war developments, including operations and losses. The committee is satisfied that such changes will occur and that it would therefore be unwise to fix at this time the particular types of craft or numbers of each type to be authorized.

The Navy Department has estimated, on the basis of experience so far in the war, that the total tonnage authorized by the bill will be sufficient through the next 12 months. This estimate is believed to be as satisfactory as the uncertainties of the general situation permit.

The speed and efficiency of naval operations, including operations of the joint services, depends upon the availability of all types of the marine equipment required at the different locations and for the different operations in which the Navy is or may be engaged. The effectiveness of such operations depends frequently upon the availability of the several types of craft authorized by the bill, to service the fleets, auxiliaries, and air arm, as well as the merchant shipping involved.

These craft are not substitutes for private craft which the Navy took over in large numbers following the outbreak of the war. Such private craft were taken because they were then available and needed, and could be used, in particular duties, mainly of the patrol type. While not specially designed for the purpose they were useful and filled a need at the time. Such craft cannot serve the purposes for which the craft authorized by the bill are designed.

The Navy Department has estimated that the aggregate cost of the 1,000,000 tons of landing craft and district craft authorized by the bill would be $1,700,000,000. This would be additional to approximately 1,100,000 tons of such craft previously authorized at an approximate estimated cost of $1,900,000,000, substantially all of which has been committed.

The tonnage authorized by this bill is different from the tonnage covered by the bill H. R. 1563, authorizing the acquisition and conversion, or construction, of naval auxiliary vessels, which has also been approved by the committee.

The present bill provides for two additional types of vessels previously described and which are not included in H. R. 1563.

The committee is of the opinion that the authorization of the tonnage of landing craft and district craft provided for in the bill is necessary for the effective prosecution of the war.

The following letter from the Secretary of the Navy addressed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives sets forth the views and recommendations of the Navy Department on this bill. This letter is hereby made a part of this report:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 1, 1943.

Hon. SAM RAYBURN,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: There is transmitted herewith a draft of a proposed bill authorizing the acquisition and conversion or construction of certain landing craft, district craft, and special boats for the United States Navy, and for other purposes.

The general purpose of the proposed legislation is as stated in the title.

Up to the present time, the construction of district craft, smaller types of landing craft, and special boats has generally been undertaken under the authority of appropriations made available for "Maintenance, Bureau of Ships." With but few exceptions, no separate authorizing legislation has been secured, but the necessary authorization has been incorporated in the appropriation authority. The construction of the larger types of landing craft, e. g., LST's, LCI(L)'s, and LCT(5)'s, has been undertaken under the authority of the act of February 6, 1942 (Public Law 440, 77th Cong., 2d sess.), or the act of July 9, 1942 (Public Law 665, 77th Cong., 2d sess.).

The procedure which has been followed in the past with district craft, smaller types of landing craft, and special boats has proved to be especially difficult owing to the inability to determine the numbers of craft required sufficiently in advance to permit funds in adequate amounts to be set up in the annual appropriations requested from Congress. The Bureau of Ships, from time to time, has been given directives to procure large numbers of craft for which no appropriation authority had been requested. In order to meet these directives, the Bureau has been forced to utilize appropriation authority which has been set up to meet other items of the programs as originally outlined for which directives have not yet been received in full, or, in case such authority has not been available, it has been obliged to draw on funds which had been secured for some other phase of the Bureau's maintenance program.

In consequence of this action, taking into consideration all directives which have been received for the types of craft here under consideration, there is now remaining a total of only $5,966,500 in funds available for future programs under 1943 appropriations for "Maintenance, Bureau of Ships." Of the program originally outlined in the justification presented to the Bureau of the Budget and Congress for funds which were made available under the 1943 maintenance appropriations (title IV), there still remain items amounting to $94,985,000 for which directives have not yet been received. Since less than $6,000,000 remains available, it is obvious that the remainder of the program as originally laid down cannot be undertaken without risking failure to secure the necessary additional appropriations from Congress.

A similar situation exists in the case of future directives for larger types of landing craft. As indicated above, the construction of such craft has previously been included under the act of February 6, 1942, or under authorized auxiliary tonnage. All but a small percentage of the authorization under the former act has been fully allocated, and the slight balance still remaining has already been planned for allocation. As of April 7, 1943, a total of 421 vessels had been completed, 1,267 were building, 10 had been approved, but not yet awarded, and the balance of 101 had been determined by types but no directive had yet been issued ordering their construction.

A critical shortage of naval auxiliary tonnage is imminent as a result of the nonenactment to date of the bill H. R. 1563, which passed the House on April 21, 1943. This shortage makes it impossible to borrow on this source for any further authorizations of the larger types of landing-craft construction. Moreover, the enactment of H. R. 1563 will not solve the problem so far as it concerns future landing craft programs, since all but 99,000 tons of the 1,000,000 tons covered by H. R. 1563 have already been planned for various types of auxiliary-vessel construction.

It is believed that the principle involved in the bill H. R. 1563, authorizing auxiliary vessels by specific legislation, is applicable to the landing craft, district craft, and special boats, and that it will be equally insisted upon in Congress when additional appropriations for these types are requested.

The same circumstances which in the past have made it difficult to forecast requirements for landing craft and district craft, so as to make it possible to secure adequate advance appropriation authority, also make it difficult to determine tonnages in amounts which can readily be justified by Congress. Computations made of the programs undertaken during the calendar year 1942 and representing the total of the actual completions in 1942 plus the completions predicated for 1943, show for the various types of landing craft 14,400 units of an estimated tonnage of 813,240, and cost of $1,422,976,000. For 1,000 district craft the tonnage will amount to 360,000 at a cost of $390,000,000; while 4,000 special boats of a tonnage of 40,000 will cost $80,000,000.

The above totals represent approximately the obligations made by the Bureau of Ships to carry out directives received from the Office of the Chief of Naval Operations during the past year. In view of the foregoing, it is considered essential to orderly planning, and to an ability to remain within the limits of authorizations and appropriations, that the present uncertain condition be terminated and that the authorization requested be obtained.

The Navy Department considers the proposed legislation to be both necessary and urgent. The urgency is all the greater at this time because of the lack of authorization for the 1,000,000 tons of naval auxiliary vessels now pending in Congress.

The majority of the tonange in the proposed legislation will probably be allotted to landing craft. A blanket tonnage for this purpose is imperative. The war moves at such a speed that the requirements a year from now cannot be decided. Consequently, no program can be furnished on which to base requests for tonnage by specific types of craft or fixed sums of money.

The Navy Department strongly recommends enactment of the proposed legislation at the earliest possible date.

The Navy Department has been advised by the Bureau of the Budget that there would be no objection to the submission of the proposed legislation to the Congress.

Sincerely yours,

FRANK KNOX.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1026) to provide for the settlement of claims for damage to or loss or destruction of property or personal injury or death, caused by military personnel or civilian employees or otherwise incident to activities of the War Department or of the Army, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think the bill should be explained and discussed. If no Senator now present in the Chamber is able to do so, I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

VELMA PIKKARAINEN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 332) for the relief of Velma Pikkarainen, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with amendments, on page 1, line 5, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$900", and insert "$825"; and in line 6, before the words "North Dakota", to insert "Towner County", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $825 to Velma Pikkarainen, of Towner County, N. Dak., in full satisfaction of her claim against the United States for compensation for the value of a Ford automobile seized by agents of the Bureau of Customs, Treasury Department, on June 22, 1939, and sold on November 10, 1939, the basis for such seizure and sale being that such automobile allegedly had been used by O. V. Pikkarainen, the husband of the said Velma Pikkarainen, to facilitate a violation of the customs laws, although the criminal case against the said O. V. Pikkarainen was dismissed: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF OF DISBURSING OFFICERS OF ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1025) for the relief of certain disbursing officers of the Army of the United States and for the settlement of individual claims approved by the War Department, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with an amendment, in section 13, on page 7, line 13, after the word "payments", to insert the following proviso: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of the following disbursing officers of the Army of the United States the amounts set opposite their names: Lt. Col. L. M. Edwards, Finance Department, $2.90; Lt. Col. H. G. Foster, Finance Department (now retired), $150.97; Lt. Col. E. C. Morton, Finance Department (now retired), $46.98; Lt. Col. K. S. Olson, Finance Department, $67.03; Col. F. Richards, Finance Department, $85.63; Lt. Col. H. B. Turner, Finance Department, $37.95; Col. E. W. Wilson, Finance Department, $7; Lt. Col. G. S. Woolworth, Judge Advocate General's Department, $9.64; Lt. Col. H. R. Priest, Finance Department, $35.60; and Col. L. H. Sims, Finance Department, $123.11; the said amounts representing erroneous payments of public funds for which these officers are accountable, such erroneous payments having resulted from minor errors in the computations of pay and allowances due former members of the Civilian Conservation Corps, former members of the Army of the United States, civilian employees, and commercial firms or individuals from whom collection of the overpayments cannot be effected, and which amounts have been disallowed by the Comptroller General of the United States.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Sgt. Hendrik Dolleman, the amount of $67; to Sgt. Anthony J. L. Morency, the amount of $24; to First Sgt. Charles W. Sharbonneau, the amount of $88.25; and to Staff Sgt. Clarence E. Steele, the amount of $74.01; such amounts representing the value of personal effects lost by them when in the course of the evacuation of the United States Antarctic Service Expedition's Antarctic bases it became necessary in March 1941 to resort to an emergency abandonment of East Base, in Neny Fjord, Marguerite Bay, Palmer Peninsula, Antarctica.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Pvt. (1st cl.) Rex E. Dally the amount of $6.57, in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for a like amount paid by him from personal funds for the transportation of Government property.

SEC. 4. That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of Lt. Col. W. T. Delihant, Finance Department, the sum of $27, public funds for which he is accountable, which were lost by his agent officer, Capt. John J. Abbott, Medical Administrative Corps, when the car in which he was carrying the said funds skidded from the road and upset in a stream: Provided, That no part of the said sum shall be charged to the said Capt. John J. Abbott.

SEC. 5. That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of Lt. Col. W. E. Harris, Corps of Engineers, the sum of $19.25, public funds for which he is accountable, which sum represents the difference between per diem of $5 erroneously paid to Master Sgt. Frank Zinn and the monetary allowance of $2.25 per day to which he was entitled for a period of travel on duty under orders: Provided, That no part of the said sum shall be charged to the said Master Sgt. Frank Zinn.

SEC. 6. That the Comptroller General of the United States, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of Col. C. B. Lindner, Finance Department, the sum of $3,974.50; and in the accounts of Maj. F. J. Stagliano, Finance Department, the sum of $1,487, public funds for which they are accountable and which were paid by them on fraudulent vouchers prepared by their deputy.

SEC. 7. That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of Col. T. G. McCulloch, Finance Department, the sum of $14.09, public funds for which he is accountable, such sum representing the unrecovered balance of payments totaling $64.34 made to civilian employees for periods of absence of annual leave, to which leave said employees were not entitled by reason of having been engaged for work in connection with Work Projects Administration projects: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be charged to Maj. Robert E. Cron, Jr., Corps of Engineers.

SEC. 8. That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of Lt. Col. E. C. Morton, Finance Department (now retired), the sum of $182.31, public funds for which he is accountable and which were paid by him on fraudulent vouchers prepared by a former employee of the United States Forest Service, Department of Agriculture.

SEC. 9. That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of Capt. H. L. Oldenburg, Finance Department, the sum of $55.17, public funds for which he is accountable and which were stolen from the locker of his agent officer, Second Lt. B. C. Halton, Coast Artillery, by a person or persons unknown: Provided, That the said Second Lt. B. C. Halton shall not be held pecuniarily liable for any part of such sum.

SEC. 10. That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of Lt. Col. H. R. Priest, Finance Department, the sum of $32.40, public funds for which he is accountable, such sum representing commutation of furlough rations which was paid to an enlisted man and to which he was not entitled by reason of not having returned to his duty station when his furlough was terminated by sickness and subsequent discharge without such return: Provided, That no part of the said sum shall be charged to Maj. Charles L. Driscoll, Medical Administrative Corps.

SEC. 11. That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of Lt. Col. R. L. Scott, Finance Department, the sum of $264.82, public funds for which he is accountable and which were lost while being carried for pay-roll purposes from one building to another in the custody of his agent officer, Capt. Ralph L. Wilkerson, Air Corps: Provided, That the said Capt. Ralph L. Wilkerson shall not be held pecuniarily liable for any part of such sum.

SEC. 12. That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit in the accounts of Col. Lee R. Watrous, Jr., Finance Department, the sum of $1,268, public funds for which he is accountable and which were paid by him on fraudulent vouchers.

SEC. 13. S. C. 324): Provided, That no person shall be held pecuniarily liable for any amount on account of the above-mentioned payments: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL JACOBS, BERTHA JACOBS, AND HARRY JACOBS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 787) for the relief of Samuel Jacobs, Bertha Jacobs, and Harry Jacobs, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims, with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after the words "sum of", to strike out "$2,743.18; to Bertha Jacobs, his wife, the sum of $4,000" and insert "$1,743.18", and in line 9, after the word "damage", to strike out "and personal injuries sustained" and insert "medical and hospital expenses incurred", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Samuel Jacobs, of Baltimore, Md., the sum of $1,743.18 and to Harry Jacobs, his son, the sum of $900, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for property damage, medical and hospital expenses incurred by them as a result of being struck by a vehicle operated by the United States Army, at the intersection of North Avenue and Mount Royal Terrace, Baltimore, Md., on December 6, 1941, at 12:05 a. m.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Samuel Jacobs and Harry Jacobs."

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 1762) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the bill, with a report from the Appropriations Committee, was laid on our desks this morning. I stated to the acting chairman of the committee, the able senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], that I desired to have an opportunity to study the bill, and I asked that it go over until Monday. My request was agreed to. So I desire that the bill not come up before Monday. As I stated, I have no objection to its consideration on that date. However, at the present time I must ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

APPOINTMENT OF COAST GUARD ACADEMY GRADUATES AS ENSIGNS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2486) to authorize the appointment as ensigns in the Coast Guard of all graduates of the Coast Guard Academy in 1945 and thereafter, and for other purposes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the purpose of the bill is simply to insure that the present members of classes at the Coast Guard Academy who will not graduate until 1945 and thereafter will be appointed ensigns following their graduation. Otherwise, because of the limitation as to the number of ensigns who can be appointed in the Coast Guard, there is no assurance without this legislation that the midshipmen referred to, who will graduate from the Coast Guard Academy in 1945 and thereafter, will become ensigns.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate, and is open to amendment. If there be no amendments to be proposed, the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

SPECIAL ASSESSMENTS FOR LAYING OF CURBS AND GUTTERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2159) to provide for special assessments for the laying of curbs and gutters.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, in order to clarify the RECORD as to this particular bill, I wish to point out that the title reads "special assessments for the laying of curbs and gutters." The bill does cover that matter as it relates to the District of Columbia, but its primary effect is to relieve the owners of abutting property from the necessity of paying assessments for the paving of streets, with the exception of the assessments for the laying of curbs and gutters. The provisions of the bill are in accordance with the necessary trend in these days of shifting the burden of payment of assessments from the owners of abutting property to the users of the highways. In order that the record may be clarified in that connection, I ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point the report of the committee.

There being no objection, the report (No. 253) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2159) entitled "An act to provide for special assessments for the laying of curbs and gutters," having considered the same, report favorably upon it and recommend that the bill do pass, without amendment.

The title of the bill is misleading in that the bill is concerned primarily with relieving abutting property from assessments for roadway improvements and deals only in a minor degree with the revision of the basis for the assessment of abutting property for the laying of curbs and of gutters. However, since the body of the bill is clear and the title of it will not change the interpretation of it, and there is need for action on the bill, the committee does not request a formal change in the title.

Under existing law abutting property is assessed one-half of the cost of paving roadway improvements within the District of Columbia upon which the property abuts, subject to certain restrictions as to maximum assessments designed to prevent inequities. Curbs or gutters, if constructed in connection with a roadway improvement, are now treated as part of the roadway and the cost of them is assessed in the same manner as the cost of the roadway improvement. These include what are referred to in the bill as combined "curbs and gutters."

This bill recognizes that a roadway is primarily for the use of the general public. The bill, therefore, eliminates all assessments against abutting property for the construction of roadway improvements as distinguished from the construction of curbs and gutters. It retains the present plan of assessment for the cost of curbs and gutters with slight modifications to prevent inequities. Where a gutter is constructed as an integral portion of a permanent type of roadway, that portion of the roadway lying within 2 feet of the curb line is considered a gutter for the purposes of the act.

In effect the bill shifts from the owners of abutting property to those paying gasoline taxes, registration fees, motor-vehicle permit fees, and other special taxes into the general highway fund of the District of Columbia, that portion of the cost of roadway improvements now paid for by assessments on abutting property. While under existing law, abutting property in the normal case has been assessed on the basis of 50 percent of the cost of the roadway improvement, the net effect after applying the several limitations in the existing law and after deducting assessments that fall upon governmentally owned and other property which is exempt from taxation, is that abutting property has in fact paid for only about 22 percent of the cost of the roadway improvements.

In the early days when roadways were constructed primarily as a means of ingress to and egress from abutting property, the assessment plan was appropriate. Today, however, when roadways are constructed primarily for the use of the general traffic, the assessment of a substantial part of the original cost of the roadway upon abutting property loses much, if not all, of the equity originally characteristic of it. Road specifications today usually call for roadways that are much wider and pavement that is much heavier than would be required for a roadway to serve largely as a means of ingress to and egress from abutting property.

The District of Columbia, in particular, is so laid out that practically all parts of it are easily accessible. The residential, business sections, and Government buildings are so situated that most of the city streets are used for through traffic even though the abutting property may contribute little to that traffic.

Gasoline taxes in the District of Columbia were increased by Public Law No. 383 of the Seventy-seventh Congress approved December 26, 1941, from 2 cents a gallon to 3 cents a gallon. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia at that time also recommended that if the increased revenues derived by the highway fund from this tax would permit it, provision should be made to pay from the highway fund the entire cost of the construction of roadway improvements such as is proposed in this bill. They recognize that this situation has now arrived.

The loss in revenue from special assessments for roadway construction in normal times which would be eliminated by this bill is estimated by the Director of Highways of the District of Columbia at $225,000. The revenue from gasoline taxes from the current fiscal year have been officially estimated at $3,000,000, of which $1,000,000 results from the increase in the gasoline tax from 2 cents to 3 cents. In normal years the revenues from gasoline taxes on this basis would be about $4,000,000. The highway fund also derives revenues from other sources, and the Director of Highways estimates that it will be able to absorb without difficulty the additional cost of roadway improvements shifted to it by the elimination of special assessments for their construction. No part of the highway fund is derived from general property taxation in the District or from Federal taxation. It is all derived from special taxes relating to the use of the highways.

At present there is little roadway construction and, therefore, little burden would be placed on the highway fund now by this bill.

While the practice varies in different jurisdictions, there is a growing tendency elsewhere in the country to follow the policy of paying more and more of the cost of roadway construction out of funds derived from highway users as a whole rather than out of assessments against abutting property.

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have approved this bill, as evidenced in the following letter:

Hon. PAT MCCARRAN,
Chairman, Committee on the District of Columbia, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR MCCARRAN: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to submit to you herewith a draft of a proposed bill "To provide for special assessments for the laying of curbs and gutters."

At the last session of Congress the Commissioners, under date of June 17, 1941, recommended that the District of Columbia motor-vehicle tax be increased and that if this were done the existing law relating to assessments for roadway improvements should be modified. The first recommendation was adopted (see Public, No. 383, 77th Cong., approved December 26, 1941). However, no action was taken upon the second recommendation. The Commissioners are still of the opinion that the present paving assessment law is unjust. It levies, with certain exceptions, upon the abutting property assessments equal to one-half of the cost of paving the roadway of the street upon which the properties abut and also one-half of the cost of the laying of curbs and gutters. In the past the character of street paving has been determined primarily by the needs of the abutting properties. Today, however, the character of the paving is determined more by general traffic conditions. Formerly the cost of the paving bore a direct relation to the benefit received by the property from the paving. Today, in many cases, it does not. The Commissioners believe that with the increase in the gasoline tax property owners should be relieved of assessments for the paving of the roadway of a street. The situation with respect to the laying of curbs and gutters is different. They are laid primarily for the benefit of the abutting property and assessments should be levied therefor. The Commissioners append hereto a bill to carry their recommendation into effect.

Section 1 of this proposed bill provides that when any curb or gutter is laid or any curb and gutter are laid of a permanent type of construction in any highway one-half of the total cost thereof shall be assessed against abutting properties by the front-foot method but no assessment is to be levied on account of the replacement of any such curb or gutter.

Section 2 contains a formula whereby the assessments will be reduced in the case of shallow lots and lots of small value.

Section 3 of the proposed bill contains a formula to reduce the assessments in the case of lots abutting two or more streets so so that no undue hardship will result.

Section 4 of the proposed bill provides that no assessment shall be levied under the existing Paving Assessment Act of February 20, 1931, for any improvements completed subsequent to the passage of this bill.

The Commissioners consider this legislation desirable and recommend its enactment.

A similar report on H. R. 5308, Seventy-seventh Congress, was referred by the Commissioners to the Bureau of the Budget and returned without objection to its submission to the Congress.

Respectfully,

C. W. KUTZ,
Acting President, Board of Commissioners, District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The bill (H. R. 2115) to amend the District of Columbia Unemployment Compensation Act to provide for unemployment compensation in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, this bill and the following bill on the calendar are of some importance. I think they should be discussed. Is any member of the Committee on the District of Columbia now in the Chamber?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD] reported the bill.

Mr. McNARY. Is the report from the committee unanimous?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair has no knowledge as to that.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, the Committee on the District of Columbia was unanimous in reporting both bills favorably. Both bills are important. Does the Senator from Oregon desire that I comment on them?

Mr. McNARY. Yes; I should like to have the Senator comment upon them briefly, if he will do so. I should like to have a notion as to what they contemplate.

Mr. BURTON. House bill 2115, which is Calendar No. 254, provides for a reenactment of the District of Columbia Unemployment Compensation Act; and it proposes to insert in the Code of the District of Columbia a provision for recognition of the merit of the individual insurer, so that if there is an individual record of employment in his particular case, he will have the benefit of it in his insurance rating. Such a provision is in accordance with the trend throughout the country. I think over 40 States have such a provision. I know that the State of Ohio has a similar one, and it has proven satisfactory.

Hearings were held on the bill by the Senator from South Dakota and he recommended the change. I think the proposed step is a sound one in insurance policy; and it meets with the aproval of the Committee on the District of Columbia and, I understand, with the approval of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The bill is the so-called merit rating bill; is it?

Mr. BURTON. That is correct.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2115) to amend the District of Columbia Unemployment Compensation Act to provide for unemployment compensation in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, with amendments, under the heading "Definitions", in section 1, subsection (b) (5) (G), on page 6, line 3, before the word "service", to strike out "effective January 1, 1936"; in line 9, after the word "individual", to strike out the comma and the words "and no substantial part of the activities of which is carrying on propaganda or otherwise attempting to influence legislation"; and in line 14, in subparagraph (H), after the word "under", to strike out "an", and insert "any other", so as to make the subsections read:

"(G) service performed in the employ of a corporation, community chest, fund, or foundation, organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual.

"(H) service with respect to which unemployment compensation is payable under any other unemployment compensation system established by an act of Congress.

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Disqualification for Benefits", in section 10, subsection (g), on page 44, line 3, after the word "under", to strike out "an", and insert "any other", so as to make the subparagraph read:

"(g) An individual shall not be eligible for benefits for any week with respect to which he has received or is seeking unemployment compensation under any other unemployment compensation law of another State or of the United States: Provided, That if the appropriate agency of such other State or of the United States finally determines that he is not entitled to such unemployment benefits, this disqualification shall not apply.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I ask to have printed at this point in the RECORD the committee report on the bill, so that the bill may be fully explained in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report (No. 250) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill H. R. 2115, an act to amend the District of Columbia Unemployment Compensation Act to provide for unemployment compensation in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, having considered the same, report favorably thereon and recommend that the bill do pass, with the following amendments:

On page 6, line 3, strike out "effective January 1, 1936."

On page 6, beginning on line 9, change the comma after the word "individual" to a period and strike out "and no substantial part of the activities of which is carrying on propaganda or otherwise attempting to influence legislation."

On page 6, line 14, strike out "an" and insert "any other."

On page 44, line 3, strike out "an" and insert "any other."

This bill if enacted would replace the present District Unemployment Compensation Act and result in a District unemployment compensation law similar to those in effect in most States. By its provisions the coverage of employment is made to conform as nearly as possible with the coverage of employment under the Social Security Act, thus minimizing confusion and promoting uniformity of coverage under the District act and the Social Security Act.

This bill changes the contribution rate from the present flat rate of 2.7 percent to an experience-rating system under which the rate of contributions will range on a sliding scale from 2.7 percent down to one-tenth of 1 percent. It provides that each employer's total current contributions paid since June 30, 1939, less the total benefits paid to his former employees, will be compiled by the Board and will be called the employer's reserve. The percentage which each employer's reserve bears to such employer's average annual pay roll for the preceding 3 years then will determine the employer's contribution rate. By thus basing each employer's contribution rate upon his individual unemployment risk, unemployment compensation costs are more equitably distributed among employers.

Individual employer reserve accounts are created. When an employer's reserve account reaches a certain percentage of his annual pay roll, he becomes entitled to a reduction of his contribution for unemployment compensation.

EXPLANATION OF EXPERIENCE RATING

Experience-rating systems are provided for in the unemployment-compensation laws now in effect in 37 States and in the unemployment compensation law to become effective January 1, 1944, in Nevada. (For two studies of the operation of experience rating in the various States of the Union, see exhibits A and B, attached hereto and constituting a part of this report.)

Under this bill the standard contribution of all employers is fixed at 2.7 percent of the annual average wage. If the employer continues to make this contribution for a period of 36 consecutive calendar months and his individual reserve has not been depleted, then he is entitled to the reductions provided in the bill.

If his reserve is less than 1 percent of his average annual pay roll, the rate of contribution shall be 2.7.

It shall be 2 percent if such reserve equals or exceeds 1 percent but is less than 1.5 percent of his average annual pay roll.

It shall be 1.5 percent if such reserve equals or exceeds 1.5 percent, but is less than 2 percent of his average annual pay roll.

It shall be 1 percent if such reserve equals or exceeds 2 percent but is less than 3 percent of his average annual pay roll.

It shall be 0.5 percent if such reserve equals or exceeds 3 percent but is less than 3.5 percent.

It shall be 0.1 percent if such reserve equals or exceeds 3.5 percent of his average annual pay roll.

If as of any computation date the total amount of benefits paid out and chargeable to the employer's account is more than the total contributions credited to his account with respect to employment subsequent to May 31, 1939, then his contribution rate for the ensuing calendar year or remaining portion thereof shall be 2.7 percent.

Under this bill the employer's contribution rate normally would be computed as of June 30 each year. However, for the balance of the calendar year which remains after the enactment of this act, should the effective date be any date other than January 1, the computation date will be the last day of the third calendar quarter immediately preceding the effective date of the act. With this computation date settled upon, the act may be made effective during the course of the year in which enacted, without causing any complications.

MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

Contributions provided for, by this bill, are made a lien upon each employer's assets. The Board is made a body corporate, and, as such, is given authority to sue and to be sued. Substituted service of process on nonresident employers is provided for. Provisions for refund of contributions are changed to permit employers to file application for refund within 3 years from the date upon which the contributions were paid, instead of within 1 year from the date upon which the contributions became due, as provided by the present law. The Board is given authority to determine to what extent its decisions shall have retroactivity, and authority to compromise tax obligations, on the same basis on which the Commissioner of Internal Revenue determines such matters for social-security tax purposes. The bill authorizes the Board to enter into reciprocal agreements, with other State unemployment compensation boards or with the Federal Government, in connection with benefit rights and coverage.

SOLVENCY OF FUND PROTECTED

To protect the solvency of the fund, two provisions are made. (1) If the balance in the fund as of the computation date is less than 5 percent of the total taxable pay rolls for all employers (the equivalent of approximately 2 years' contribution under the present rate) the contribution for each employer will be increased by the percentage differential between said 5 percent of such total pay rolls and said fund's percentage of such pay rolls, but in no event shall the contribution rate for any employer be more than 2.7 percent. (2) If, on December 20 of any calendar year, the amount in the fund becomes less than 2.4 percent of the total annual pay rolls subject to contributions for the 12-month period ending the preceding June 30, each employer's rate for the succeeding calendar year will be 2.7 percent.

RESERVE IN FUND

At the end of 1942 the amount in the District unemployment-compensation fund was $32,196,075.26, which represented an increase of $7,595,911.57 in the reserve fund during the calendar year. As of February 28, 1943, this reserve had increased to $34,320,397.49. On May 15, 1943, the reserve was up another $2,285,000, and stood at $36,605,256. Even in 1941, when unemployment-compensation benefits paid totaled $2,128,329.10, the highest amount of benefits paid in any calendar year, the District unemployment-compensation fund accumulated an additional reserve of almost $5,000,000. By the end of the present calendar year the report undoubtedly will exceed $40,000,000.

It is clear from the record of benefit payments heretofore made, together with the annual contributions received into the fund (see table below) that the fund has now reached such proportions as to be beyond threat of depletion by reason of any expected depreciation. There is enough in this reserve fund at the present time to carry the District for over 15 years at the present rate of payments without taking any contributions from employers. Your committee, therefore, believe that experience rating as incorporated in this bill should be adopted to lighten the load of the employers within the District of Columbia.

Receipts and payments under District of Columbia Unemployment Compensation Act

For the year—	Receipts	Payments
1938	$6,362,353	$1,673,208
1939	6,763,150	1,437,104
1940	5,753,796	2,117,375
1941	6,493,570	2,128,329
1942	8,248,788	1,157,521

CEILING ON BENEFITS RAISED

The ceiling on benefit rights of unemployed individuals is by this bill raised from $18 per week for 19 weeks to $20 for 20 weeks, and the waiting period is reduced from not more than 2 weeks to 1 week. The "dependent relative" group, from which benefits are paid, is enlarged to include a spouse and any child, regardless of age, whom the claimant is morally obligated to support. These benefit provisions are extremely liberal in comparison with those in other States. In fact, laws in most other States provide for a lower benefit amount and shorter duration.

BENEFIT RIGHTS OF INDIVIDUALS IN ARMED FORCES

Unlike the present law, this bill preserves benefit rights of individuals in the armed forces of the United States. An individual who entered or enters the armed forces after March 31, 1940, has at least 90 days of continuous service, and is discharged from such forces within 6 months after termination of the present war will have his benefit rights preserved as of the time he entered the armed forces.

NEW EXEMPTION

The bill provides a new exemption for services of real-estate salesmen, solicitors, and agents, if compensated for solely by way of commission. This is the same basis upon which inurance agents are exempted under the present law.

Authority to recover, recoup, or waive recovery, under certain circumstances, of benefits erroneously paid to unemployed individuals, is vested in the District Unemployment Compensation Board by this bill.

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS

Subdivision G of section 5, page 6, reads as follows:

"(G) Effective January 1, 1936, service performed in the employ of a corporation, community chest, fund, or foundation, organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual, and no substantial part of the activities of which is carrying on propaganda or otherwise attempting to influence legislation."

There is no valid reason for making this provision retroactive. By it the contribution requirement would be moved back 7 years. It is of doubtful constitutionality in the opinion of your committee, who therefore recommend deletion of the words "effective January 1, 1936."

The final clause of this subdivision G, "and no substantial part of the activities of which is carrying on propaganda or otherwise attempting to influence legislation," is, in the opinion of your committee, unnecessary and inadvisable. In the case of International Reform Federation v. Unemployment Compensation Commission of District of Columbia, decided September 2, 1942, in which the ruling of the Social Security Board that the above-named complainant was liable for the contribution, the United States court of appeals for this district made the following statement:

"In the case now under consideration as we have seen the statute, in precise terms ex-cepts from its provisions service in the form of a corporation operated exclusively for religious, charitable, literary, or educational purposes. Nothing is to be found in this paragraph which pronounces the group less charitable, less religious, or less educational because it seeks to accomplish its purpose in corridors of the Congress as well as in the homes or churches of the people, nor can any such interpretation be implied with any degree of reason."

Likewise the Supreme Court of the United States has just rendered a decision in the case of Roscoe Jones v. City of Opalaka, holding that a tax upon the distribution of religious literature is unconstitutional.

Your committee does not know the origin of the above clause attached to subdivision G, nor why it was attached, but in our judgment it is inappropriate and should be eliminated. We therefore recommend that the final clause of the above-named subsection as printed in italic and reading as follows: "and no substantial part of the activities of which is carrying on propaganda or otherwise attempting to influence legislation," be eliminated from the bill.

Subdivision H of paragraph 5 reads as follows:

"Service with respect to which unemployment compensation is payable under an unemployment compensation system established by an act of Congress."

Use of the word "an" is misleading, because we already have an unemployment compensation system within the District. Your committee recommend that this subdivision be amended by striking the word "an" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "any other."

In subdivision G of section 10 we recommend a similar amendment by striking the word "an" in the third line thereof and inserting the words "any other."

Those approving the enactment of this legislation include practically every business enterprise within the District. Letters from more than 200 business houses and industries within the District were filed in support of this bill and in particular in support of the experience rating provision. Also your committee received letters from many employers both within and outside of the District supporting the bill.

The only organizations or individuals opposing the bill so far as your committee has been able to ascertain are the American Federation of Labor, represented by Frank J. Coleman, who presented a statement at the hearings held by your committee; Sidney R. Katz, representing Congress of Industrial Organizations; Willie Arnheim, representing Road, Highways, and Heavy Construction Laborers Union Local No. 546; William G. Wheeler, chairman of the joint conference against merit rating, secretary of Building Employers Association; and the National Association of Contractors.

Each of these opposing organizations presented objections to the experience rating provisions of the bill. Their ground of objection may be stated briefly as demanding a continuation of the piling up of the reserve fund without let-up. In the judgment of your committee, such objections are not well founded.

Full and complete hearings were held upon this bill in the District committee room in the Capitol. Everyone desiring to be heard was given an opportunity. With the exception of those specifically above-mentioned there were no objections to the provisions of the bill as here reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendments to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

HOURS OF EMPLOYMENT OF WOMEN IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 777) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the hours of employment and safeguard the health of females employed in the District of Columbia," approved February 24, 1914, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 9, after the words "during the", to strike out "existence of the present war in which the United States is engaged and 6 months thereafter" and insert in lieu thereof "period ending June 30, 1945, or such earlier date as the Congress by concurrent resolution may determine."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, at the beginning of line 10, to strike out "or more than 6 days."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the calendar.

NATIONAL RESOURCES PLANNING BOARD

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], acting chairman of the Appropriations Committee, had desired to take up the independent offices appropriation bill today; but it has been agreed that the bill shall go over until Monday.

There is one item in that bill with which I am concerned, and with which I hope the majority of the Senate will be concerned when it comes up. I refer to the item regarding the National Resources Planning Board. The subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations recommended to the full committee an appropriation of $534,000 for the next year, which is practically half the sum which the Board had available last year, or $1,100,000.

In the full committee, on a tie vote, the amount was reduced to $200,000. I am informed that when the bill is taken up the Senator from Tennessee will offer an amendment restoring the figure favorably reported by the subcommittee, that is, $534,000. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

However, that is not what I rose to discuss. In a conversation with Dr. Charles E. Merriam, who is Vice Chairman of that Board, my attention was called to certain misunderstandings with respect to the attitude of the Board toward two subjects. One is the subject of an expanding economy, and the other is the subject of deficit financing. The impression seems to have been created that the National Resources Planning Board had advocated and was in favor of deficit financing, and was opposed to what is called an expanded economy.

I have before me a very brief memorandum from Dr. Merriam, which I should like to read into the RECORD for the benefit of the Senate, before the bill comes up on Monday, because while it has nothing to do with the amount of the appropriation, it is desirable that the attitude of the Board be clarified on these two subjects, as the misunderstanding might be transmitted to the floor of the Senate.

I read the memorandum regarding one of these subjects, the expanding economy:

It has been suggested that the National Resources Planning Board believes that we are no longer in an expanding and dynamic economy. For 10 years the Board members individually and collectively have been preaching the doctrines of an expanding economy. It was this Board which established goals of national income 20 percent above anything previously achieved. We were called idealists and dreamers because we talked expansion and were unwilling to be limited by the levels of living previously attained. We published volumes such as Technological Trends and National Policy as far back as 1937 in our push for an expanding economy and higher living standards.

In its most recent report the Board stated, "accordingly we plan for a dynamic expanding economy on the order of one hundred to one hundred and twenty-five billion dollars national income." (P. 4, National Resources Planning Board development report for 1943, pt. I.)

I now read the memorandum on the subject of deficit financing:

It has been charged by those who apparently misunderstand the National Resources Planning Board's attitude that the Board advocates so-called deficit financing as a continuous policy of the Federal Government. The National Resources Planning Board has advocated, and who has not, Government borrowing at certain times. When and how much the Government shall borrow is not something which can be settled in advance for extended periods of time, but will be determined by various situations, such as war, depression, or other national need. This is the position of the Board. (See National Resources Planning Board Development Report for 1943; Part I: Post-War Plan and Program, p. 13.)

In connection with this matter, Mr. President, Mr. Beardsley Ruml, who is a member of the National Resources Planning Board, and whose name has become famous in the past year or so in connection with taxation, found it necessary to issue a statement to the press on last Tuesday, May 18, which reads as follows:

Beardsley Ruml, treasurer of R. H. Macy & Co. and adviser of the National Resources Planning Board, in the course of remarks on Business Organizations Look Ahead, made today before the American Association of Planning Officials, stated, "Dr. Harold G. Moulton, president of the Brookings Institution, writes in his book, New Philosophy of Public Debt, that the National Resources Planning Board advocates a new conception that continuous deficit spending is essential to the economic prosperity of the Nation.

"Dr. Moulton's reference to the Board is an uninformed misstatement of the Board's recommendations on fiscal policies. These are clearly set forth on page 13 of part one of its recent report for 1943, in part as follows:

"'It is our national policy (as it has been since the beginning of our history) to accept as a suitable role of government, positive effort to foster and encourage the free activities of private individuals and agencies in advancing their well-being through productive enterprise.

"'Accordingly the fiscal and monetary policies of the Federal Government should be conceived and administered to complement and supplement these activities of private enterprise in the maintenance of adequate effective demand.'"

Mr. President, I wish to have printed in the RECORD at this point the letter which I received from Dr. Merriam transmitting the memorandum regarding the Board's attitude on the two subjects to which I have referred. I am sure Senators will be interested because it clarifies the situation, and some Senators seem to have been laboring under a misapprehension with regard to the matter.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL RESOURCES PLANNING BOARD,
Washington, D. C., May 20, 1943.

Hon. ALBEN W. BARKLEY,
United States Senate,

MY DEAR SENATOR BARKLEY: Referring to our telephone conversation this morning, I am sending you a brief memorandum regarding the topic we discussed, namely An Expanding Economy and Deficit Financing.

I am also enclosing a release of Dr. Ruml's speech in New York City on Tuesday, May 18.

I hope that these statements will clarify the position of the National Resources Planning Board, which is evidently misunderstood in certain quarters.

With best wishes, I am,
Sincerely yours,
CHARLES E. MERRIAM,
Vice Chairman.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following favorable reports of nominations were submitted:

By Mr. BAILEY, from the Committee on Commerce:

Ensign Leslie G. Haverland to be a lieutenant (junior grade) in the Coast Guard, to rank from May 29, 1942.

By Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

Sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McFARLAND in the chair). If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

THE ARMY—BEN LEAR

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Ben Lear to be lieutenant general.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD several telegrams which have come to me relative to the nomination of General Lear. One comes from Stuart H. Perry, publisher of the Adrian Daily Telegram, of Adrian, Mich. Another comes from Mr. Roane Waring, national commander of the American Legion. Mr. Waring's telegram was sent from New Orleans, La. Both telegrams relate to General Lear, whose nomination is now before the Senate. I ask that the telegrams and also a copy of General Lear's military record be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the telegrams and records were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADRIAN, MICH., May 16, 1943.

Hon. ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,
The Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Effort to block confirmation of General Lear is amazing and unworthy. It reflects personal rancor and lack of understanding of proper Army discipline. General Lear's action was absolutely sound. Refusal to confirm or even a large vote against confirmation would be discreditable to the Senate and prejudicial to the morale of both officers and soldiers.

STUART H. PERRY,
Publisher, Adrian Daily Telegram.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., May 16, 1943.

Hon. ROBERT REYNOLDS,
Chairman, Senate Military Affairs Committee,
United States Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

I understand that there is opposition to confirmation of General Lear. I deeply regret this. I have observed and admired the ability with which he has commanded the Second Army during the time that his headquarters were in Memphis, my home. I am very familiar with the "yo-ho" incident. I have talked to a number of gentlemen who were with General Lear when it occurred. I have not discussed it with him. I know that the action of these soldiers was far more serious and reprehensible than simply yoo-hooing. The newspaper stories did General Lear a great injustice, but whether right or wrong in the severity of his punishment of them, this is no time, when our Army needs discipline, and strict discipline, to question a disciplinary act of a superior officer except that it be done in proper channels. If these soldiers were unfairly treated, which, I understand, they have said they were not, then there is a proper method of redress. I regard this effort to now punish General Lear as unfortunate, wrong, and a very serious blow to the proper administration and disciplining of an army.

ROANE WARING,
The National Commander of the American Legion.

By authority of the Secretary of War:

J. A. ULIO,
Major General,
The Adjutant General.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to delay the Senate unduly in taking action upon the nomination of Ben Lear to be lieutenant general in the Army of the United States. I desire, however, to make it a matter of record that my vote will be cast against the confirmation of the nomination of General Lear, and I deem it incumbent upon me to make a brief statement of the reasons which impel me to take this action and the reasons why I believe General Lear to be unfit to hold the high rank of lieutenant general in the United States Army.

Mr. President, in the 10 years during which I have been a Member of this body, so far as I recall I have never before had occasion to vote against or raise my voice against confirming the nomination of any man to be an officer in the Army or Navy of the United States. I do so at this time with great reluctance, particularly as it occurs at a time when the country is at war.

My observation of the record of General Lear leads me to believe that his promotion to the rank of lieutenant general would not be justified by anything in his record. On the contrary, the oppressive character of some of his actions as commanding general of the Second Army should militate against his promotion.

Let me say, Mr. President, as forcefully as I know how to express myself, that I would be the last to interfere with proper discipline or proper training of the armed forces of the United States. Discipline is not only necessary but absolutely imperative in any military or naval organization. However, Mr. President, in order to be effective and fair, the discipline to be administered should be equitable. It should be in accordance with the Articles of War and the Army regulations, under which the officer is supposed to exercise his authority.

I do not believe it can be successfully controverted, that in his capacity as commanding general of the Second Army, General Lear has in many instances been oppressive to the extreme and, in some instances, one of which I am about to relate, has proceeded in violation of the Articles of War in administering discipline. To a large extent his effort was directed toward discriminating against National Guard divisions, National Guard organizations, and unfair treatment of National Guard officers and enlisted men.

Because it has received a great deal of publicity, I desire to call attention particularly to an incident which occurred adjacent to a country club at Memphis, Tenn., while the Thirty-fifth Division was returning from the Army maneuvers of 1941. For many weeks the troops had been engaged in those maneuvers under most adverse conditions of weather and terrain. They were being conveyed back to Camp Robinson at Little Rock, Ark. In passing by the most prominent golf club near the city of Memphis, it has been alleged that as they were rolling along in trucks returning from these very arduous maneuvers, some of the men saw some young ladies in shorts playing golf on the golf links. It was also alleged that some of the soldiers made remarks to the young ladies. It is said they called to them. It has been alleged in some quarters that they gestured to the young ladies.

An elderly gentleman in civilian clothes, wearing no mark or insignia, but who, it subsequently developed was General Lear, happened to be playing golf on the links of the country club on that Sabbath morning while the Second Army as a whole was marching back from maneuvers. He ran over and began to shout at the soldiers who were returning in the trucks. Most of them, of course, had never seen General Lear, the Army commander. Many of them had never heard of him. They apparently did not receive the shouted orders of this apparent civilian with the reverence to which he thought he was entitled. It is possible that when he yelled out, "I am General Lear; I am General Lear," one of the irreverent young men may have replied, "Yes, and I am Julius Caesar" or, "I am Napoleon Bonaparte." It is quite possible that one of these young men said, "Oh, go roll your hoop, Grandpa," or words to that effect. Certainly there was nothing to impress upon these young men the fact that General Lear was the lieutenant general in command of the Second Army.

General Lear took very grave offense at this lack of recognition of himself and his sacred person, even though he was in civilian clothes, and apparently he became determined to punish the whole organization.

Mr. President, if any members of that organization were guilty of misconduct—if it was misconduct to hail a group of pretty girls as the truck train rolled along the road, which I have never heard was a military offense—there were means at General Lear's disposal for correcting the situation and punishing the guilty men. He was on the ground. He could have made himself known. As commanding officer of the Army he could have required the officer in charge of the truck train to ascertain the guilty parties and bring them to punishment. He could have stopped the train, and if the train did not stop at his order, he being in civilian clothes, he could have sent a staff guard to stop the train, made an investigation of the matter, and brought about the punishment of the guilty parties. He could have pursued the ordinary course dictated by military policy and military custom and ordinary military courtesy. He could have directed the commanding general of the Thirty-fifth Division to conduct an investigation and bring the guilty parties to punishment. He did not see fit, however, to do that. He was anxious to get his name in the newspapers; he was anxious to show his great authority; so, instead of stopping the truck train and making an investigation on the ground, or instead of proceeding through military channels, as is the universal practice and custom in the Army, he proceeded to let the train roll on to Little Rock, 125 miles away, and then, in the most flamboyant fashion, he ordered the truck train to retrace its course 125 miles back, and then ordered the men out in the hottest weather of the summer to march a portion of the distance on foot, in order that he might be given more publicity as a stern disciplinarian.

Mr. President, that is in violation of the one hundred and fourth article of war. It was General Lear's duty, if he thought that punishment should be administered, to ascertain the guilty parties and punish them. Instead of that, he saw fit to punish a whole organization, the innocent with the guilty, and to put a stigma on the whole organization in order to bring publicity and glory to himself.

I call attention to the one hundred and fourth article of war particularly, because that article specifies what summary punishment can be administered by a commanding officer or a commanding general. It does not include punishment of a whole organization, of the innocent as well as the guilty, for derelictions if there were derelictions, on the part of a few men. I say that a general officer who would pursue such a course as that demonstrates unfitness for the exercise of the high command to which he has been appointed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Would the Senator object to reading the one hundred and fourth article of war? I am not familiar with it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am somewhat familiar with the incident which occurred at the time, but I should like to know just what the one hundred and fourth article of war provides.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I shall be glad to read it. The one hundred and fourth article of war is as follows:

Disciplinary powers of commanding officers: Under such regulations as the President may prescribe, the commanding officer of any detachment, company, or higher command may, for minor offenses impose disciplinary punishments upon persons of his command without the intervention of a court martial, unless the accused demands trial by court martial.

There is no evidence at all in this case that General Lear ever advised men of this command that they were being subjected to punishment, or that he advised them of their right not to permit punishment without being tried by court martial, in order that the innocent might have a chance to establish their innocence.

The disciplinary punishments authorized by this article may include admonition, reprimand, withholding of privileges for not exceeding 1 week, extra fatigue for not exceeding 1 week, restriction to certain specified limits for not exceeding 1 week, and hard labor without confinement for not exceeding 1 week, but shall not include forfeiture of pay or confinement under guard; except that in time of war or grave public emergency, a commanding officer of the grade of brigadier general or of higher grade may, under the provisions of this article also impose upon an officer of his command below the grade of major a forfeiture of not more than one-half of such officer's monthly pay for 1 month. A person punished under authority of this article, who deems the punishment unjust or disproportionate to the offense, may, through the proper channel, appeal to the next superior authority, but may in the meantime be required to undergo the punishment adjudged. The commanding officer who imposes the punishment, his successor in command, and superior authority, shall have power to mitigate or remit any unexecuted portion of the punishment. The imposition and enforcement of disciplinary punishment under authority of this article for any act or omission shall not be a bar to trial by court martial for a crime or offense growing out of the same act or omission; but the fact that a disciplinary punishment has been enforced may be shown by the accused upon trial, and when so shown shall be considered in determining the measure of punishment to be adjudged in the event of a finding of guilty.

The point I make, Mr. President, is that if these men were guilty of dereliction of duty, they were subject to court martial or they were subject to summary punishment, if they did not object to summary punishment and demand a court martial. But what General Lear did was to make no effort whatever to ascertain the guilty parties and punish them. He made no effort whatever to get a statement from the commanding officer of the truck train or the commanding officer or noncommissioned officer of any particular truck, but he punished the whole organization and forced them to countermarch and waste many gallons of Government gasoline at a time when the Government was urging people to save gasoline, for he allowed the train to proceed to Little Rock, then ordered its return from Little Rock, and then to go back again to Little Rock, in order to satisfy his pique.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator if there is any evidence that the soldiers who were thus punished as the Senator says ever complained of their punishment?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have had complaints, I may say, from some of the men in the organization.

Mr. McKELLAR. But they made no official complaint.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The sentence had already been carried out; they had already been forced to undergo the punishment, and they had no opportunity of complaining.

Mr. McKELLAR. They could have complained at the time, it seems to me. May I say to the Senate that I had never met General Lear——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have never met him.

Mr. McKELLAR. Until he came to Memphis; indeed, I never met him until after this incident occurred, and the incident, as the Senator recalls, was extensively advertised by the newspapers of the country.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That evidently was General Lear's purpose in administering that form of punishment.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not think so. I think, so far as the publicity angle is concerned, it came about particularly because, as the Senator suggested a few moments ago, pretty girls, dressed in shorts were brought into the picture and the soldiers took notice of them as they passed along. Whatever may have been the facts about that, General Lear was there; he heard and saw the whole performance; and I have no doubt in my mind from what I learned at home and from what I have learned since that the incident was greatly exaggerated by the newspapers of the country.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The countermarch was not exaggerated, was it, and forcing the men to march in extremely hot weather was not exaggerated?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; but it was never stated that the soldiers themselves had complained of the summary punishment which was visited upon them.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator must realize that it is difficult for enlisted men in the Army to complain of the conduct of a lieutenant general.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator, of course, is familiar with Army matters because he served with distinction in the Army of the United States in the past, and I am one of his greatest admirers for the service he render in the first World War. But I want to say a word for General Lear. Since that incident occurred I have been introduced to General Lear and I have met him a number of times; in fact, I think perhaps every time I have gone to Memphis since the incident occurred. I have known a great many generals of the Army, among them many of the highest rank and filling most important positions, but I think I never knew a more dignified or kindlier general or one who seemed to be more careful in the discharge of his duties, more alive to the obligations of his high position, more courteous, and more determined to perform faithfully his duty as an officer than General Lear.

At first I had the idea that the incident referred to by the Senator from Missouri was a newspaper flare-up, one of those things which frequently occur, and that General Lear might have been remiss in some way. But from everything I have heard and have since learned in the city of Memphis concerning the incident I do not think I recall a single solitary criticism of General Lear on the part of the people of Memphis or the people of that section of the country whom I met. I do not think I ever heard the general criticized in the slightest degree because of the incident. Most people thought it was largely a matter of glaring and tremendous headlines in the newspapers.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I realize that General Lear was very popular in the city of Memphis, particularly with the country club element, with whom apparently he spent a good deal of his time. I have had many letters from prominent citizens of Memphis, members of the country club, familiar with General Lear's high character and conduct on the golf links, who deplored any criticism of the General. I have not received communications from any of the men who served under him, I have not had any from any member in the Thirty-fifth Division.

I think the Senator is bound to agree that if General Lear had wanted to handle that matter in an entirely adequate way, without getting his name in the newspapers and stirring up a great deal of trouble, the natural thing for him to have done, the normal thing for him to have done, the customary thing for him to have done, according to Army regulations and Army custom, would have been to notify the commanding general of the Thirty-fifth Division, General Truman, as to what had taken place. First, he could have stopped the truck train and admonished the commanding officer of the train to make an immediate investigation on the ground, in order to ascertain the men guilty, and to place them under arrest, or punish them, or, if he desired, to let the truck train proceed on to Little Rock. The customary thing for him to have done, the proper thing for him to have done, would have been to notify General Truman, commanding general of the Thirty-fifth Division, and officer of long service, certainly as distinguished service as that of General Lear himself, and let General Truman, well known as a disciplinarian, entirely competent to run his own division, make the investigation, let him fix the guilt as to the men who were in dereliction, and administer adequate punishment to them, instead of punishing the whole organization, at considerable Government expense, innocent men along with the guilty, for what a few in a whole command may have done.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am always glad to yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have not been at the office constantly lately, but so far as I know I do not recall receiving a letter concerning this matter.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; and let me say that I have received a number of letters from Memphis, some of them from people the Senator and I both know very well, and for whom we have a very high regard.

Mr. McKELLAR. It may be that letters have come to my office, but I have not seen any such letters. I am one of those who associate with all classes of people in my home city and my home State, and I have heard General Lear discussed by all classes of our people. I have heard him discussed by the ex-service men of the First World War; I have heard him discussed by businessmen; I have heard him discussed by some members of the country club to which the Senator refers. But from none of these have I heard any criticism of what the general did at the time spoken of. None have written me about it, and as I have talked with them, none have told me about it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I never suggested that the members of the country club ever wrote about the countermarching of the battalion.

Mr. McKELLAR. We have a very large World War veterans' organization in Memphis, one of the largest in the country, I think, and, so far as I recall, from the head of the veterans' organization, Col. Roane Waring, on down through all its members, I have never had any request to take any action against General Lear because of the incident referred to. I am wondering whether the Senator has heard from any of the veterans. The Senator is a veteran himself, and has many friends among the veterans.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have had many telegrams and letters from veterans, not veterans of Memphis, but veterans of Missouri, the sons and kinsmen of some of whom were in the long, arduous countermarch which General Lear ordered.

Mr. McKELLAR. In my judgment, from what I heard of General Lear in Tennessee he certainly stands very high.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I understand General Lear was exceedingly popular with the civilian population of Memphis.

Mr. McKELLAR. He certainly was.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know General Lear, never saw him——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not know him, either, and never saw him.

Mr. BARKLEY. I never knew much about him until this episode took place about the girls.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I never heard of him until he got command of the Second Army.

Mr. BARKLEY. It seems to me to be admitted on all sides that over a long period of years General Lear has been a good officer. Prior to this time, I never heard anything against his record, and never heard of anything since.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I intend to refer in a moment to some other things in relation to General Lear.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was about to ask the Senator if it is true that since General Lear has been in the Army, which has covered practically his whole adult life, he has had a good record, and admitting that in connection with the episode about which the Senator has been talking General Lear's conduct was arbitrary and capricious, that it was a mistake on his part, would we be justified in rejecting his promotion on that account assuming that he had a good record generally?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I intend to refer to some other conduct of General Lear in a moment.

General Lear was relieved of his command of the Second Army, of course, and lost the automatic status of lieutenant general, which he had occupied by virtue of being commander of the Second Army, and was ordered for retirement, I think, in about 3 weeks. The promotion we are considering merely restores him to duty as a lieutenant general, promotes him to the rank of lieutenant general. I do not know whether it affects the time of his retirement or not.

I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Kentucky to some other conduct of General Lear with regard to National Guard organizations which were under his command. I am particularly interested, of course, in the Thirty-fifth Division, which is the division to which the Missouri National Guard belongs, and the division in which I myself served during the last war, and in which I put in a good many years after the war in the National Guard.

In the particular instance I am about to cite, I shall choose an example from the Thirty-fifth Division of a man I happened to know very well, to show General Lear's attitude of oppression and arbitrariness, his overbearing and insulting attitude, applying not only to the Thirty-fifth Division, but all the other divisions under his command.

I do not blame General Lear personally for the effort which has been made and is being made to disorganize the National Guard, an effort made by the War Department to disorganize the National Guard, relieve all the senior National Guard officers, and encompass the destruction of the National Guard organization, so that it cannot be reconstituted after the war. General Lear is not responsible for that policy. That is a War Department policy, and that policy has been carried out in all armies. The Department has broken up most of the National Guard divisions. They have relieved practically all the senior officers of the National Guard, and that is the same mistake they made in the last war, which was responsible for much of the trouble the Regular Army had after the war. They never seem to learn anything from experience. As I have said, Mr. President, I do not blame General Lear for that personally, because apparently it happens to be the universal policy of the War Department. What I do blame General Lear for is the peculiar, arbitrary sort of way in which he carried out that policy with regard to the National Guard.

I do not desire to detain the Senate unduly, but I do wish to cite the case of one officer whom I happen to know, because he and I served in the same regiment during the last war. I know he is a good officer, as good an officer as ever stood in shoe leather. He happens to be a first cousin of my colleague, the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN]. It so happens that I know General Truman's military record, at least as well and probably better than does his cousin, the Senator from Missouri, because while all three of us served in the same division in the last war, Senator TRUMAN was in the artillery, and General Truman and I served in the same infantry division. I wish to take time simply to tell the Senate something about General Truman's record.

A great deal was said about the fact that General Lear started in as an enlisted man back in 1898, and is today a general officer, having come up through all the grades in the Army. So did General Truman. Both entered the Army in May 1898. Lear was an enlisted man in a Colorado volunteer outfit. Truman enlisted in the Regular Army in 1898. Truman served at Santiago, Cuba, as a private in F Company of the Twentieth United States Infantry from May 21, 1898, to May 20, 1901. He fought at San Juan Hill. He was in the trenches before Santiago until Santiago surrendered. From February 23, 1899, to May 20, 1901, he was in Luzon. He served in the Philippine Islands as a corporal of the same company in the campaign of the Philippine Insurrection.

The dates I shall now give overlap, but they cover the complete period of his enlistment:

Cuba campaign before Santiago, June and July 1898.

Battle at San Juan Hill, July 1898.

Served in the trenches until the Spanish surrender, 1898.

Philippine Islands, served in the trenches, battle of La Loma Church, February 1899.

The battle at San Pedio McCapi, March 12 and 13, 1899.

Battle of Guadalupe, March 13 and 14, 1899.

Battle of Pasig City, March 15, 1899.

Patrol of northern Luzon, February to May 1900.

In the Philippines General Truman was wounded in action. He made an excellent and commendable record.

General Lear served in the Philippines either as a volunteer or as a Regular during very much the same period. Unlike General Lear—and I am not criticizing General Lear for it, because a man in the Army goes and serves where he is told to go—but unlike General Lear, General Truman was a distinguished combat officer in the First World War. General Lear has been so situated, through his orders, that he has not heard a gun go off in anger for 40 years. General Truman was an excellent combat officer in the One Hundred and Fortieth Infantry of the Thirty-fifth Division during the last war, entering as a second lieutenant and coming out a major. He rendered excellent service on the Mexican border. He has risen through all the ranks from lieutenant to major general, including chief of staff of the Thirty-fifth Division. He is a graduate of many Army schools. His efficiency, his integrity, his loyalty, and his ability have never been questioned. As commanding general of the Thirty-fifth Division Truman was early slated to be "rolled." While all the National Guard officers were slated for it, Truman was early slated to be "rolled" because there was a general feeling in the Regular Army that General Truman played too rough and he did not cooperate in maneuvers as much as he might have been expected to do, and that, Mr. President, came about in this way:

The Thirty-fifth Division was ordered to Minnesota on maneuvers at that time, before we got into the war. The division was to take part in certain maneuvers which the War Department had planned to prove the tremendous efficiency of the armored forces, to show how easily they could roll up and cut in two an ordinary infantry division. In such maneuvers the commanders of the opposing forces will receive at about 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning information which is assumed to be equivalent to what would come in through organization commanders in the field, and then the commanders must make their own dispositions and take care to protect themselves or carry out their missions in this assumed warfare.

Being in Minnesota and being deployed, Truman received information as to the enemy at about 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning. He immediately recognized from the information which was furnished him from the umpires and the corps headquarters that his division was about to be rolled up by the armored forces and cut to pieces. So instead of tamely sitting by and permitting this demonstration to take place at the expense of his division, and thinking that they were simulating war conditions, he did what any sensible, energetic, aggressive, confident division commander would do. Seeing what was about to happen to him, he aroused his men in the middle of the night, left a rear guard to maintain the appearance of still being in camp, to lull his opposing forces into a trap, and fell back 4 or 5 miles, where he placed his troops in an impregnable position, with one flank resting on a deep lake and the other flank resting on an impenetrable swamp, so that the next morning, when the two armored forces came in to roll up Truman's division and cut it in two, they met head-on in front of Truman's division, and were theoretically annihilated.

The War Department did not like that. They did not like to think that Truman would do such a thing as he would naturally do if he were in actual combat. From that time on everyone knew that Truman's number was up, and no one was surprised when he was relieved of his command in the fall of 1941.

Mr. President, I am not blaming General Lear for that. That happened before Truman fell under Lear's command. Everyone who followed the situation knew that Truman would undoubtedly be relieved as soon as those in authority could get a chance to relieve him, in spite of the fact that he had, according to the Army's own report, one of the finest and most efficient divisions in the Army.

What I complain about is the way Lear proceeded in the relieving of General Truman. Truman came back from the Army maneuvers to which I have just been referring, and proceeded to Camp Robinson, Little Rock, which was the headquarters of his division, and was about to proceed on his way to Jefferson City, Mo., where he was scheduled to appear on October 6, by permission and under orders from the commanding general of the Second Army and from the commanding general of the Air Corps, to make an appearance and an address at a large patriotic gathering at the capital of Missouri.

I may say that I am familiar with these facts, not because my colleague has called them to my attention and not because General Truman has asked me to take any action about the matter, but the case was called to my attention originally by General Lear himself at the time of General Truman's resignation, and I investigated it and obtained these facts and am speaking from my own original memorandum.

When Truman arrived in Little Rock he discovered that a message had just been sent over the telephone to the officer who happened to be in charge of division headquarters, a lieutenant colonel. It was simply a telephone message notifying Truman that he had been relieved as division commander. There was not the ordinary courteous procedure of Army routine of sending General Truman an order relieving him. There was not even the courtesy of calling General Truman himself on the telephone. It was simply a message delivered to a lieutenant colonel notifying Truman that he had been relieved and ordering him to proceed to Memphis on the next day to become head of a reclassification board of the Second Army.

General Truman communicated with Army headquarters, called their attention to the engagement he had made by authority and instructions of the commanding general of the Second Army and of the Seventh Corps to appear at Jefferson City on the 6th, and further called attention to the fact that for the 10th of October a large celebration had been arranged by the city of Little Rock, in the State of Arkansas, to celebrate the homecoming of the Thirty-fifth Division to its home camp. He asked that he be permitted to remain in command of the division—he had had a great deal to do with the arrangements for the celebration—until the 10th, to attend the celebration in honor of the division, of which he had been the only commander during his tour of Federal service, and that he might have the privilege of receiving the customary final review given to an outgoing division commander. That request was refused, and he was ordered to report to Memphis on the 9th of October, the day before the review was to take place. He did so. He then asked if he could be permitted—mind you, he was a major general in the Army of the United States—to take his aide with him to Memphis. He was told that he did not need an aide, and not to bring one.

When he appeared in Memphis on the 9th of October, he discovered that General Lear was out of town. He was told that General Lear had sent two representatives from his own headquarters to attend the celebration, the homecoming and review of the Thirty-fifth Division, in Little Rock, the celebration which General Lear had refused to permit General Truman to attend.

On the 10th of October, General Truman reported to headquarters and asked as to the duties of the reclassification committee of which he had been appointed the head, by orders; and he asked who the other members of the committee were. He was informed that the other members of the committee were holding a session at Little Rock, the headquarters of the Thirty-fifth Division, but that they did not desire him, as the head of the reclassification committee, to proceed to Little Rock or to attend the hearings of the committee of which he was supposed to be the head.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I should like to inquire who issued the order relieving General Truman of his command.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. General Lear.

Then, Mr. President, having been baited and insulted—and, mind you, that was some time before Pearl Harbor—and it being perfectly evident that not only was he relieved of his command of the Thirty-fifth Division, but it was not the intention of General Lear to permit him to render any further service, and it was the intention of General Lear to humiliate him and bait him, General Truman resigned.

Mr. President, I do not ask the Senate to take my word or the word of my colleague, the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], General Truman's cousin, as to the efficiency of General Truman. I call as a witness as to the efficiency and satisfactory record of General Truman, Major General Ben Lear, the commander of the Second Army. After General Lear had finally baited General Truman into resigning, General Lear voluntarily sent me the following telegram—and the first time I knew that General Truman had resigned was when I received it—and also sent a similar telegram to my colleague the junior Senator from Missouri, General Truman's cousin. In the telegram General Lear said:

> Maj. Gen. Ralph E. Truman has just tendered his resignation to be effective after leave of absence beginning October 29. General Truman has done splendid and outstanding service with his Thirty-fifth Division and his departure will be regretted by Second Army Headquarters.

That statement was made in the face of the record I have just recited. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the telegram and my response thereto may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMPHIS, TENN., October 11, 1941.
Senator BENNETT CHAMP CLARK:

Maj. Gen. Ralph T. Truman has just tendered his resignation, to be effective after leave of absence beginning October 29. General Truman has done splendid and outstanding service with his Thirty-fifth Division and his departure will be regretted by Second Army Headquarters.

LEAR.

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 11, 1943.
Lt. Gen. BEN LEAR,
Headquarters, Second Army,
United States Army, Memphis, Tenn.:

I am in receipt of your telegram. I am not in the least surprised that Maj. Gen. Ralph E. Truman has done splendid and outstanding service with his Thirty-fifth Division. Well acquainted with General Truman as I served in the same outfit with him overseas during the World War. If his services were as satisfactory as you indicate why did you personally relieve him of command. It is of course the old Army game which does not intend to leave a National Guard officer, no matter how efficient, in command of National Guard division. You are trying to blame the tactical defeat which your army suffered on Truman and various other National Guard officers which is exceedingly unfair. You should retire yourself rather than make General Truman the goat.

CLARK.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, as I say, I do not blame General Lear, and cannot hold him responsible for the general policy of breaking up the National Guard and relieving the senior officers of the National Guard. I spoke of only one illustration of the application of that policy. I could speak for a long time with respect to other instances of a similar character. I do say that a man who has done such arbitrary and unfair things does not deserve to have his nomination to a higher rank confirmed. While I do not desire to delay the Senate in the matter, I do desire to make my opposition a matter of record.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield to the distinguished junior Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, if the Senator does not blame General Lear for the order relieving General Truman of his command, who would be responsible for it?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I say I do not blame General Lear. I cannot hold General Lear personally responsible for a policy of relieving National Guard division commanders—a policy which extended throughout the Army. I do blame General Lear very severely for the manner in which he executed that policy and for the manner in which he baited General Truman into resigning. The blame for the general policy is hard to lay at anyone's feet; but General Lear was responsible for the arbitrary and unfair way in which the policy was carried out.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Will the Senator say who is responsible for the general policy?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I take it that the General Staff of the Army is responsible for it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Missouri if he has the military record of General Lear before him, and if he will lend it to me.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; I have it before me, and I am glad to lend it to the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, in rising at this time I feel that I should say a few words—a very few words—about this nomination. First let me say that I owe the Senate an apology. I had heard that the nomination was before the Senate, but I did not know when it was coming up; and I was surprised, when I walked into the Senate Chamber a few minutes ago, to hear the distinguished Senator from Missouri talking about it, because I did not know it was on the calendar for consideration at this time.

Mr. President, I have not the slightest notion where General Lear came from. If any other Senator knows, I wish he would tell me.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I shall be glad to tell the Senator. General Lear was born in Canada, came to the United States as a youth, and enlisted in the Colorado volunteers in the Spanish-American War.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator. As I said, Mr. President, I had not the slightest idea where General Lear came from. He has never mentioned the matter to me directly or indirectly, either by letter or through friends or in any other way, so far as I know. My only reason for rising a while ago and for rising now is to say that in my very brief associations from time to time with General Lear I formed a very high opinion of him as a man and as an officer. He certainly looked the part; and his dignity and his good sense, apparently, and his fairness and his judgment seemed to betoken the kind of man whom we would expect to find at the head of an army, known as the Second Army, with headquarters at Memphis, Tenn.

I was greatly impressed with his ability, carefulness, good intentions, and practices. I saw nothing about him that was unbecoming. I had a number of conversations with him, which were purely personal in nature, and not official in any way. I do not know that I ever made a request of him of any kind, and I am sure he never made a request of me of any kind, nature, or description.

So far as his relation with General Truman is concerned, I have nothing in the world but the highest confidence, esteem, and admiration for the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] and I have no doubt that General Truman, his cousin, a member of the same family, is of the same high character that we all know Senator TRUMAN to be.

As to what the differences were between General Lear and General Truman I could not say. Men high up in the Army have differences of one kind or another. If they did have such differences, I do not know that that would be a reason for voting against the confirmation of the nomination of this distinguished soldier of the American Army. So far as I am concerned, from what I know of him, and my observation of his work as head of the Second Army in Memphis, Tenn., and his conduct in every particular while he was there, I feel that his nomination should be confirmed, and I hope the Senate will confirm it.

The Senator from Missouri has very kindly given me General Lear's military record. I should like to read portions of it in the very short time I shall be on my feet.

Ben Lear was born at Hamilton, Canada, on May 12, 1879. He enlisted in the First Colorado Infantry Volunteers and served as sergeant in Company C from May 1, 1898, to March 30, 1899, during the Spanish-American War.

Certainly that shows a fine spirit. He had made this country his home. He was born in Canada. Soon after he came here he enlisted in the Army of the United States and was a sergeant in Company C of the First Colorado Infantry Volunteers during the Spanish-American War.

He was commissioned a second lieutenant, First Colorado Infantry Volunteers, on April 1, 1899.

He earned a place in the commissioned ranks after having served as a noncommissioned officer.

He was commissioned a second lieutenant, First Colorado Infantry Volunteers, on April 1, 1899, and first lieutenant on July 5, 1899. During his service in the Volunteer Infantry he served in the Philippine Islands, where he participated in the following engagements during the Spanish-American War and the Philippine Insurrection: Capture of Manila on August 13, 1898; at Mariquina on March 31, 1899; at Guadaloupe Hill on June 7, 1899; at Bacolor and San Antonio on August 9, 1899; at Porac on September 28, October 17, and November 2, 1899; at Floridablanca on October 9, 1899; at Mabalacot on November 8, 1899; and at Banbon on November 11, 1899. He was mustered out of the service on June 11, 1901, and was commissioned a second lieutenant of Cavalry in the Regular Army on February 2, 1901.

Surely, if that is not an honorable record in the Spanish-American War, I have never read one.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator will not understand that I said there was anything dishonorable about General Lear's service in the Philippines or anywhere else. I think I pointed out that General Truman had a parallel record during the Spanish-American War, except that General Truman served in Cuba and was at the Battle of San Juan Hill, while General Lear was not. Of course, a soldier goes where he is ordered to go. I certainly did not reflect on General Lear's record in the Philippines or anywhere else. What I objected to was his arbitrary action as commanding general of the Second Army.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is correct; he has not criticized General Lear's record. This is the first time I have ever seen it. It is a splendid record of a young soldier and officer in the Spanish-American War.

Reading further from General Lear's military record:

PROMOTIONS

He was promoted to first lieutenant on December 9, 1901; to captain on August 10, 1912; to major (temporary) on August 5, 1917; to lieutenant colonel (temporary) on January 26, 1918; and to colonel (temporary) on August 31, 1918. He reverted to his permanent rank of captain on September 25, 1919; and was promoted to lieutenant colonel on July 1, 1920; to colonel on September 19, 1929; to brigadier general on May 1, 1936; to major general on October 1, 1938; to lieutenant general on October 1, 1940.

SERVICE

His first service in the Regular Army was in the Philippine Islands where he served with the Fifteenth Cavalry at Davao until April 17, 1903 participating in the engagement at Bacalod, Mindanao, on April 8, 1903. He returned to the United States on May 20, 1903, and was stationed at Fort Mason, Calif., where he served in various capacities until November 20, 1903, when he rejoined the Fifteenth Cavalry which was stationed at San Francisco, Calif. He accompanied his regiment to Fort Ethan Allen, Vt., in December 1903, remaining at that post until July 12, 1906, when, together with his regiment, he was transferred to the camp of instruction at Mount Gretna, Pa., where he served until September 27, 1906.

He sailed for Cuba in October 1906, and upon his arrival there was stationed at Santa Clara to November 8, 1906; and at Cienfuegos, to July 21, 1908. He returned to the United States and competed in the rifle and pistol competition at Fort Sheridan, Ill., from August 4 to 13, 1908. He returned to Habana, Cuba, on September 5, 1908, and rejoined the Fifteenth Cavalry at Cienfuegos, where he served until February 5, 1909. He returned to the United States with his regiment, and was stationed at Fort Myer, Va., to June 4, 1909, when he was transferred to Fort Ethan Allen, Vt., in connection with the selection of the Army Cavalry team in the national matches, where he remained until July 17, 1909. He then competed in the Atlantic rifle competition at Fort Niagara, N. Y., until July 26, 1909, and served at Boston, Mass., in connection with the field exercises of the National Guard from August 11 to 22, 1909. He rejoined the Fifteenth Cavalry at Fort Myer on August 23, 1909, where he was stationed until June 3, 1910. He served with the Cavalry rifle team at Fort Ethan Allen, Vt.; Camp Perry, Ohio; and Sea Girt, N. J., to September 7, 1910.

After attending the Mounted Service School at Fort Riley, Kans., until June 30, 1911, he was in charge of Training School for Farriers and Horseshoers there to June 7, 1912. He participated in the Olympic games at Stockholm, Sweden, from June to July 21, 1912. Upon his return to the United States he attended the second-year class at the Mounted Service School at Fort Riley, Kans., to December 15, 1912. He served at Fort Sheridan, Ill., with the Fifteenth Cavalry to November 10, 1913, part of which time he was with Troop I, Fifteenth Cavalry, at Camp of Instruction, Winchester, Pa. He was stationed at Fort Bliss, Tex., to December 11, 1913; at Presidio, Tex., on border patrol duty to August 5, 1914; at Fort Bliss, Tex., to January 3, 1915; and at Fort Hancock, Tex., to June 15, 1915.

He rejoined the Fifteenth Cavalry at Fort Bliss, Tex., serving at that post until August 3, 1915, when he was placed on detached service for duty with the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco, Calif., where he remained until October 22, 1915. He was then transferred to the Eighth Cavalry and stationed at Fort Bliss, Tex., to January 15, 1916. He accompanied his regiment to Fort Hancock, Tex., remaining there until March 13, 1916, when he was ordered to Ysleta, Tex., in connection with purchasing horses for the cavalry and artillery. Upon completion of this duty on April 22, 1916, he attended the Army Service School, Fort Leavenworth, Kans., to October 4, 1917, and then served with the War Department General Staff at Washington, D. C., to September 6, 1918.

He was instructor, Cavalry Training Camp, Camp Stanley, Tex., to December 12, 1918, and inspector-instructor, Texas National Guard, Austin, Tex., to January 15, 1919. He was acting commandant, Mounted Service School, Fort Riley, Kans., to July 7, 1919, and Director, Department of Horsemanship, at the Cavalry School there until August 19, 1921. He then attended the School of the Line at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., and after graduation, on June 20, 1922, served at Camp Lewis, Wash., until July 25, 1922. He returned to Fort Leavenworth, and attended the General Staff School from which he was graduated on June 17, 1923. He served at Camp Knox, Ky., to July 24, 1923, and as instructor, the General Service Schools, until June 29, 1925. He attended the Army War College in Washington, D. C., until June 30, 1926, and after graduation assumed command of the First Squadron, Fourteenth Cavalry, at Fort Sheridan, Ill., where he remained until October 17, 1927.

He was Chief, Inspections Division, in the Inspector General's Office at Washington, D. C., until November 10, 1930. He then commanded the Presidio of Monterey, Calif., to June 30, 1933, and was inspector, headquarters, Ninth Corps Area, at the Presidio of San Francisco, Calif., to November 3, 1934. On November 4, 1934, he became chief of staff, headquarters, Ninth Corps Area, in which capacity he served until June 24, 1936. On July 2, 1936, he assumed command of the First Cavalry Division at Fort Bliss, Tex. He sailed on November 29, 1938, for the Panama Canal Zone, where he assumed command of the Pacific sector at Balboa.

On October 1, 1940, he was assigned to command the Second Army. In April 1943 he was ordered to Washington, D. C., to take temporary command of the Army Ground Forces.

DECORATIONS

He has been awarded the Silver Star, and Swedish Medal commemorating the V Olympiad at Stockholm which was conferred on him by the King of Sweden.

In April 1943 he received the Distinguished Service Medal, with the following citation:

"Lt. Gen. Ben Lear, United States Army. For exceptionally meritorious and distinguished service in a position of great responsibility as commanding general, Second Army, from October 1, 1940, to April 1, 1943. To his excellent judgment, forceful leadership, untiring efforts, and high professional attainments are largely due the success and efficiency of the Second Army." (War Department, May 5, 1943.)

Mr. President, I did not know of that remarkable record of this distinguished soldier who came up through the ranks and reached a position next to the highest in the Army of the United States. A short time ago he attained the age of retirement, and by confirmation of this nomination he would remain on active duty as a lieutenant general. It seems to me that under the circumstances, the incident to which reference has been made by my distinguished friend, the Senator from Missouri is not sufficient, whatever people may think of the facts, to warrant rejection of the nomination of General Lear on that account alone.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator has stated that the record of General Lear is a remarkable record. I should like to suggest to the Senator that the most remarkable part of it is that a man is able to serve 42 years without hearing a shot fired.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; he took a very active part in the Spanish-American War in 1898.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is not denied. I was merely calling attention to the fact that there was a period of 41 years during which this remarkable record was being compiled.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes, and a great many persons work 42 years without so much success. I think I, myself, am one of those who have worked for about that length of time without achieving anything like the success which has attended this distinguished Army officer.

Mr. President, I again apologize to the Senate for taking time to read the record of General Lear, as well as taking the time of the Senate in expressing my own views. I have done so only out of a sense of duty to a man whose residence I did not know, whose birthplace I did not know, whose State I did not know, and whose record, which I have just received, I did not know. I believe the incident of which so much was made at the time by the newspapers of the entire country—an incident which would naturally bring about publicity—was not sufficient to justify us in rejecting the nomination of this distinguished officer of the United States Army to be a lieutenant general. I shall vote for confirmation, and I hope the Senate will confirm the nomination.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am not acquainted with the several incidents to which the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] has referred, and so I shall not discuss them. But what is involved here today is the question of whether or not we shall confirm the nomination of General Lear, and I believe to that subject I can make one or two contributions which, indeed, I feel I should make.

I participated in the Louisiana maneuvers in 1941, as well as the maneuvers which were held during the same year in North and South Carolina, in which maneuvers, indeed, most of the American troops who have since distinguished themselves in north Africa received their field training. So in that sense I was one of the many who served under General Lear. I had only a glimpse of him once or twice from a distance, and I do not wish to give the impression that I was in any way in Army headquarters, because I was not. But I was in an ideal position, as were thousands of others, to tell whether or not the exercises were well conducted, and to know whether or not the officers and the enlisted men derived benefit from them.

I think there is no question that those maneuvers were well conducted. That does not mean that many mistakes were not made, for a great many mistakes were made. One of the objects of the maneuvers was to develop mistakes and correct them in Louisiana or the Carolinas instead of having them develop in Africa.

When General Lear was opposing General Krueger in those maneuvers, first one side made mistakes, then the other side made mistakes. As I have said, to correct mistakes is what we have maneuvers for. Parachutists would drop in and threaten one general's command post, and tanks would come around and threaten the command post of another general. There were numerous incidents of that kind. But the fact of the matter is that everyone who took part in those maneuvers came out of them a much better soldier than when he went in. He learned by the mistakes which he made. He learned by the mistakes which he saw others make. There is no doubt that those maneuvers were a tremendous asset to the country, and that General Lear deserves recognition for the part which he had in making them successful. He had an important part in them. He had very broad supervision over the exercises, and to my mind he showed qualities of energy, organization, thoroughness, and drive, all of which are vital in a job of that kind. It is an administrative job. It is an instructing job. It is not, of course, a combat job.

The fact, as my good friend, the Senator from Missouri has alleged, that General Lear has not been under fire for a good many years does not in the least disqualify him for a big training job of this kind.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, of course I stated that I did not in any way criticize General Lear for the fact he has not been engaged in any wars in which the United States has been engaged since about 1900, because any soldier goes wherever he is ordered to go. It is no reflection on any officer in the Army that his service has not been utilized in field combat, and I did not wish to be so understood.

Mr. LODGE. I think that is a very fair statement of the Senator, and I am glad he has made it.

The manner in which the present maneuvers are conducted is that the knowledge and experience gained on the battlefields where the war is now being fought are brought back to the troops on maneuvers by means of observers and often by general officers who have returned to this country for that purpose. Throughout all these units that are now having maneuvers there will be found sprinkled officers and enlisted men who have had combat service overseas and who come back and give the other men that actuality of war which is so essential.

General Lear's role in that scheme has been the broad supervisory, administrative, instructional role. As one who had first-hand participation in the maneuvers which he conducted, I felt it incumbent upon me to say to the Senate that I think he did an extremely efficient job, and, on the basis of my own personal experience, it is my belief that his nomination should be confirmed.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, the nomination of Ben Lear to be lieutenant general in the Army of the United States comes to the Senate with the approval of the Committee on Military Affairs. I desire to make a brief statement of General Lear's qualifications and the esteem in which the Army holds him because of his services. Then, I desire briefly to answer the two cases to which my friend from Missouri has referred, and then to permit a vote, if there is no objection.

General Lear has had a long and illustrious career, first entering the Federal military service as an enlisted man with the Colorado Infantry in 1898. Since that time, 45 years ago, he has risen from the ranks to one of the highest positions in our Army by virtue of outstanding ability and leadership. Throughout the years he has been given ever-increasing responsibilities, and has discharged these responsibilities in a most superior manner.

General Lear served with the Colorado Infantry during the Spanish-American War, and in the Philippine Islands during the period of their pacification. He has been stationed in Cuba, Hawaii, and on the Mexican border. During the last war he served with distinction on the War Department General Staff. He is a graduate of the Cavalry School, Command and General Staff School, and the Army War College, and has been instructor at two of these schools. From 1936 to 1938 he commanded the First Cavalry Division at Fort Bliss, Tex., and later the Pacific sector in the Panama Canal Department. For the past few years, he has been the commanding general of the Second Army, training numerous divisions for overseas duties. In each succeeding assignment he has produced results, and the effect of his guiding hand in the training of our Army is being, and will continue to be, felt on the battlefields of the world. General Lear has always been known as a strict, but wholly just and fair, disciplinarian, and his success in training our citizen Army is partially due to this worthy characteristic.

Of the two incidents mentioned by my friend from Missouri, I shall first advert to the relief from active duty of Maj. Gen. Ralph E. Truman in January 1942. On October 10, 1941, General Truman voluntarily tendered his resignation from his commission directly to the Secretary of War, effective December 1, 1941; later requesting that the effective date be changed to January 15, 1942. The resignation was accepted by the Secretary of War, and General Truman was ordered to his home on terminal leave of absence and to await separation from active service, as he had requested.

Immediately upon the outbreak of war, however—it will be recalled that the resignation was tendered prior to the outbreak of the war—General Truman, prompted by patriotic motives, requested withdrawal of his resignation and immediate reassignment to duty. Withdrawal of his resignation was approved, but as there was no appropriate vacancy to which General Truman could be assigned, he reverted to an inactive status as a major general, National Guard of the United States, on January 15, 1942, the date his resignation was to become effective.

Acceptance of General Truman's resignation, approval of its later withdrawal, his relief from active service and nonassignment to active duty, were all acts of the War Department, with which General Lear had no connection.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator's statement, I understand, is from a memorandum furnished by some fellow in the War Department which is more or less anonymous.

Mr. CHANDLER. It was furnished by the War Department.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Furnished by some one in the War Department, and sent to the Senator. It is not official, I take it, and is not signed by anybody in the Department who is responsible for it. It is substantially in line with the facts which I stated, except that, of course, it does not include the fact that, after the orders relieving General Truman were issued, more or less informally by General Lear that Lear deliberately tried to bait, insult, and humiliate Truman until he brought about his resignation. It is also true, is it not, that the request for a change in the effective date of the resignation was made by Truman at General Marshall's own request? I have a copy of General Marshall's letter if it is material.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no information about any conduct of General Lear.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I stated the facts with some detail—I do not know whether the Senator was in the Chamber—and I do not think that General Lear or anybody else will deny them.

Mr. CHANDLER. I heard the Senator's statement, and, of course, I would not be a party to approving any conduct on the part of one officer toward another which was not gentlemanly and in good faith. I do not approve such conduct.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator is familiar with the fact, is he not, that under the ordinary practice and military courtesy when an officer is relieved of the command of his regiment he is permitted to turn the command over to his successor, and to be able to transmit to him any information he may have? In this particular case Truman, as I say, was relieved by telephonic communication to a junior officer and was not permitted to turn the command of the division over to his successor. He was instructed to leave the camp immediately and turn over the command of his division to a junior brigadier, who, later, turned it over to his successor.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope my friend from Missouri understands that I do not approve of any discourtesy upon the part of one officer toward another.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am sure that what the Senator says as to his own attitude is correct. I merely desire to call attention to the fact that the author of this anonymous communication is hardly stating the facts accurately when he undertakes to make it appear that Truman voluntarily resigned. Truman did resign voluntarily, of course, when it was made apparent to him by the conduct of General Lear and Lear's headquarters that he was to be insulted and humiliated and not permitted to perform the duties to which he had been assigned.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I was interested in what the Senator from Missouri repeatedly stated as to an anonymous communication. I thought the Senator from Kentucky was giving us his own views and thoughts and information.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am giving the facts as I understand them to be from the War Department in a communication which I have from the War Department, and which is presumed by me to be accurate because the statement was taken from the records of the War Department.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from Kentucky has no personal information?

Mr. CHANDLER. I have no personal knowledge or information. I asked for the facts, and the statement purports to be a statement of the facts. Personally I do not know the circumstances which brought about General Truman's resignation.

Mr. HATCH. If the Senator from Kentucky will excuse me for saying so, anything the Senator might state on his own initiative as his own statement, I would accept——

Mr. CHANDLER. I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. HATCH. But I do not accept what the Senator passes on second-hand.

Mr. CHANDLER. Of course, I would not know the circumstances under which General Truman wanted to submit his resignation, and I would not know whether General Lear had brought it about. I was not a member of the Army in that sector at that time, and the event did not pass under my observation.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. Wait a moment. My friend from Missouri has indicated that General Truman did voluntarily tender his resignation because somebody wanted it brought about and he was going to be squeezed out. I do not know about that. The record shows that he voluntarily tendered his resignation from his commission directly to the Secretary of War, effective December 1, 1941. That was before the war, and he later requested that the effective date be changed to January 15, 1942. On December 8, 1941, we became involved in the war, and meanwhile he got patriotic again. He was prompted by patriotic motives, and I have no disposition to deny that perhaps he did not know we were going into the war, and he decided, for some reason not known to me, voluntarily to tender his resignation, which he did, and he asked for it to be made effective on a certain date, and the Department agreed to do it, and then, when the war came, he said, "I want to be back in." I do not know why.

Mr. HATCH. It is very laudable, when war comes, for a man to want to get back in.

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes; he was prompted by patriotic motives, just as every other Missourian is. My father came from Missouri, and all Missourians have patriotic motives. I would be the last man to infer that a Missourian had any other than a patriotic motive.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does not the Senator think that for a man who has put in over 40 years' service in the Army, who started as an enlisted man, and served with great gallantry in Cuba and the Philippines, in the Mexican border service, and in France, it is the most natural thing in the world, when his country becomes engaged in war, to want to get back on the active list? But that does not indicate he was not forced out of the service before the war by the harsh and arbitrary conduct of General Lear, which I stated to be the fact.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator does that, and it is all right.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I certainly know more about it than does the Senator from Kentucky, although I was not personally present at the interview between General Lear and General Truman.

Mr. CHANDLER. I take it that the Senator knows to be correct what he has stated, but I say that the War Department states that the acceptance of General Truman's resignation, approval of its later withdrawal, his release from the active service, and nonassignment to active duty, were all acts of the War Department.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I stated that.

Mr. CHANDLER. With which General Lear had no connection.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the Senator will permit me, I stated that in my original remarks, and I said I did not hold General Lear responsible for relieving General Truman, or the other National Guard division commanders who were relieved. What I do hold him responsible for is his insulting and harsh treatment to force their resignations after they had been relieved of command.

Mr. CHANDLER. Of course I do not approve on the part of any officer any conduct that is harsh; I do not approve any discourtesy or any attempt to "roll" a man out without any cause at all, but as I understand, what I have just stated is a statement of the facts.

Now let us get to the Memphis Country Club "yo-ho" incident.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that same point?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. In view of the statement the Senator has made as to the request submitted by General Truman to change the date of his resignation, let me say that was done at the suggestion of General Marshall himself. General Marshall wrote a letter on October 11, 1941, to General Truman, as follows:

> DEAR GENERAL TRUMAN: I have just seen your telegram of October 10 to the Secretary of War tendering your resignation effective December 1, and requesting "my 32 days of leave of absence due me" beginning on October 29.
> I am sending you this note by air mail to find out if you might possibly prefer to be either given immediate orders to your home on detached service without specific duties, or possibly have you change the date of your resignation from December 1 to say January 15, and your being ordered on detached service now, or October 29, to your home or other point that you might prefer.

As to the date of the resignation, the suggestion came from the War Department, through General Marshall himself.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I now come to the Memphis Country Club "yo-ho" incident. The detachment of troops involved in this incident consisted of a provisional battalion of the One Hundred and Tenth Quartermaster Regiment, a detachment of the One Hundred and Tenth Medical Regiment, and the Thirty-fifth Military Police Company. These troops were proceeding from a maneuver area in the vicinity of Manchester, Tenn., to their home station at Camp Robinson, Ark., by motor convoy. General Lear noted that as the convoy passed the Memphis Country Club the soldiers in practically every truck were waving and shouting at people on the streets and golf course. The remarks made by the soldiers were seriously objectionable, and give evidence of a deplorable lack of discipline, in marked contrast to that of a majority of the troops of the Second Army.

Prior to this time other similar incidents had been brought to General Lear's attention, and he had found it necessary in one case to reprimand a regiment for shouting vulgar remarks at people in Manchester as it passed through that town. Therefore, when this incident at Memphis occurred within his sight and hearing, it was incumbent upon him to take immediate action to curb any tendency toward rowdyism or lack of discipline.

General Lear had the convoy intercepted, and the officers and noncommissioned officers assembled at his headquarters. That is not quite the understanding of my friend the Senator from Missouri, I think, but I am informed General Lear had the officers and noncommissioned officers assembled at his headquarters. He spoke to them concerning the necessity of each one doing his part to maintain discipline, and informed them that the conduct of their soldiers, which he had just witnessed, was a reflection on their company, their regiment, and division. I wish to emphasize that; they did not return immediately, as I think has been believed by some. The convoy remained at Memphis that night, and was directed to proceed to Camp Robinson the following morning; the officers and men to march a total of 15 miles the following day, using the shuttle method; that is, alternately riding in a truck and marching on foot.

Mr. President, I wish to refer briefly to a dispatch from Memphis written by Clark Porteus, and published in the Washington Daily News of Saturday, May 15, 1943. It is an eye-witness account of this "yo-ho" incident. It says:

No one here——

That is, in Memphis—

No one here holds the "yo-ho" incident against General Lear.

It was peacetime—July 1941—when the incident occurred. General Lear, in civilian clothes—not in shorts, as Senator CLARK said—was golfing at the Memphis Country Club.

Three hundred and fifty soldiers of the Thirty-fifth Division were returning from maneuvers in middle Tennessee, riding trucks. The convoy passed the golf links, and what General Lear saw caused him to make the 350 men return to Memphis later from Camp Robinson, Ark., and march 15 miles in temperatures that topped 100.

As I recall, the country club is just on the outskirts, and the general made the soldiers go back into town.

However, the men marched no more than 5 miles without riding a while.

Much ado was made of the matter then. Now that the war has come, however, citizens here understand why the general would not let unsoldierly conduct pass unnoticed.

But another reason citizens here support General Lear is the evidence, brought out by a businessman 11 days after the incident, that the soldiers indulged in more than mere "yo-hoing" at pretty girls. There was some lewdness and "obscene gesturing" on the part of the soldiers, said Raynor Allen, the Memphis businessman. This story, perhaps, was seen by fewer people than read the original story.

Mr. Allen, who served 2 years with the Three Hundred and Eighth Combat Engineers in the First World War, had this to say after the "yo-ho" incident had brought criticism of General Lear:

"I did not see the exact circumstances which aroused the general's ire, but I know him, and I know he is the type of officer who will stand for a reasonable amount of tomfoolery.

"I had been following the convoy in my car, and quite a few of the men on the trucks ahead of me were acting in a manner that passed the limits of even mildly good taste. I do not mean to say that they were all doing this—some were behaving in an entirely proper manner—but there was an appreciable group who had got into very high gear.

"The young ladies were not amused. I do not think their fathers, even if they had been ex-Army men, would have been pleased."

The soldiers who had to march did so in good spirits. I walked part of the way with them.

Many of the men who had to make the march expressed resentment at the criticism by Congressmen and others concerning their punishment promenade.

General Lear himself never discussed the incident publicly, though he did send a telegram to Representative KILDAY (Democrat, Texas), who had criticized him. The general explained in his wire that "loose conduct and rowdyism cannot be tolerated among the personnel of the Army. I am responsible also that members of the Second Army treat the civilian population with respect and consideration."

Mr. President, I submit that while mistakes may seem to have been made in connection with these two incidents, I do not believe they should seriously affect this man's very fine record, which covers 45 years, from the position of an enlisted man in the National Guard of Colorado to the rank of lieutenant general in the United States Army, a record so fine that he has been recently called, because of the serious wound suffered by the chief of the ground forces, to one of the most important positions in the Army of the United States. General Lear is considered by the War Department to be an excellent soldier, and is highly recommended for the important position to which he was called. I hope the Senate will approve the recommendation of the Military Affairs Committee, and that the nomination of Gen. Ben Lear to be lieutenant general will be confirmed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, since General Lear began his very remarkable military career in the State of Colorado, I think it is no more than proper for me to add something to the debate on his confirmation. General Lear came up the hard way. He went into the Army as an enlisted man, as has already been stated. He went through two wars. He went through all the different ranks in the Army from the very lowest. He came to Colorado when he was a young man, and at the age of 19 went into the National Guard, and then served in the War with Spain.

As I have said, he came up the hard way. He did not have the opportunity to go to West Point, as many other young men have. He had a fine military education, but he received it in the Army. The Army was his schoolmaster. The Army itself was his West Point. The fact that he is highly regarded and enjoys the esteem of all Army officers, so far as I know, from the top to the bottom, ought to prove his worthiness.

General Lear has many relatives in the State of Colorado. These relatives are my close personal friends, so I have a somewhat personal interest in this matter.

Mr. President, a day or two ago I received a telegram from Roane Waring, from New Orleans, which reads as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, LA.,
May 16, 1943.

HON. EDWARD C. JOHNSON,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

I understand that there is opposition to confirmation of General Lear. I deeply regret this. I have observed and admired the ability with which he has commanded the Second Army during the time that his headquarters were in Memphis—my home. I am very familiar with the yo-ho incident. I have talked to a number of gentlemen who were with General Lear when it occurred. I have not discussed it with him. I know that the action of these soldiers was far more serious and reprehensible than simply yo-hoing. The newspaper stories did General Lear a great injustice, but whether right or wrong in the severity of his punishment of them, this is no time when our Army needs discipline and strict discipline to question a disciplinary act of a superior officer except that it be done in proper channels. If these soldiers were unfairly treated, which I understand they have said they were not, then there is a proper method of redress. I regard this effort to now punish General Lear as unfortunate, wrong, and a very serious blow to the proper administration and disciplining of an Army.

ROANE WARING,
National Comander of the American Legion.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I may say that Colonel Waring, who sent the telegram the Senator just read, is a citizen of Memphis, Tenn.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. A member of the country club?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not think he is, though I do not know. I never saw him at the country club in my life, though he may be a member. If he were, he certainly would be a very worthy member, because he is a grand man, he is a fine lawyer, and stands high in Memphis. He is acquainted with General Lear. Ever since the last war he has taken the greatest interest in all military and veterans' affairs, and the confidence the American Legion has in him is evidenced by the fact that he was elected its national commander.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I thank the Senator from Tennessee. There is no doubt of Mr. Waring's deep interest in the enlisted men who served in the last war as well as those who serve in this. He is not only interested in this country winning the war, but because of his position at the head of the American Legion he takes a particularly great interest in the welfare of the men rather than in the high generals who command them.

I also have received a telegram from a very distinguished former Member of the United States Senate, who served in the Philippines with General Lear, former Senator Rice W. Means, who telegraphed to me in part:

The members of the Colorado Infantry who served in the Philippines loved him like a brother.

Meaning Gen. Ben Lear.

I have also received a telegram from Mr. James MacPherson, who is the manager of the largest radio station in the Rocky Mountain region, who telegraphed to me at some length in behalf of Gen. Ben Lear and urging that the Senate confirm his nomination.

Mr. President, I have talked with a great many of the officials in the War Department with reference to Gen. Ben Lear and I find that without a single exception they regard him as a very great soldier.

When General McNair was wounded in Africa Senators will recall that the Chief of Staff selected General Lear to be commander of the Ground Forces here. Prior to that time General Lear had the responsibility of training hundreds of thousands of American soldiers who have afterward distinguished themselves on the battlefields in Tunisia and on other fronts.

Mr. President, there is no denial that General Lear is a strict disciplinarian. He knows that to be soft is not a kindness to the soldier.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I certainly have not criticized anyone for having maintained strict discipline. I believe in strict discipline. I also believe, however, that the discipline should be fair, should be for the guilty and not for the innocent, and should be administered in accordance with the Articles of War and Army regulations.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I agree with the Senator from Missouri on that point, but I do not concede that that is a point at issue in this debate at all.

I have before me a report giving the military history of General Lear, and I notice that his efficiency record is high. In 1926 it was given as excellent. In 1927 it was excellent, and in 1928 was excellent. These reports are made in each case, of course, by his superior officers. In 1929 his record was superior. In 1930 excellent. In 1931 excellent. In 1932 excellent. In 1933 excellent. In 1934 superior. In 1935 superior.

I note that from July 1, 1939, to January 7, 1940, he was rated superior by Maj. Gen. David L. Stone; that from January 8, to June 30, 1940, he was rated excellent by Maj. Gen. Daniel Van Voorhis. From July 1, to September 19, 1940, he was rated superior by Lt. Gen. Daniel Van Voorhis. In his service from March 20, to December 31, 1942, he was rated superior by Lt. Gen. L. J. McNair. In November 1938 Maj. Gen. H. J. Brees, commanding general, First Cavalry Division, said of General Lear:

> A man of decisive views and action. Positive in his views, works hard for his command. Very active, and in excellent physical condition.

In January 1940 Maj. Gen. David L. Stone, in the Pacific sector department, said:

> An able officer very active, and has fine judgment and initiative. A very valuable general officer. Absolutely loyal in all things.

Mr. President, we are in a very difficult war. As a matter of fact, we are in two very difficult wars simultaneously. We need all the military skill we can get. It is almost impossible to estimate the value of an able, experienced, tried, and proven general. We know how much we prize the capture of an enemy general. We know how the generals are guarded from capture because of their great value. Many a battle has been lost because of the lack of ability, and many a battle has been won because of the ability of a general who has been in the right place at the right time.

Mr. President, I should like to present my own summation of the facts upon which the Senate should consider the confirmation of General Lear's appointment. I have taken the trouble to study this matter in some detail and to inquire of many high-ranking officers their opinion of General Lear. I have made this investigation quite informally and purely in the interests of justice.

No military man I have questioned has indicated any but the highest regard for General Lear's military ability.

What other type of evidence should the Senate consider in passing upon an appointment of this character? I see no justification for seeking further than the military career of the man and the estimate in which he is held by those best able to appraise him.

During the past few years General Lear has been commanding general of the Second Army. In this important capacity he has been responsible for the training of literally hundreds of thousands of American soldiers, many of whom have already distinguished themselves on the plains and in the hills of Tunisia. This was an assignment of the greatest importance, not only to the men who came under General Lear's command for the combat seasoning they required, but to the parents of those men, who have the right to expect that their training will adequately prepare them for the shock of battle.

I have heard it said that General Lear is a strict disciplinarian. If that be true, I can only say, Thank God for men like General Lear in our training forces. Mr. President, we cannot be soft with the Army, for we are playing with men's lives. The officer who lets his men get away with things rather than having the forthright courage to call them to account is betraying his trust to those men and to the families from which they come.

The other day General McNair, whose place General Lear is now filling temporarily as commanding general of the Army Ground Forces, had something to say about training which bears directly upon the subject of discipline.

General McNair said:

> In combat along the front lines, I feel that while our troops have been taught and taught and taught certain do's and don'ts, when they get into the excitement and strangeness of battle, especially in the early stages, they seem to forget. They don't do the things instinctively that they would be able to answer correctly in an examination or quiz. When they get on the battlefield they forget these things and do foolish things. In other words, sound practices in battle are not instinctive. They are not ground into them so that they will apply them without thinking.

Mr. President, I am not a soldier, but as a member of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs I have constant opportunity to talk with Army officers, and I have learned from them that implicit discipline is the only basis upon which you can build a fighting Army. If men think they can get away with something, or if they think their officers will not insist on their carrying out promptly and with unquestioning obedience the orders that are issued, the men become lax and they do not develop alertness, which is of the most critical importance on the battlefield.

I know what General McNair was talking about. He meant that, rigorous as is the training which our troops receive—and most of the men he saw had been trained with General Lear's leadership—it must be still more rigorous before our men become instinctive soldiers.

I mention this in connection with General Lear because General Lear has been accused of being the kind of man who exacts the highest degree of efficiency from his officers and men. If we are to consider General Lear's strictness as a reason for questioning his reappointment as a lieutenant general, we shall not only be doing a grave injustice to a great soldier, but we shall be serving notice on the military leaders of this country that we want our men coddled in their training. At a time when the entire emphasis of our maneuvers is directed toward a stricter and more rigorous program to make our men better soldiers and therefore better able to take care of themselves in battle, we shall be saying that the Senate disapproves of the very measures which would bring about this result.

I feel sure that the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] does not desire to say that he favors an undisciplined army, and I feel sure that this body does not wish to go on record as concurring in any such shortsighted course.

We have recently had irrefutable evidence of the high regard in which our military leaders hold General Lear. We all know that General McNair was wounded in north Africa during the discharge of his duty while observing the course of the final decisive battle for Bizerte. During General McNair's convalescence from his wounds, Lt. Gen. Ben Lear was the choice of the Chief of Staff to carry on the important work of directing the Army Ground Forces. He holds that temporary appointment now. Until General McNair's return to duty General Lear will carry out the important duty of serving as commanding general of the Ground Forces.

I call this fact to the attention of the Senate because it is the most convincing argument which could be presented of General Lear's abilities. Mr. President, I have not always seen eye to eye with the programs of the War Department, and when I differed from the General Staff I have felt it my duty to express my opposition freely. But my study of military problems has given me constant opportunity to observe the strictness with which the Army scrutinizes the ability of any officer before he is assigned to an important duty.

Friendship and the easy-going preferment which may be responsible for the advancement of men to posts of responsibility in civilian life have no place in the Army. High-ranking officers have been relieved of their commands, without respect to how many friends they may have had in high places, either in the Congress or in other influential quarters, because the Army felt they were unfit to remain in positions of responsibility. Men are advanced to high positions of trust in the Army, not because they are good comrades, but because their demonstrated capacity recommends them.

General Lear is a man in whom the Army has the most implicit confidence. What further test can this body make of his right to the high rank which the President, as Commander in Chief of the Army, has proposed for him? I have heard only the most frivolous reasons advanced for opposing the three stars which he now wears on his shoulders and which he should be permitted to retain.

General Lear has been made to suffer because of an unimportant episode which would never have been given currency even in the press had it not caught the eye of some clever reporter who expanded it out of all proportion to its significance or merit, and it caught on and swept the country.

Mr. President, soldiers can be boisterous, and when this trait is kept within proper bounds it causes no criticism. But the police of our cities do not permit young men to stand on street corners and make objectionable remarks at women who are forced to pass by them on the streets. No officer of our Army should permit his men to engage in such conduct as that which called forth the reprimand and punishment meted out by General Lear. If this episode, forgotten overnight by the soldiers who were brought to a realization of their own responsibilities as members of our Army, were considered as the basis for refusing General Lear's appointment, then I say that this body would be derelict in its duty not only to the electorate but to the all-important fight for victory.

Mr. President, we are called upon to confirm the reappointment of an efficient, colorful, and illustrious soldier. For 45 years General Lear has been known to his associates as a soldier devoted to duty. He has held the highest military posts with honor; and now that the law forces his retirement from active command in the field, the Commander in Chief and the Chief of Staff wish to retain his services for the Nation in a rank commensurate with the importance of his new duties.

I feel that this body should overwhelmingly confirm his appointment. By so doing, we should not only be recognizing a great soldier. In these critical times the Nation cannot afford to be without the full and appropriate service of a man who has proved by his record his value to our military fortunes.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STEWART in the chair). The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I desire to concur heartily in everything my distinguished colleague [Mr. JOHNSON] has said about General Lear. In Colorado we regard the general as one of our citizens. I do not know him personally, but I do know men from Colorado who went to war with him in the Spanish-American War. Over all the long years which have elapsed since then they have retained their respect and admiration for him. I shall be honored to vote for the confirmation of his nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination?

The nomination was confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the remaining nominations on the calendar.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the President be notified forthwith of the confirmation of the postmaster nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith.

THE NAVY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Charles E. Rosendahl to be rear admiral, for temporary service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

THE ARMY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Army.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, it seems that in connection with the long list of nominations for appointments in the Army, two of the names have been incorrectly listed. Under the circumstances, I ask that the nomination of William David Lutz, to be second lieutenant, Air Corps, and the nomination of Thomas Matkins Johnston, to be second lieutenant, Corps of Engineers, be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs, in order that the names may be corrected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination of William David Lutz, to be second lieutenant, Air Corps, and the nomination of Thomas Matkins Johnston, to be second lieutenant, Corps of Engineers, are recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the remaining nominations in the Army be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the remaining nominations in the Army are confirmed en bloc.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the President be immediately notified of all nominations this day confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate adjourn until Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 38 minutes) the Senate adjourned until Monday, May 24, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, MAY 20, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Father of Mankind, we pray that Thy spirit may arouse in us the feeling of unused powers and the consciousness of responsibility. We rejoice that Thou dost pour out of Thy infinite fullness an overflow transcending all human need. As the humblest flower by the way breathes an unconscious fragrance, so may we by gentleness and humility show forth the spirit of our Saviour, nor ever let an unhallowed day pass.

Most graciously regard our country; humanity with all its burdens seems to be wandering between two worlds—the old one dying and a new one struggling to be born. Teach us again and again that life is more than livelihood. Make us to learn the discipline that the world can be saved only by submitting to righteous law, rather than wielding the bludgeon of force. We pray for a gale from heaven, a rushing of a mighty wind, carrying light to those in darkness and life to those in death.

Blessed Lord, we pray for those in sorrow and for those in joy; for those who are cast down and for those exalted; for those in barren lands, weary and worn; and for all in the battle lines of freedom. Almighty God, make us worthy of the sacrifice and the victory on which the rights of man can be restored. In the name of Thy Son, our Redeemer. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEND-LEASE SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATION BILL, 1943

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow, Friday, following disposition of business on the Speaker's table, it shall be in order to consider, under the rules of the House, the defense and lend-lease supplemental appropriation bill, 1943.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NAVY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1944

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the passage of the bill (H. R. 2713) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SHEPPARD) there were—ayes 62, noes 0.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. This is an automatic call. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 360, nays 0, not voting 72, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their remarks upon the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include an address entitled "America's Aviation Tomorrow," by Col. Edgar S. Gorrell, president, Air Transport Association of America; also a statement by 18 air lines, being a joint reply to certain questions by the Civil Aeronautics Board, including a reply by question and answer; together with a letter from the President of the United States to Mr. Jesse Jones, Secretary of Commerce, on the twenty-fifth anniversary of the first air-mail flight.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

C. K. LAWSON AND THE RUML PLAN

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I have here a letter from an outstanding constituent of mine, Mr. C. K. Lawson, of Cedartown, Ga., which I conceive to be a patriotic, open, frank expression representing the attitude of a majority of the laboring men in this country concerning what is known as the Ruml plan. Mr. Lawson writes as follows:

CEDARTOWN, GA., May 13, 1943.

Hon. MALCOLM TARVER,
Member of Congress,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am a cotton-mill man, working 7 days a week, putting more than 10 percent of my income in bonds and trying to pay for a home to enjoy when I get too old to work. And I need every dollar I can earn. But Uncle Sam went head over heels in debt last year just to protect my home and my job and my right to enjoy them. And since his income is derived from taxes, I don't see how honest men can talk about canceling his income unless they are going to cancel his debts.

Personally I want to get on a pay-as-you-go tax basis, but I don't want to beat my country out of what I owe for last year's protection, nor have a lot of debts for my grandchildren to pay interest on.

Let us have a pay-as-you-go tax bill and forget about that forgiving and forgetting.

Respectfully,

Mr. AVERAGE CITIZEN,
C. K. LAWSON.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. POWERS] be granted leave of absence for today on account of official business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE FOOD SITUATION

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, there is no question but that our country is in the midst of a very serious food problem. From all indications this problem is getting worse rapidly. This is due largely to the bungling of the food authorities of the Government.

About a month ago the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], the Republican leader in Congress, set up from among the Republicans in the House a committee to study the food situation. This committee, of which I have the honor to be chairman, has been at work diligently, and is alarmed at the seriousness of the food situation. A day or two ago, under the order of this committee, I introduced in the House a bill which, if passed, will bring order out of chaos. This bill provides for the establishment of one single food administrator to have full and complete charge of all of the food departments of the Government. It is our hope that such a measure might be passed by the Congress immediately because the situation warrants immediate action.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include an article by David Lawrence, appearing in today's Washington Star, on the income tax.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'LEARY] may extend his own remarks in the RECORD, and include a newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. KENNEDY] may extend his remarks in two particulars.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. BRYSON was granted permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

POLL-TAX LEGISLATION

Mr. NEWSOME. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. NEWSOME addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

(By unanimous consent, Mr. HARRIS of Virginia was granted permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. COFFEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article from the Aviation News.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

GLENN HAMMOND CURTISS

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, 65 years ago tomorrow, on the 21st day of May 1878, in the quiet country village of Hammondsport, nestled in the hills of the Finger Lake region of New York State, Glenn Hammond Curtiss was born. Named, first, for a site of local scenic beauty and, second, for the founder of the community which gave him birth, "G. H.," as he was wont to be called by his contemporaries, was destined to become one of the great pioneers in the field of aviation. Though credit for having made the first flight in America has been given to others, Glenn Curtiss was the first man to give a public demonstration of a successful flight in what was then known as the flying machine.

Holder of pilot's license No. 1 of the Aero Club of America, he was the first man to complete a sustained flight of 1 kilometer, slightly more than half a mile, in a flimsy crate dubbed the June Bug. Somewhat later he made the first flight from a water take-off in the Loon.

Both in conception and development of the aircraft engine and in the plane itself Curtiss has no peer in American history. To commemorate his great contribution to this modern science, I have today introduced a measure providing for the erection of a suitable memorial at Hammondsport, N. Y., as a fitting tribute by a grateful nation for the work done by Glenn Curtiss and his associates.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

OFFICE OF PRICE ADMINISTRATION

Mr. McWILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McWILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, my home town is fairly bristling with war industries. Among them is a large rayon plant. This plant was recently visited by two men from the Office of Price Administration. The manager took them through this plant. They were interested in every detail that goes into the manufacture of rayon, so much so that when the manager took them back into the office it was with fear and trepidation in his heart that he faced them. But much to his surprise and amazement and utter relief, one of these so-called experts proffered his hand and said, "Mr. Manager, I want to thank you for this wonderful tour of inspection, for this is the first time I have ever been in a mill in all my life."

Now, that would be funny if it were not the essence of irony.

The soldiers who fight our battles take time out to delouse themselves. It would be well that certain bureaus emulate their example and delouse themselves of some of the vermin that have wormed their way into high offices of trust.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

OFFICE OF PRICE ADMINISTRATION

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and have them printed in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a telegram from Mr. George C. Thierbach, president, National Coffee Association.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. PITTENGER addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

CONGRESSIONAL WAR PARENTS' ASSOCIATION

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, if I may have attention for just a moment to make an announcement. The Congressional War Parents' Association, which is such an informal thing that we do not even send out notices of meetings, will meet Monday afternoon at 4:30 in the Appropriations Committee room opposite the barber shop. I think the Members can all find it. We hope there will be a good attendance.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a resolution of the National Catholic Council.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial that appeared in the Chicago Daily Times entitled "Copernicus and Hitler."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article by Fowler McCormack, president of the International Harvester Co.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MORRISON of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on today after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table and other special orders I may address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I have a special order to address the House for 30 minutes on May 26. In view of the fact that May 26 has been set aside as memorial day I ask unanimous consent that my time be transferred to Thursday, May 27, after the disposition of the legislative business of the day.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization may have the right to sit during the sessions of the House on May 26 and May 27.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain the gentleman's request at this time. Some time ago the Chair made the announcement that when bills were being read for amendment in the House the Chair would not entertain a request of a committee to sit.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, may I not make the request subject to the condition that the committee would suspend its sitting if a bill were being read?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would prefer that the gentleman withdraw his request at the present time.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the request.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BUSBEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include a statement I made yesterday before the House Committee on Small Business.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

O. P. A. SUBSIDIES

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Speaker, the O. P. A. has recently announced a new subsidy program involving the rolling back of prices on many commodities, including butter. I should like to read a telegram at this time I have received from Mr. E. S. Trask, chairman of the Idaho Dairy Products Council:

BOISE, IDAHO, May 15, 1943.

Congressman HENRY DWORSHAK:

Idaho dairy products council, made up of Idaho farmer-owned cooperative creameries, with more than 16,000 active patrons, protests the proposed subsidy program to be applied to butter as announced by the Office of Price Administration. Urge you actively oppose this program. Believe that more fruitful results in preventing inflation would be secured by absorbing through increased taxes and enforced savings that portion of purchasing power for which goods and services are not available. Farmers definitely interested in avoiding the calamity of uncurbed inflation, but do not wish to accept a consumers' subsidy when large portion of consumers amply able to pay prices that will maintain badly needed production. Consumers now certainly more able to pay reasonable prices than loading costs of subsidy program on posterity.

IDAHO DAIRY PRODUCTS COUNCIL,
E. S. TRASK, Chairman.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered by Mr. Frank E. Gannett.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

O. P. A. AND SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[Mr. VURSELL addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION—PERMISSION TO SIT DURING SESSION OF HOUSE MAY 26

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request; I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization may sit during the session of the House on May 26 unless there be general debate in the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman would not want to do that if his committee had a bill up; would he?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ROWAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include a very brief article from the Chicago Times.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

WARTIME ATHLETICS

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[Mr. WEISS addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR APPROPRIATION BILL, 1944

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2719) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes; and pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that debate continue not to exceed 2 hours, the time to be equally divided between the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER] and myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON]?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 2719, with Mr. BARDEN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 54 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, in presenting the Interior Department appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1944, from the Committee on Appropriations, let me preface my remarks with a few general statements.

In its deliberations on the pending bill the committee was without the services of several members who have served with distinction for a great many years. I refer, of course, to the present Senator from Nevada [Mr. SCRUGHAM], Judge Leavy, who was a tower of strength as Members will recall, and who has been appointed by the President to a Federal judgeship, our colleague and present chairman of the Subcommittee on Naval Appropriations, and Mr. Rich, of Pennsylvania, a sincere and capable gentleman who voluntarily retired from Congress.

The gentlemen who have succeeded these able legislators, Mr. KIRWAN, of Ohio, Mr. NORRELL, of Arkansas, and Mr. JENSEN, of Iowa, have displayed a keen interest in the work of the committee and have contributed much to whatever success we may have achieved.

The present distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee was present during the opening session of our hearings and made several valuable contributions to the record and interrogated the witness, the Secretary of the Interior, as to several important matters including the Department's food production program, concerning which I wish to refer later on in my remarks today.

I must not overlook mentioning those hold-over members of the subcommittee. We would not have been able to bring to this House a bill which is as well balanced and at the same time severely reduced, without the valuable and experienced assistance of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK], the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER], and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JONES].

Let me say here that this is the first time during the years I have been a member of this committee that there have been no controversial items in the bill.

In my opening statement to the subcommittee at the begining of the hearings, after discussing several other matters, I urged that the committee secure all the available information possible concerning the many bureaus and agencies, and then eliminate or drastically reduce every item we could, especially those which did not bear on the war effort. Let me quote one paragraph from that statement as follows:

And finally, when the hearings have been concluded, let me presume upon the valuable time of the committee further by suggesting that members of this subcommittee make every effort to cut these appropriations to the bone without seriously impairing the efficiency of the various departments and agencies. But let me also suggest that the committee members fight out their differences of opinion here behind closed doors and endeavor to reach an agreement on which they can present a united front both in the full committee and on the floor. Members may be assured of my full cooperation to that end.

A little later I shall give the figures showing how successful the committee was in achieving the ends suggested by me at the opening of the hearings.

I feel that it is correct and accurate to state that we finally agreed unanimously on every item in the bill and that we are all now unanimously behind the bill and every item in it. This does not mean that when we wrote the bill we did not have differences of opinion as to individual items. In fact, there were many such differences of opinion and we spent considerable time in reaching a decision. But we have reached that decision and the bill you have before you represents, so far as I can recall, the first time an appropriation bill has been reported to this House on which all members of the committee were in unanimous agreement.

The subcommittee, of which I have the honor of being chairman, held daily hearings, morning and afternoon, covering a period of about 6 weeks. These were long, tedious, and somewhat nerve-racking hearings. Despite the fact that we heard many witnesses from the various departments, Members of Congress, representatives of pressure groups, and others, your committee has succeeded in keeping down to a minimum the size of the hearings by insisting that much of the discussion not directly related to the appropriation be off the record. Through this procedure we were able to reduce the number of pages by 140.

You will recall that there are 26 agencies and activities in the Department of the Interior. And the committee heard representatives from each of them. There were a total of 88 departmental representatives, including officials from the Department of Agriculture and the War Production Board. In addition, we heard 3 United States Senators, 37 Members of Congress, and 12 representatives of outside organizations.

It is significant that the total cost of all their requests for additional funds would run into hundreds of millions of dollars.

It is also significant to note that not one witness who appeared before the committee asked for a reduction in appropriations for the next fiscal year, but, on the other hand, each and every witness, save possibly one, urged and demanded increased appropriations, despite the fact that there was no Budget estimate for the proposed increases. I might say here that many if not all of the requests made by Members of Congress and others had considerable merit. In fact, many of the projects proposed involving the expenditure of millions of dollars, undoubtedly should be considered seriously in the post-war program that we hope is not far distant. But your committee recognized the fact that this Nation is engaged in a desperate war that will decide the future of our beloved country for many generations to come, and feel it is a solemn obligation to cut and slash all appropriations not directly related to the war effort and to refuse to seriously consider any and all new projects pending the duration of the war.

Before going into a discussion of the various agencies and activities in the bill permit me to give you a few facts and figures as to the revenues being taken in as a result of the activities carried on by the Interior Department.

For the fiscal year 1942, the actual total of all general and special revenue funds accruing to the Department of the Interior amounted to $42,063,846. The estimated revenues for the fiscal year 1943 are $47,593,420, and for the fiscal year 1944 the revenues are estimated at $54,450,420. This latter sum is only $18,410,896 less than the total amount contained in the pending bill. If you add the trust funds amounting to nearly $9,000,000 to general and special funds, the revenues of the Interior Department for the next fiscal year would nearly equal the entire appropriation for this Department, which, it must be agreed, is a remarkable showing. This is especially true when we realize that for the fiscal year 1933 the actual total of all general and special fund revenues accruing to the Interior Department amounted to only $9,356,678. It is interesting to note that the increase in revenues during the 10-year period of 1933 to 1943 reflects a net increase of $45,093,742.

Members may be interested in knowing what is primarily responsible for such a remarkable increase in revenues for this Department. The primary reason is, of course, that revenues are now coming in from the operation of huge power and reclamation-development projects which were opposed by many both in and out of Congress, several years ago. It will be recalled that such projects as Boulder Dam, Grand Coulee Dam, Parker Dam, and Central Valley were repeatedly referred to as "white elephants."

The fact is, these projects are now beginning to pay back their cost to the Government, not only from a financial standpoint, but, what is more important, some of them are furnishing electric energy and agricultural products, without which our war program would be seriously hampered. Severe criticisms were made in some quarters against all of the Colorado projects, which of course include Boulder Dam, yet it is estimated that revenues from Colorado dam projects, including interest on Colorado dams and other funds, will amount to a sum in excess of $9,000,000 during the fiscal year 1944. Collections from reclamation projects will exceed $10,000,000, and revenues from the sale of power from Bonneville and Grand Coulee Dams are estimated to be approximately $17,000,000. Members will find a complete list of these revenues on page 26 of part 1 of the hearings.

REDUCTIONS RECOMMENDED BY COMMITTEE

At this time when the taxpayers are being called upon to finance the most far-reaching war in all history, I know that Members of the House as well as the country at large will be primarily interested in the reductions in the bill.

The committee considered estimates totaling $82,188,000.

The bill recommends appropriations totaling $72,861,000.

The amount recommended is a reduction under the 1943 appropriation of $119,999,000.

The bill also shows a reduction in the Budget estimates of $9,327,000.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. It will be recalled that that includes the amount that was designated in the 1943 appropriation bill to go for war purposes, $70,000,000; is that not true?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. It includes not only that but a number of other reductions in operation and maintenance, including administrative expenses.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I want to separate the amount that was used in the 1943 appropriation bill designated specifically for power devoted to war purposes. You have not that in this bill. As I understand it, there is not much in this bill, if anything, for power for war purposes; is that not correct?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Oh, yes. The bill contains funds for continuation of construction of the Central Valley project, for which $11,500,000 is recommended and which, together with the unobligated balance, will provide a total of $38,500,000 for this project. This item is for the development of power necessary to the war effort.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. CARTER. I may say to the gentleman from Ohio that in last year's bill the specific power appropriation was not separated from the general reclamation work. There would be a dam serving power and irrigation purposes and the appropriation would be made for the construction of that dam. Eventually it will be allocated as between irrigation and power. In this bill there is an item of over $11,000,000 for carrying on the work of the Central Valley project which will be expended largely in the construction of the Shasta Dam, the Shasta powerhouse, the generators and transmission lines in connection with it, and this appropriation was made this year because the War Production Board said that the development of that power there fits into their power program and they wanted that power developed for war purposes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. The only reason I raise the question is the gentleman from Oklahoma will recall that I asked specifically the question what amount of this appropriation is intended for power development specifically, and you will recall that the gentleman from Washington, Mr. Leavy, answered by saying about $70,000,000. That is the only reason I raise the question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I thank the gentleman, but, as the gentleman from California has also explained, the power and the reclamation projects are usually tied together.

Mr. ANGELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. ANGELL. It is a fact, is it not, that upward of 95 percent of the power developed in the Columbia River area is being used for war purposes?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I think that is true.

Mr. CASE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE. May I ask the gentleman whether any of the funds that are available for the Bureau of Reclamation for investigation of projects are available for the investigation of projects under the Water Conservation and Utility Act or are they limited to strictly the original type of reclamation projects?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I do not believe that there are any funds in here available for the purpose that the gentleman suggests; however, the committee has suggested, and I will be glad to discuss that a little further, that all these reclamation projects that have been stopped by the War Production Board be seriously considered with other projects for the purpose of providing for the war effort.

Mr. CASE. I understand that is for the type of project that can produce quickly needed crops.

Mr. COFFEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. COFFEE. I believe in the hearings there is a section devoted to a discussion of the Shipshaw development in Canada, is there not?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. COFFEE. I want to compliment the gentleman and the members of the committee on the advanced and sound stand they take with reference to the Shipshaw development wherein they showed by their sentiments, as they expressed them here, that they thought where priorities were to be granted, certainly we should give priority to our own public and private power development first before we give them to a development in a neighboring country.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I appreciate the gentleman's contribution and I may say that the committee stated itself very specifically along that line.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. JENSEN. I think it is well to have the RECORD show on this Central Valley project, that we are in this bill spending a comparatively small amount in order to get the power and in order to get the revenue flowing into the United States Treasury, and until we can get this work done there will not be any revenue.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is correct. The Government has already spent millions and millions of dollars, and it would not be good business to let the project stand idle at this time.

In other words, the bill shows a cut of 60 percent from the current appropriation and a reduction of more than 11 percent in the Budget estimates.

Of course, the reduction of nearly $120,000,000 below the 1943 appropriation is mainly due to the fact that construction appropriations in the bill have been drastically reduced.

Members will be especially interested, I am sure, in hearing of some of the larger reductions recommended by the committee. They are as follows:

	Reduction	Percent of reduction
Secretary's Office	$322,340	7½
Bureau of Indian Affairs	1,158,000	5
Bureau of Reclamation	5,636,200	27
National Park Service	835,000	18
Fish and Wildlife Service	855,000	15

Mr. BARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BARRETT. I should like to ask the gentleman if there is any provision made for an appropriation for the development of these projects by the Bureau of Reclamation in the event the War Production Board will relax its order on steel.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. No; there is no appropriation in this bill for that thing. But, of course if the War Production Board should change its attitude and decide that some of these projects are essential to the war effort—and I will say to the gentleman I think that is in the making—there are two things that can be done. The bill will go over to the other body and will be considered there. I can assure the gentleman that if it is provided for over there the committee will give sympathetic consideration to such projects as the War Production Board finds are essential.

Of course, we have a deficiency committee, in the event this bill is out of the way, that could take care of it.

Mr. BARRETT. I thank the gentleman. The people of Wyoming are particularly interested in this matter. There are a number of projects in my State that the people could use for the development of food, so vitally needed at this time in the war effort, and we are hoping the War Production Board will relax its restrictions in the matter of steel for these projects.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I appreciate the gentleman's statement. I was just about to discuss these War Production Board projects.

REMOVAL OF STOP-WORK ORDERS BY WAR PRODUCTION BOARD

As members will recall, the War Production Board issued stop orders against certain construction features of about 23 reclamation projects. Whether or not we agree with these orders, they have been issued and there is no affirmative action that your committee or this House can take in the matter now. That authority, as Members know, is in the War Production Board. Our committee did hold somewhat lengthy hearings as will be shown in the record, and I am glad to say that the Department of Agriculture has recommended that stop orders on at least some of these projects be lifted. And I might add here that I confidentially expect this to be done in connection with some of these more important projects in the near future. The testimony as to the need of food which can be produced on these projects was convincing.

During the hearings with representatives of the Department of Agriculture the committee questioned the Assistant Secretary, Mr. Grover B. Hill, as to the seriousness of the food situation, and he advised the committee, in part, as follows:

> Regardless of how much food we will produce, it will not be enough. Even though we could produce twice as much food as we will be able to produce, we could use it all.

The committee is deeply impressed by the frank statement of the Assistant Secretary and with the testimony of many others who are in agreement with him, and it urgently recommends, in view of Mr. Hill's testimony as to the probability of a food shortage, that the War Production Board promptly reinvestigate and seriously consider allowing priorities which will permit resumption of work on some of these reclamation projects which have been in a deferred status since last October. While some justification may have existed for the issuance of stop orders in October 1942, when the food shortage was not so apparent, the committee is strongly of the opinion that the time for optimism and complacency on the part of responsible officials has passed. These stop orders have involved a serious delay in the development of 877,500 acres of new land and 2,085,000 acres of existing land for which a supplemental water supply is needed. In view of the fact that we must feed our own civilian population, our armed forces, and are now being called upon to shoulder the major portion of the burden of feeding our allies it was and is the unanimous opinion of the committee that the Agriculture Department and the War Production Board should not only consider removing existing stop orders, but that they should also consider the desirability of undertaking a program of new and supplemental reclamation projects referred to by the Commissioner of Reclamation in his testimony which may be found in some detail in the committee hearings.

CENTRAL VALLEY PROJECT, CALIFORNIA

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. I understood the gentleman from Oklahoma to say that there is an item in here for the Central Valley project?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. On what page does it appear?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. It appears on page 66 of the bill.

Mr. RANKIN. Does it provide for the building of transmission lines?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. It provides for the building of transmission lines to a substation; not as much as was asked for by the Bureau of Reclamation, but it does make provision for the building of transmission lines.

If the gentleman will turn to page 66 of the bill, under the caption "General fund, construction," he will see the item which reads:

Central Valley project, California, $11,500,000.

Mr. RANKIN. Do you know to whose substation; who owns the substation?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will refer to the report, page 10, he will find this statement:

Central Valley project, California: The committee considered in connection with this item a supplemental estimate of $16,400,000, in House Document No 180, for continuation of construction of certain features of the project. This supplemental estimate provided funds to expedite completion of construction of the Shasta Dam, Shasta power plant, including the installation of two 75,000-kilovolt-ampere generating units and appurtenant transmission and switching facilities, all items enumerated having received the approval of the War Production Board. The committee has included in the bill a total of $11,500,000 for continuation of construction of all features of the project referred to in the Budget estimate with the exception of the proposed transmission line from the Shasta substation to Oroville. It is the recommendation of the committee that no funds in the bill and no funds heretofore provided therefor shall be used for the construction of a transmission line by the Government from Shasta substation to Oroville and that funds which have been heretofore provided for that purpose be reallocated for construction in connection with other features of the project. The use of funds necessary to construct the transmission line from Shasta Dam to the Shasta substation—estimated at between $400,000 and $500,000, is recommended by the committee.

Which I understand is owned by the Government—

Mr. RANKIN. But the amount for transmission lines in former bills was not reappropriated?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is correct.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. The gentleman is familiar with the Lugert-Altus Dam in Oklahoma where the Bureau has spent a lot of time. I wonder if the gentleman, who is familiar with that project, does not feel that it would be worthy of any additional expenditure above the amount obligated by the district at Altus to carry the project to completion, as it really involves the use of only a small amount of strategic materials.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes; I agree fully with the gentleman. The gentleman knows I have been very much interested in that and many other similar projects. I was rather severe in my criticism of the stoppage orders on 23 projects because I felt, as did the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, that regardless of how much food we might attempt to produce we would not produce enough. The Altus project is one of the outstanding projects in the country and offers a great deal in the matter of producing food for the soldiers and civilians.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Why was this transmission line to Oroville left out this time? It was shown before that it was necessary, and it was appropriated for. It has not been constructed, and it seems to me that it would be absolutely necessary to carry this power to be generated by Shasta Dam. Why was it left out of this bill?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from California, who is much more familiar with the project than I.

Mr. CARTER. I think the gentleman is in error in saying that this particular line was ever appropriated for. An appropriation was made for a transmission line that was going direct from the Shasta power plant to the San Francisco Bay region.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. Now, during the war emergency it was decided to tie into the already established line there owned by a private company. There are two different places into which it might be tied. One is at the Shasta substation and the other is at Oroville. You are going to tie into the lines of this company regardless of which place the transmission line is built to.

Mr. RANKIN. Then you are hedging this project about with the private power company and shutting out, we will say, for instance, the public power system in Sacramento and probably San Francisco from the benefit of the power development at Shasta Dam.

Mr. CARTER. Not at all. The gentleman perhaps is aware of the order made by the War Production Board in reference to the utilities tying their lines together. I recently visited the Northwest and found there that they use a network over the Northwest at Bonneville, Grand Coulee, and the privately owned power companies that are all interconnected. The War Production Board issued an order more than a year ago saying that this interconnection should be made where possible in the interest of saving. The line to Oroville was never contemplated for a permanent line. It was to be made on wooden poles, as I recall.

Mr. RANKIN. I am also aware of the tie-up of the public utilities in the War Production Board. That is what alarms me about this movement to strangle the distribution of the power to be generated at this Central Valley project, the Shasta Dam. I hope that if the House does not see fit to put this appropriation back in the bill it will be put in the bill in the Senate. If this Government can supply the money to build a dam in Quebec as large as Boulder Dam, surely we can find materials to transmit the power we are producing at our own dams.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I would like to refer to several other agencies in the Interior Department.

GRAZING SERVICE

We have recommended a moderate reduction in the Grazing Service. The Budget proposed funds to establish four additional grazing districts and we allowed funds for only two. We believe this service is doing a good job and helping to provide food by improving the grazing areas for cattle. As many of you will recall, this activity was started several years ago under the Taylor Grazing Act, and you will also recall the fervor with which our beloved former chairman and sponsor of this legislation supported this proposal. Its headquarters have been moved to Salt Lake City, and it is my definite impression that the move has proved so satisfactory that they will not return to Washington after the war.

BONNEVILLE POWER ADMINISTRATION

The Bonneville Power Administration is provided for only on an operation and maintenance basis, all construction work having been stopped by the War Production Board. They have an unexpended balance of about $46,000,000. There are obligations which will reduce this balance to about $30,000,000 by June 30, 1943. It is also expected that an additional war construction program will be approved by the War Production Board involving the expenditure of $16,000,000 for new transmission lines and substations.

GENERAL LAND OFFICE

The General Land Office has made an excellent record and has increased its receipts over previous years. Receipts during the fiscal year 1942 were $9,014,172. The total amount recommended in the bill for this office is $2,119,350. In spite of this splendid showing, we believe that a reduction can be made in the item for surveying the public lands, although the Land Office is surveying land for the Army and Navy. We feel that the Army and Navy should supply such funds as are necessary to survey bombing ranges, camp sites, and so forth.

BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS

The next item is the Bureau of Indian Affairs. We have made some drastic reductions in several items for this service. First, I would like to give you a few facts with reference to the participations of the Indians in the war effort:

Out of a total Indian population of 400,000, 13,000 have entered the armed forces. The Navajo Tribe alone have contributed 1,400 men, 350 of them volunteers, out of a total population of 50,000.

Many thousands of them are engaged in war work, including work in airplane factories and on the farms.

The first Distinguished Service Cross awarded on Bataan Peninsula went to an Indian, Pvt. Charles Ball, of the Fort Belknap Reservation in Montana.

I believe I have referred before to the late Maj. Gen. Clarence L. Tinker, an Osage Indian and commanding general of the American forces in Hawaii who was killed in action.

An unsolicited contribution of $1,000 for Navy relief came from a Kiowa Indian woman of Cement, Okla., who signed the check with a thumbprint. This woman not only lives in the district which I represent in Congress, but resides in a humble home on a farm a few miles from my own home in Oklahoma.

These are only a few of the contributions the Indians are making to the war effort. Suffice it to say that the Indians of all tribes and in all States are not only joining with other Americans of all races and creeds in buying war bonds but are giving their sons, the most precious heritage that any of us have, to promote the war effort and to keep America and the world a decent place in which to live.

A few of the major reductions we have recommended in connection with Indian Service appropriations are as follows:

Industrial assistance, which includes agriculture and stock raising, has been cut $135,000. These are worthy activities and have assisted the Indian in becoming self-supporting, but they are not of great value to the war effort, so we have reduced them substantially.

We have cut the estimate of $925,000 for Indian relief to $700,000. Because of the fact that opportunities for employment in war activities have greatly reduced unemployment, the committee felt justified in making this substantial reduction.

We have reduced the estimate of $1,200,000 for road construction and repair to $750,000 for similar reasons. Undoubtedly, the building of roads will become an important part of the post-war building program.

I see my friend, the Delegate from Alaska, Mr. DIMOND, is here. He appeared before the committee and made a very fine appeal for relief in Alaska. A pitiful condition does exist there. Yet all in all, we felt that we should make a rather sizable reduction in Indian relief.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the Delegate from Alaska.

Mr. DIMOND. If the gentleman will permit, I should like to point out to the gentleman and to the House that the amounts appropriated for relief are not for the people who are able to get jobs under any circumstances, the relief is designed for those who are not employable, most of whom cannot earn a cent no matter what the conditions are in the country.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I realize there is much merit to what the gentleman says. For that reason, we did leave in the bill $700,000 for Indian relief.

BUREAU OF RECLAMATION

As I have stated heretofore, funds are provided in the bill for only a few reclamation projects as compared with previous years. Appropriations generally in this bill are for operation and maintenance of existing projects.

One exception is the Central Valley project in California. The War Production Board has very recently given the go signal and the committee has included $11,500,000 in the bill for continuation of construction of certain features of the project essential to the war program. The amount we have recommended reflects a reduction of $4,900,000 in the Budget estimate.

We have also included $775,000 in the bill for installation of an additional generator at Boulder Dam. Power generated at the dam is being used by war plants in that area. Revenue from the sale of power is about $7,000,000 annually.

Funds are provided in the bill for the first time for operation of the Grand Coulee Dam which is the hub of industrial activity in the Pacific Northwest. Power from the dam is used extensively by war plants in that area engaged in producing aluminum and other important war minerals.

There are three 108,000-kilowatt generators in operation at Grand Coulee Dam at the present time and two 75,000-kilowatt generators. Three additional 108,000-kilowatt generators are being installed, 1 of which will be in service in August, 1 in November, and 1 shortly after the first of the year. That makes a total of 8 generators with a generating capacity of 798,000 kilowatts. Ultimately it is planned to install a total of 18 generators with a generating capacity of 1,944,000 kilowatts.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I notice there has been no money appropriated for certain projects on which there are stop orders from the War Production Board.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. I wondered just what position that would place these projects in. Suppose that during the next 4 or 5 or 6 months we can release these stop orders and proceed with these projects. Does not that leave these projects without any money whatever to proceed with?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Does the gentleman believe that is a fair way to deal with the projects that have been approved?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is correct, with the exception of some unexpended balances that, of course, would be available, but, as I said a moment ago, I am hopeful that the War Production Board will change its attitude. It may be that there was some reason or excuse for these stop orders last fall, but the situation has changed materially since last fall, so we are hopeful and we have reason to believe that a great many of these stop orders will be removed within the next few weeks, not the next few months, but the next few weeks.

Some of them are in the making now. As I suggested a moment ago, this bill goes to the other body, and if these stoppages are lifted there will be an opportunity to get funds in this bill. If not, Congress will be in session with the exception of a possible vacation in the summer, and in that event the deficiency committee, of which I have the honor to be a member, will, in all probability, be in session. It should not be difficult in a matter like this, which is essential to the war effort, to secure prompt and careful consideration of any deserving items.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this committee should set up some funds for these projects in case the stoppage order is removed. Take the Provo River project: We have been attempting to get the War Production Board to remove the stop order on that for several months, and are expecting to have it removed at any time. But suppose we do not get this removed until this bill is passed. Then will not this put us in the position where the War Production Board can say to us, that we do not have any funds to proceed with, and therefore it would be of no value for them to release their stoppage order? It seems to me the gentleman's committee is putting these projects in a very unusual and a very precarious position by not appropriating money to proceed with them.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. It may seem to the gentleman that this committee is derelict in its duty, but I think it is not this committee, but the War Production Board, which is all-powerful.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. This particular project I might say that it is 49 percent completed, that is, the Provo River project. It has been stopped because it uses a certain amount of steel, and steel right now is a strategic material which is needed in the war effort. For several months we have been trying to have the project approved in such a way that it would not require that much steel, and that it would be satisfactory to proceed with the completion of the project. I might say that the completion of this project is essential to the lives of practically all of the people in Salt Lake City, and the surrounding territory, if we happen to have a shortage of water. We have not been able to procure from the War Production Board as yet a release of this stoppage order. My question is, suppose this bill is passed without any appropriation for this project, then, right after the bill is passed, we go to the War Production Board again, trying to get a release. They are then in a position to say to us, "You have not any money to proceed with this project."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Does not the gentleman think that this committee would be in a very awkward position to begin making appropriations for projects that have been stopped by the War Production Board? Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the particular project to which the gentleman refers is an extremely important project, and I agree with all he says. However, there is now in the general fund $1,217,771 for the Provo project available now. If they lift the War Production order, the gentleman knows that there is $1,217,771 available.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. But it would take $10,000,000 to complete the project.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Oh, yes; it will take more, but in the meantime, I find that Members of Congress, as well as the department heads, know and others know the way at the other end of the Capitol, and they often get what they want over there. I think that if this stop order is not lifted until after this bill becomes a law, the deficiency subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations which, as I have said, is in session nearly all of the time, can consider the matter. The gentleman with his persuasive powers would still have an opportunity to come before his own colleagues, and tell them that this is essential.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to have the statement that when we go back to the deficiency appropriation subcommittee, that we will at least have a favorable consideration of this project, because I feel that this one project is absolutely essential to the war effort. It will not be very long before we can convince the War Production Board that that is a fact.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Along the same line, with regard to the same character of item, do I understand the gentleman to say that the appropriations herein made are really token appropriations or sustaining appropriations and may be added to as circumstances warrant, later? I am hopeful that the stop order will not need to remain in effect long on some of these projects.

Mr JOHNSON of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will look at these items he will see that they are very much more than token appropriations. They amount to millions and millions of dollars, much more than token appropriations.

Mr. MURDOCK. Certain appropriations here seem to me too small even under war conditions, for reclamation works mean power production and food production vitally necessary in war.

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I would like next, to refer to the Geological Survey.

We have recommended a total cut of only $72,702 in this activity. A considerable portion of the work of the Survey is of direct value to the war and it is for this reason we have not made greater reductions in this activity. Let me give you one or two instances of what they have accomplished.

One geologist employed by the Survey was exploring deposits in the State of Idaho when he discovered ore containing tungsten, which is essential for the hardening of steel. This deposit has been developed and is now producing over 10 percent of our total need. It is valued at between $15,000,000 and $20,000,000.

Another outstanding accomplishment of the Survey, with the cooperation of the Bureau of Mines, was the location of chromite deposits in the Stillwater region of Montana. Chromite is also used in the manufacture of steel alloys and as a rust resistant. As a result of this discovery, plants are now in operation capable of supplying about two-thirds of our total needs.

BUREAU OF MINES

The Bureau of Mines is, without doubt, more actively engaged in the war effort than any other bureau in the entire Department. For this reason, your committee recommended a reduction of slightly less than $200,000 in the estimate of $8,835,130. Let me call attention of Members especially to the fact that the Bureau's experimental and research work in connection with strategic minerals, pilot plant experiments, and the development of helium wells are all directly and materially aiding in the war program.

In connection with the item under the Bureau of Mines for oil and gas investigations the committee was particularly interested in a new estimate of $33,000 to stimulate oil production by secondary recovery methods which method is proving very successful. In view of the vital importance of oil in connection with the war effort, the committee is impressed with the urgency of this program and recommends that the Bureau of Mines exert every effort to carry the work forward to a successful conclusion.

NATIONAL PARK SERVICE

We have recommended a reduction of $835,190 in funds for this activity, a cut of about 18 percent, as heretofore stated. While this is a drastic reduction, we felt this was one activity which could be reduced during the present emergency without seriously impairing the administration, protection, and maintenance of the national parks of the country. Travel in the parks will undoubtedly be cut in half or more during the coming season, and large numbers of resignations to enter the war effort and the ever-increasing demand for manpower will make it impossible for this Service to secure qualified personnel to fill vacancies as they occur.

It is probable that some of the parks will be used to rehabilitate our men who have been disabled in the service of their country. In fact, park officials advised the committee that this is not only seriously contemplated, but that arrangements are now being made to use some of the parks for such purpose. Yosemite National Park is one of them. We feel that this is a very commendable undertaking on the part of the Park Service, and that several parks of the country would make ideal homes in which our war-weary, shell-shocked, and otherwise disabled veterans may be able to rest and recuperate.

To utilize the present parks, in our judgment, would be much more practical as well as far more economical than to build additional Federal hospitals. And one or the other must be done in view of the losses we have thus far suffered and the heavier losses we are fearful our Nation must suffer, according to those in a position to know, if and when we invade the continent of Europe and the islands of Japan.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes.

FISH AND WILDLIFE SERVICE

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. When are we going to get to the Fish and Wildlife Service?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I shall be very glad to discuss that now, and I will say to the gentleman that I have long been a believer in the Fish and Wildlife Service. I have long been a member of the Izaak Walton League. It is a great league and has done a great deal for the country in promoting fish and wildlife. I know the officials in charge of the Fish and Wildlife Service. Dr. Gabrielson is a great expert and efficient officer. And my friend Mr. Jackson, the assistant director, is doing a fine job. But some of the activities of the Fish and Wildlife Service are not directly connected with the war effort. Therefore, the committee felt that pending the duration it would be possible for the Fish and Wildlife Service to take a rather drastic cut, along with the Indian Service, along with the Bureau of Reclamation, and along with many other departments. There are 26 agencies of government in this department and we made substantial reductions in every one of them.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Now let me interrogate the gentleman. I appreciate the gentleman's membership in the Izaak Walton League and the sportsmanship angle of it, but what we are interested in is the commercial fishing industry. Those of us who live in that part of the country where these industries are located are constantly getting complaints about their inability to get information or advice or any kind of cooperation worthy of the name to maintain and build up the fishery organizations in this country. What I would like to ask the gentleman is whether or not in this appropriation any substantial cut has been made in the fishery-industry item?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. And whether or not the officials in charge of the Division of Fisheries are taking some notice of the complaints of the fishery organizations all over the country in respect to their inability to get information, advice, and cooperation from that department?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I must say to the gentleman that this item is cut, and cut drastically; cut more than some members of the committee felt it should be cut.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Has the fisheries-industry item been cut?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Why?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Because of the general feeling that it could be cut without doing any great injustice to the service and without greatly impairing the efficiency of that particular activity.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. When Dr. Gabrielson appeared before the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries last week in respect to a bill that had as its objective the transferring of the Fish and Wildlife Service from the Interior Department to the Department of Agriculture, he said then that he had not been able to give, or the Division had not been able to give as much service to the commercial fisheries as they would like, because they are limited. The gentleman says they have ample funds. They say to us they are interested in the fisheries industry, but that they are limited. What are the facts?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I made the statement at the outset that this was cut drastically along with every other agency of Government. All 26 agencies are cut. This is not the only agency that took a reduction. I made the further statement that it was cut more than some of the members thought it should be cut. We are in a desperate war, a war that will decide the future of this country for generations to come. I would rather be charged with cutting a little too drastically during these perilous times than to say the committee has spent too much money.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. The gentleman of course knows that the fishery industry is one of the basic food sources of the country. Last year we suffered a loss of over a hundred million pounds of fish below the year 1941. If we are going to build up our food supply, certainly we ought to lend every encouragement we can to that department of Government that has charge and has authority and has the machinery and the personnel to maintain that source of food supply.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Now the gentleman has made a very excellent speech and I appreciate it and I agree with him, but I hold in my hand a list of 37 Members of Congress who came before our committee, every one of them just as interested as is the gentleman in this particular industry; everyone of them showing us that their particular item was in the interest of the war effort. They were just as enthusiastic about it as is the gentleman. I will say to the gentleman that I think in most cases they were as much justified in asking for an increase as is the gentleman. Thirty-seven Members of Congress and three United States Senators and twelve pressure groups—everyone of them asking us for money, money, money. "Give us money." And, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Rich, used to say, "Where are you going to get the money?" If the committee had given those 37 Members of Congress, and the 3 United States Senators, one-tenth of what they asked, this committee instead of coming here and saying, "We have reduced the Interior Department bill 60 percent this year under what it took to operate last year," we would have to tell you that we had increased it more than 60 percent. So I will say to the gentleman, as important as it is, as much as I agree with him that this is an important item, there are other items and other people who were demanding additional funds.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. As I understand from reading the hearings the only reduction made in this appropriation is $172,000, an appropriation which was made a year ago for the purpose of making some sort of a substitute for tin for containers. That is the only reduction that is made in this item.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is not the only thing. We reduced the Budget estimate $68,540 because the committee was not convinced that it was connected with the war effort.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Is that in the "Fisheries industry" item?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. It is not shown here.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The Budget cut out $172,000.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. $172,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Then the committee reduced the item an additional $68,540.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Is the committee going to have any meeting at a subsequent date?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. This is the annual appropriation bill. There will not be another such bill until next year.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Is the deficiency committee meeting?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. It is meeting today. As the gentleman, I am sure, knows, it meets during this emergency almost daily. It meets almost every day. We should be glad to have the gentleman come before the committee. He talks very persuasively.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Yes; I must be making an impression.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I should like to state to the gentleman from Oklahoma that in some sections of New England our people have not had meat for over a week, and they can get no fish. I should like very much to appear before the gentleman's committee at a later date. I am hoping that the gentleman from Oklahoma will join in supporting the Senate's action when it puts the item back in the bill. We have simply got to maintain the strength of our workers; they must have the necessary food, especially when they are working in heavy industry.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I may say to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts that I am certain the Committee on Appropriations would always be glad to hear her, for she, too, is very persuasive. I noticed that instead of saying: "If the Senate puts the item back" she said: "When it puts the item back." I may say that she is probably correct in her statement of the situation.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I agree, and I am sure the gentleman will agree with our need.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I have a few more remarks which I would like to make in connection with the Fish and Wildlife Service.

For the second consecutive year, the committee has been faced with the duty of making rather severe reductions in some very worthy items for this activity. Doubtless they can and will be restored when the war is over. We have recommended a total reduction of $855,015 in the estimate which, as I have said, is a cut of 15 percent.

Under the heading, "Biological Investigations," we have eliminated an item of $87,500 for studies under the heading "Life History, Interrelation, and Distributional Studies of Wildlife." We felt that this was one item which could be deferred at least for the duration.

PITTMAN-ROBERTSON FUNDS REDUCED

The item of Federal-aid to wildlife under the Pittman-Robertson Act has been reduced by $500,000. The committee is aware of the fact that funds for this particular purpose are secured from a special tax on small arms and ammunition and that a bookkeeping credit on the books of the Treasury in excess of $9,000,000 is available for appropriation. However, in recommending a reduction of $500,000 the committee believes it is not asking too much of the sportsmen and conservation authorities of America to accept further retrenchment in this activity during the war period. While the committee is in sympathy with the purpose of the Pittman-Robertson Act, it wishes to point out that the fund will remain intact and be available for appropriation at a later date, particularly during the post-war period when millions of men returning from the armed forces will be desperately in need of work. This fund will provide a reservoir of peacetime projects which will assist in giving employment to such men.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. I am after some information, Mr. Chairman. I have not been able to go through all these hearings as yet, but I notice where the committee took testimony on the Bonneville Authority. Was any statement made before the gentleman's committee about extending Bonneville power up into Idaho and Montana, specifically up into the Flathead Lake region?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I may say to the gentleman that from time to time that suggestion has been made. I believe I am not giving away any secret when I say that it is actually contemplated as soon as it is humanly possible to do so. Whether it can be done during these wartimes I do not know.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. What justifications do they offer for raising the level of Flathead Lake, for example, and raising the level of Lake Pend Oreille?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I cannot tell the gentleman, but I shall be pleased to see if I can get the information for him.

GOVERNMENT IN THE TERRITORIES

Funds are provided in the bill for administrative expenses and other obligations in the Territories of Alaska, Hawaii, and the Virgin Islands.

You will be interested to know that the Alaska Railroad is now operating without a deficit which we had to meet annually up to a few years ago. For one period of time, covering several years, the deficit amounted to approximately $1,000,000 annually. It is estimated that there will be a profit of $1,500,000 during the next fiscal year. Profits for the current year are estimated at about $2,300,000.

ROBERT MORSS LOVETT

The last matter which I wish to call to your attention is the appropriation for salaries and expenses in the Virgin Islands, in which was contained an estimate of $5,800 for the salary of the Secretary of the Virgin Islands, Mr. Robert Morss Lovett. As you know, the House on day before yesterday approved the action of the Kerr subcommittee and the whole Appropriations Committee in recommending that no part of any appropriation, allocation, or other fund should be available for payment of compensation to this employee. The committee received a vote of approval of its recommendation by adoption of the amendment, the vote being 318 to 62.

While the Interior Department subcommittee was not charged with the duty of investigating subversive activities in the case of this individual, we were interested in the matter so widely publicized inasmuch as his salary was contained in the Interior Department appropriation bill. It is significant that in a personal letter from the Secretary of the Interior to Mr. Lovett under date of April 25, 1941, a copy of which was furnished the committee, the Secretary severely criticized this employee in a rather lengthy and sharply worded letter to him because of his alleged membership in certain subversive organizations. The Secretary, according to the letter, stated that the Department had frequently been called upon to defend Lovett against charges, first, that he was a Communist and, second, that he was sympathetic to communism and therefore in effect a so-called fellow traveler.

The committee made no effort to try this employee. But it did hear the present occupant of the office, who appeared at the request of the committee and expressed his opinions and so-called philosophies. It was the unanimous opinion of the committee that the salary, amounting to $5,800, could be eliminated from the bill, especially in view of the present occupant, without impairing to the remotest degree the efficiency of the administration of the Virgin Islands. The committee reached this deliberate conclusion despite a lengthy communication from the Secretary of the Interior defending the record, activities, and general conduct of the present occupant of the position recommended for elimination.

RÉSUMÉ OF RECOMMENDATIONS BY COMMITTEE

In conclusion and in summing up, permit me to remind Members of the House again that drastic reductions have been made in some instances. But, frankly, I would rather be charged with reducing some of these activities, especially nondefense activities, too drastically during this desperate emergency than to be charged with being too liberal with the various activities affected. It is one thing to talk about economy in government and it is entirely another thing to vote for drastic economies, especially when there are so many pressure groups, departmental heads, and others who are demanding more and more funds.

If you will examine the bill and the report you will find that all of the 26 agencies in the Department of the Interior have been rather severely cut. It cannot be successfully charged that the committee has picked on any one particular agency or activity. Let me remind Members also that this bill represents a 60-percent reduction under the current year, that it is reduced more than 11 percent below the Budget estimates, and that the Interior Department is now operating on an operation-and-maintenance basis. There are no new construction projects in the entire bill, and except for Central Valley, which the War Production Board and the Department of Agriculture tell our committee has become increasingly urgent for the war effort, there are no funds even for the continuation of projects heretofore approved by Congress and on which construction work had heretofore been undertaken.

It is with more than an ordinary degree of pride that your committee presents the Interior bill today, and it is our sincere hope that the bill can be expedited through the House without delay and without any material changes.

CENTRAL VALLEY PROJECT, CALIFORNIA

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. What happened in connection with the Central Valley project, Shasta Dam, and those items?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER] will go into some detail about those items. The Budget estimate was for $16,400,000. It was urged by the War Production Board as well as other Government agencies, including the Department of Agriculture, and while the committee did make a considerable cut in it, there is an item of nearly $12,000,000 in the bill for it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That was a supplemental request which was not contained in the original Budget estimate.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I wish to compliment the gentleman and his committee and state that I believe that the War Production Board stop orders as to work necessary for the food program should be lifted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. FORD. It had been my intention to offer a proviso containing a declaration of policy that by reason of the hooking up of this authority and private power in this particular case that the private corporations should have no vested right which they could assert after the emergency was over, but the Parliamentarian informs me that it would be out of order and could not be done.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I may say to the gentleman from California that private power certainly would not receive any vested right simply because of the action of the committee. I think the committee made itself plain, and the gentleman knows my position. I supported Boulder Dam, Grand Coulee Dam, and the Parker Dam. In my statement here I show that the revenue from these dams has been very gratifying and that those gentlemen who called them white elephants and ridiculed the idea of those dams as power projects are now admitting that they were not "white elephants."

Mr. FORD. I simply wanted to get the intent of Congress in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I want to express my thanks to the chairman of the subcommittee for the very fair and impartial manner in which he conducted the hearings. We of the minority were given every opportunity to examine witnesses and any other evidence that was presented. I also want to say that Mr. William Duvall, clerk of the committee, was very helpful at these hearings. He is a most capable clerk and renders a splendid service.

This bill is cut nearly $120,000,000 below the 1943 bill. Of course, we have got to do a lot of cutting in order to reduce the Interior Department appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1944 nearly $120,000,000 under what it was for 1943. After the Bureau of the Budget had used the pruning shears on this bill, the committee considered it and cut an additional $9,227,226 off the bill below the Bureau of the Budget estimate.

That is going to make cuts in matters in which many of us are interested. It made cuts in matters in which I was interested, I know. While I have been a member of this committee I have endeavored to hold the appropriations down; however, may I say that I am more satisfied with this bill than any bill that I have ever had anything to do with bringing on the floor of the House. I did not have my way in all respects. There are some items in this bill that I believe could stand even greater cuts. There are some items, a few, one in particular, that I feel have been cut too much, but you must appreciate that we cannot have our way in all these matters. We have to work cooperatively and we have to give and take. So for the first time since I have been on the Appropriations Committee I stand here on the floor of this House prepared to defend every item in this bill. I have never made that statement before, but I am here to do that in reference to this bill because it has been cut to somewhere near the place that I feel it should be cut.

Considerable was said a few moments ago about the matter of reclamation. I know the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON] is very much interested in that, and I am, too. May I say to the gentleman that a number of those recommended projects are being studied at the present time and I am hopeful that the stop orders will be removed as to a number of them. The fact that we did not make an appropriation for them in no way militates against the consideration that is being given them at the present time. I have talked with members of the War Production Board about these reclamation projects. I have talked to the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture and others who are interested in them from a food point of view. The question of their not being appropriated for has never been raised. In fact, as was pointed out a few minutes ago, there is money available at the present time to carry on some of that construction work. To be sure it is not enough to finish it, but may I say to the gentleman from Utah and to the other Members who are interested in reclamation, as I am, that the minute these stop orders are removed immediate steps will be taken to provide the money. May I say further that I will be one who will be helping those who are out to get the money so that the work can be carried on with the greatest dispatch.

Mr. Chairman, considerable has been said here about the reduction of the appropriation for the Fish and Wildlife Service. May I say that personally I am very much in sympathy with the work that that Service is carrying on. I believe that Dr. Gabrielson and Mr. Jackson and their efficient staff are carrying on that work and doing a very splendid job. But if you will turn to page 2 of the report you will find there that of the various items set out there is not one single item but what received a good cut. Perhaps our cuts were too drastic at times in connection with some of these particular items, and, as I told you awhile ago, I think they were in reference to one which I want to speak about a little later. While I feel they were very drastic, I think that all of us must take our cuts in good spirit. We have to work out this problem as best we can. May I say that I have been advocating cutting, so my colleagues on the committee endeavored to demonstrate to me in connection with an item I was especially interested in what might be accomplished when it came to real cutting.

The Bureau of the Budget was late in getting in their report on the Central Valley project, and when it finally reached our committee they approved an item amounting to $16,400,000. As the bill originally came to the committee there was not 1 cent in it for the Central Valley Authority, but this supplemental estimate was sent up after the hearings closed, and at my request the committee held a special meeting, considered that item, and then to demonstrate to me what good cutting was they cut it down to $11,500,000.

Mr. JENSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. I think it is fair to say, however, that there was cash available, unexpended, in that particular fund of $26,500,000. I think the gentleman is going to have to agree that I was one of the members opposed quite violently to the full request of $16,400,000.

Mr. CARTER. I will agree that the gentleman was violent when it came to cutting that particular item. He will not have any trouble in getting me to agree to that.

Mr. JENSEN. Very well. It had been shown they got more money than they could expend because there was $26,500,000 left in that fund. They asked for an additional $16,400,000, which the committee finally cut down to $11,500,000. If it had not been for the fact that so much money had been expended on this project a different attitude might have been taken, but this was originally supposed to cost only $170,000,000, while to date we have spent over $300,000,000. Somebody's figures were wrong, and, in my opinion, the committee was justified in cutting down this amount in the light of those facts and figures which we had.

Mr. CARTER. May I say in reply to the gentleman from Iowa, it is true that they have a carry-over of $26,500,000 as of January 31 of this year, and that is one reason why I reluctantly accepted this cut; otherwise, I would have been down there battling for the rest of it yet. But the gentleman is in error in one statement. He said the original estimate on the project was $170,000,000, which is true. However, the gentleman said that around $300,000,000 had been spent up to this time. The gentleman is in error in reference to that. It is now estimated it will cost, when finished, about $333,000,000.

Mr. JENSEN. I did make that error.

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. JENSEN. It is now estimated to cost $333,605,000.

Mr. CARTER. I will say a part of the additional cost has been by reason of increasing the height of the Shasta Dam so that more power could be generated; a part of that is brought about by reason of the fact that they propose to build a steam plant costing between $15,000,000 and $20,000,000, something I had never heard of until a couple of years ago; a part of it is for transmission lines, costing approximately $25,000,000, that I am not sure should be built. I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that if it is demonstrated the steam plant and this additional power line are necessary I am going to be down here advocating them, even though the project does ultimately cost $333,000,000, instead of $170,000,000 as originally estimated, because I believe it is worth that to this country, and I believe the power generated at Shasta Dam will largely amortize the entire project—irrigation, flood control, salinity control, and navigation combined.

Mr. JENSEN. If those facts had not been stressed and established before the committee, certainly he would not have got even the $11,500,000.

Mr. CARTER. Yes. I hope the gentleman from Iowa will study this Central Valley project carefully. I know he is sincerely interested in it, and I hope that I may have his support in the future in reference to other appropriations.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I appreciate it very much, and I am very sure that the gentleman will feel sympathetic to restoring the fisheries item when the bill comes back from the Senate. You know fish is a good brain food, and at the same time it provides physical strength, and there is need for all the brains and all the physical strength we can have today; there is a shortage of both fish and meat today.

Mr. CARTER. I am just wondering if the gentlewoman is suggesting fish as a diet for the speaker of the present moment.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The gentleman from California has a very fine mind. He does not need fish for that purpose; but there is a shortage of both meat and fish, and I know he would like to have it in order that the population of the country may maintain its full strength during these critical war days.

Mr. CARTER. I have a large fisheries industry in my own district, and I am interested in that. When this bill is in conference and this item of the fisheries industry is being considered, I will, as she requests, assume a very sympathetic attitude toward that item.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. For which we all thank you very much.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield.

Mr. HORAN. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not true that the same virtues that applied to the Central Valley project, all of which are very true, do not apply to most of the reclamation projects.

Mr. CARTER. Yes; I think the gentleman's statement is correct; I think that is true. These reclamation projects, generally, are projects that pay by their ultimate cost into the Treasury of the United States. In addition to that, they increase property values and stabilize communities and are very beneficial to the country generally.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. The gentleman said he would be glad to answer any question as to the reasons for the decrease of any item within the bureaus. May I ask the gentleman if he can inform us why they cut $68,540 out of the fisheries industry item, when it was admitted that they cannot carry on the work of that organization with that amount?

Mr. CARTER. As has just been said, and the chairman also answered that question, and as I called to the attention of the Committee a few minutes ago, we cut every item. There is not a bureau or an agency in here that, perhaps, could not take care of its work better if it had more money. They have just got to work a little harder. As I stated awhile ago, I have a great deal of faith in Mr. Gabrielson and Mr. Jackson, and I believe that even with the reduced funds they can carry on and do a very splendid work.

It may be that we hit that item a little hard. The gentleman is on the Appropriations Committee and he knows we must cover a large number of items, often in a short time, and it may be that we were a little unduly hard. I thought we were unduly hard about the Central Valley project itself, but, as I stated a few moments ago, if that item should be increased in the Senate, I would look with sympathy on the matter when we get in conference.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I can join with other members of the subcommittee that brought in this bill in saying that I firmly in my heart believe it to be a good bill. There are some items I should like to cut considerably more. Without hunting very far, I think I could find an additional cut of $1,000,000. I do not, however, propose to offer any amendments because this appropriation bill is such a departure from the bills I have worked on in the past that the improvement, I think, is worthy of a little support even from a humble Republican member of the economy bloc.

In the first place, this bill dramatizes some fights we have had on the floor in the past. You recall that for the fiscal year 1941 the appropriation for the Interior Department was $155,000,000. For the fiscal year 1942, upon which we voted in the summer of 1941, the committee brought in a bill of $177,000,000. At the time that bill was brought before the House for consideration, I presented a motion to recommit the bill to the subcommittee for a cut of approximately $20,000,000 because I felt we should be gearing the Interior Department to war. In 1941, the Secretary of the Interior was running around the country telling the people to get ready to get into World War No. 2, and I felt that if the Secretary of the Interior was aware of impending war his Department ought to be one of the first to gear itself to war.

During the hearings of 1941 I asked the Interior Department to prepare for me a statement of the actual amount that was for national defense. Out of the Budget estimate of $183,000,000 for the fiscal year 1942, only $43,420,400 was for national defense. That prompted me to make the motion in 1941 to cut $20,000,000 from the 1942 fiscal year appropriation bill. This attempt to hold the line against inflation and to hold the line against Government boondoggling, leaving the bill at the 1941 figure of $155,000,000, was wholly unappreciated by the majority of the membership.

The motion to recommit was overwhelmingly defeated and the bill went to conference, was raised considerably, approved by the Senate and House, and signed by the President.

Last year a considerable effort was made, especially by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Rich, to successively amend the bill, and I confess I was not a shrinking violet in offering economy amendments to the Department of the Interior appropriation bill. I see here now the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH], who offered several amendments at the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment last year. The first amendment the gentleman from Ohio offered, as I recall, was to cut the nondefense items of the Interior bill by 50 percent.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a correction?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. The amendment was to cut the nondefense portion of the bill—$92,000,000—by 50 percent, which would have been $46,000,000. That would have amounted actually to a reduction of 28 percent in the entire appropriation. In this bill the subcommittee made a reduction of nearly 60 percent of the 1943 appropriation.

That amendment received 5 votes in the affirmative. I then offered an amendment cutting the nondefense portion of the appropriation, $92,000,000, by 25 percent. That amendment received 14 votes. Then I offered an amendment cutting the nondefense portion by 10 percent, and that amendment, if I recall correctly, received approximately 38 favorable votes.

I am happy to see that a change has come upon the Members of this House, especially the members of the appropriations subcommittee having this particular portion of the Interior Department appropriation under consideration. It is truly gratifying.

Mr. JONES. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. I know that our former colleague from Pennsylvania, who many times stood on the floor of this House and asked "Where are you going to get the money?" would be pleased today if he were here to see the subcommittee reporting the bill as you find it today, recommending to the House for appropriation the total sum of $72,861,316 for the entire Department of the Interior.

Now I want to turn to the portions of the bill in which I think I could save another $1,000,000 if I were writing it myself. I want to pay my humble tribute to the other members of the subcommittee on both sides of the aisle for the fine spirit with which we approached the writing of this bill. There was never a time when we disagreed to the point of becoming disagreeable on any provisions regarding the amounts to be appropriated for any bureau or agency within the Interior Department.

The portion with which I find fault is in the authorization to allow unexpended funds of last year to be used for administrative purposes this year. The amount recommended by the Bureau of the Budget was $3,287,000. The committee allowed $3,200,000 for administrative expenses. The cut of $87,000 was for these purposes, and I quote now the committee report:

> There was a total unexpended balance of $46,600,000 available as of January 31, 1943, and it is estimated there will be an unallocated balance of $30,000,000 as of June 30, 1943. Of this latter sum the committee has recommended that $3,200,000 be made available for expenses of marketing, operation, and administrative costs, a reduction of $87,000 in the Budget estimate. The committee has applied the major part of this reduction to funds for district offices and has apportioned the remainder to miscellaneous administrative expenses, and particularly to such items as involve informational activities.

I hope the language of the committee in this report will be adhered to by the Bonneville Power Administration. I think this is the heart of the waste perpetrated upon the American people. I think the $87,000 is a meritorious cut, made at a strategic place.

If you will turn to the hearings, you will find a statement placed in the record showing the difference between the administrative costs for 1943, with a sizable construction program, and the 1944 administrative costs, with zero construction. The 1943 total figure, with the enormous amounts that were appropriated for construction, included only $3,525,000 for both construction cost and operating cost. The operation limitation, the major activity for the fiscal year 1944 with zero construction, was $1,655,112. If they could get along with an allocation of $1,655,000 for the administration of the Bonneville power operation during the present fiscal year, then they should not have a sizable increase for the 1944 fiscal year.

At page 482 you will find a table describing exactly what I mean. The table is prepared by Bonneville Administration officials:

Division	Requirements 1943			Estimated requirement, 1944 zero construction
	Construction funds	Operation limitation	Total

[1] Represents fiscal year total requirements and gives effect to reductions in staff already accomplished.

I have not heard anybody, outside of Dr. Raver, estimate there would be more than $16,000,000 for construction next fiscal year. I doubt if W. P. B. will release material for that much expenditure. So, if you cut $1,000,000 from the $3,200,000 that we have allowed to Bonneville, and leave this authorization at $2,200,000, there will still be a $600,000 leeway for whatever construction W. P. B. may allow, and Congress will still be in session, certainly, as in the past, to bring in a deficiency appropriation bill for any emergency that we do not foresee now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. JONES. I think this is a logical approach to cutting another million dollars from this appropriation bill, and that it should be made, because the type of personnel they have at the Bonneville Administration is the type that the Army and the Navy need—skilled personnel men, skilled engineers. We certainly need to enlist all of these people in the war effort.

I call attention to another item that bears reflection, and that is the number of personnel in the Interior Department by years. In 1944, for the fiscal year 1944, with the reductions that we have made, I do not know what the final amount of personnel will be, but I can say that if the Interior Department does what it should these cuts will find their way to the personnel that should be shaved in the war effort from the ordinary peacetime functions of the Interior Department.

I asked the Secretary to put a statement in the record of the number of personnel necessary to run the Interior Department by years. You will find the information tabulated on page 33 of the hearings. As of June 30, 1940, there were 48,947 employees in the Interior Department; as of June 30 1941, there were 48,569; as of June 30, 1942, 47,823; as of December 31, 1942, 13 months after Pearl Harbor, there were 39,774. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this record is a challenge to the great problem of manpower for the battle fronts, and on the home fronts. It seems to me that if the Secretary of the Interior had been as alert to gear his agency into the war effort as he has been advising others to gear themselves into the war effort, that we could have cut this personnel 1 year ago somewhere near the same proportion that the committee has cut the dollar sign in this bill today.

There is another item that seems to me very important and that is the cost of information in the Interior Department. Every year there is a battle to find out how much the Interior Department is spending for press releases and publicity. Two years ago I asked them to give me information as to the entire cost to the Interior Department and they gave me something near the figure of $76,000. Then a year later I was able to get a report from the Bureau of the Budget showing that the entire information cost of the Department of the Interior was something more than $2,400,000. This year I presented Mike Strauss, one of the Assistant Secretaries of the Interior, with these Budget figures. They are not prepared by any partisan, or by me. They were prepared by the Interior Department itself, who confessed that they had spent $1,429,878 for publications and $69,076 for press releases alone.

I asked them, first, to put a table into the record showing where any of this 1941 information personnel had been eliminated. You will not find the statement of that. Then I told them to break down the figures, category by category, on the same blanks and forms, so that the membership would have a basis to compare the 1944 fiscal year costs of the information service with the 1941 costs which Interior prepared and gave to the Bureau of the Budget. To this date they have not sent any letter containing the information to either the clerk of the committee or to members of the subcommittee containing the amount. This flagrant denial of information for the committee is a challenge to the integrity of the House. I must confess it has a New Deal pattern not wholly without precedent. If we want to know how much money the Interior Department has spent for information, certainly Congress or Congressmen ought to be able to get it. We should be the judge of what we should or should not get. Certainly it is not within the discretion of any agency in the executive branch of the Government to deny us any material for which we ask. At this moment the Department has not given us the figures that they have or should have, and I am sorry that the committee did not eliminate the entire amount for information service in the Secretary's office, because of this flagrant denial of the rights of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. NORRELL].

Mr. NORRELL. Mr. Chairman, the House has designated the Committee on Appropriations to investigate, prepare and report the necessary appropriation measures for consideration. This is a tremendous responsibility.

Your committee on appropriations is making every effort to be fair, reasonable and economical in the discharge of its duties; especially is this true of your subcommittee on Interior Department appropriations headed by our very able and considerate Chairman, Hon. JED JOHNSON, and Messrs. FITZPATRICK, KIRWAN, CARTER, JONES, and JENSEN. These other members of the subcommittee are also very able and conscientious. I endeavor to be helpful.

We are presenting for your consideration today the annual appropriation for the Department of the Interior, your division or branch of government having jurisdiction or custody of the Nation's natural resources.

At this particular time this Department is of very great importance. This war will be won by and with our courageous soldiers and our natural resources. This Department is mobilizing our resources—such as minerals, fuels, power and other critical and strategic materials for our war program.

At the time Germany invaded Norway in 1940 the Anglo-Saxon peoples controlled approximately 75 percent of the world's metals supply. Within a short time, Germany acquired the iron of Norway, the coal and iron of France and Belgium, the copper and aluminum-bearing bauxite of southeastern Europe and, in addition to this, the amount of metal available to us was reduced by Axis raids on our shipping. I think it can be said now that through the very outstanding accomplishments of the Geological Survey and Bureau of Mines, the United Nations can and will be supplied with sufficient critical and strategic resources for all our needs.

We have allowed the Grazing Service the sum of $856,700, which is $26,000 below Budget estimates, to continue the administration, management, and protection of grazing resources on more than 140,000,000 acres of public range lands in grazing districts established in 10 Western States. These services make it possible for this section of our Nation to produce 9,000,000 head of sheep; approximately 2,000,000 head of cattle, 130,000 head of horses, 150,000 head of goats, and approximately 400,000 head of big-game animals. Other appropriations are for construction and maintenance, $75,000, and for leasing of grazing lands, $8,000. The domestic livestock are owned by more than 21,000 operators who receive licenses and permits for public-range privileges and they actually paid to the United States Treasury in fees, $334,790 last year.

Your committee has recommended the sum of $225,000, which is $22,030 less than was appropriated last year, for the Petroleum Conservation Division which is necessary for continuing the work as contemplated by Executive Order No. 7756 of December 1, 1936.

The sum of $1,198,200, which is $141,800 less than last year's appropriation, has been provided for soil and moisture conservation. This amount is necessary to finance soil and moisture conservation operations on lands under jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior as authorized under provisions of the Soil Conservation Act of April 27, 1935. Approximately 450,000,000 acres of land or 23 percent of the total area of the continental United States remain in Federal ownership. Of this area 280,000,000 acres are under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior. Reports indicate that about 230,000,000 acres are in a condition requiring conservation treatment if the lands are to be kept in production and the badly eroded areas rehabilitated. Something like 60,000,000 acres under the jurisdiction of this Department is in a serious state of erosion. This program is partly self-sustaining. I believe last year they collected in excess of $812,305 for services rendered.

The above and some other divisions are located in the Secretary's office. The total appropriation for all these activities in the Secretary's office last year amounted to $6,855,365, whereas, this year the total amount recommended is $4,026,480 which is $2,828,885 less than it was a year ago.

I wish to call your attention at this point that no direct appropriation of new money is provided for the Bonneville Power Administration. It is, however, authorized to use not in excess of $3,200,000 of its unobligated balance of the current appropriation.

The sum of $97,200 is recommended for the High Commissioner of the Philippine Islands. This is $66,300 less than the appropriation last year. This reduction is due to cessation of activities in the Philippines. Personnel detained by the enemy in the Philippines are paid salaries and wages totaling $62,800 per annum. This amount is frozen as an obligation under the provisions of Public Law No. 490—Seventy-seventh Congress. The balance of the appropriation covers necessary funds for salaries and expenses of other officers, presently located in this Nation.

The sum of $850,000 has been recommended for the Solid Fuels Administration for War, which was created by Executive order under date of April 19, 1943. Under the terms of the order this organization absorbs the office of Fuel Coordinator for War. This amount is $70,000 less than the amount provided in the last appropriation bill.

The General Land Office has been provided with the total sum of $2,119,350. This is $201,110, less than was provided in the last appropriation measure. In this connection I call your attention to the fact that the earnings of this Department for the fiscal year for 1942 were $9,014,172.87. Their income approximately was four and one-half times as much last year as their expenditures.

Your committee recommends an appropriation of $1,388,500 for the Bureau of Reclamation, which is $1,258,560 less than the amount that was provided last year, and $12,100,000 for general construction funds which is $67,279,340 less than last year. The Bureau played a very important role during the fiscal year. It functioned as chief supplier of electric power, foodstuffs, and water—three basic essentials of national existence in war or in peace. Stored water irrigated more than 3,000,000 acres of productive land, and the gross value of 1941 crops on land served with Reclamation water was $159,885,998. These values do not, of course, include the livestock fattened on Reclamation projects, nor dairy products which, if included, would increase the production by approximately 25 percent. The Bureau is the principal Federal agency engaged in the construction and operation of water projects for irrigation and power. Its activities are confined to 17 western States. The rainfall in this region is insufficient for crop production. Without water conservation and irrigation it would be impossible for the 15,000,000 people who live in that area, to sustain themselves or maintain their great military centers and other war activities. Last year the Bureau supplied irrigation water to 37,000,000 acres of western land which produced two and one-half million 100-pound sacks of beans, about 36,000,000 bushels of potatoes, and they were able to feed their dairy herds which yielded to the Nation 144,000,000 pounds of beef and 1,709,000 pounds of milk. The gross revenue in 1942 from power plants on 10 projects operated by the Bureau exceeded $9,000,000. Receipts from landowners whose lands were irrigated by Reclamation Bureau amount to $6,122,430.56.

This committee has recommended for the Bureau of Indian Affairs, exclusive of tribal funds, the sum of $26,926,421. which is $1,845,320.43 less than was provided in the current appropriation bill. In addition to this sum, we have recommended a total for the Bureau of Indian Affairs from tribal funds the sum of $1,577,655. This is $20,205 more than was spent last year but this money belongs to these tribes and they have recommended this method of expenditure. I do not believe that the Indians are receiving as much consideration at the hands of Congress as other citizens of the United States, but these services do offer some measure of equality and the appropriation is much less than was provided last year.

We have recommended for the Geological Survey the total sum of $4,474,600, which is $216,490 less than the amount provided last year. During the past several years with the gathering of war clouds in Europe, the outbreak of war on that continent, its rapid spread to other parts of the world, its close threat to our peace and security, and finally our entry into the conflict, it became necessary for the Geological Survey to mobilize its facilities and its strength and shift its energies from peace to wartime activities. No agency of the Government has been of more vital service to the war effort than the Geological Survey and practically all its work presently is being done for the military services. The hearings are complete and I wish all Members would read the outstanding accomplishments of this great department. They have done very outstanding work in Arkansas in the exploration of zinc deposits in southwest Arkansas; quartz crystals in central Arkansas. Our quartz crystals are now being developed in greater quantity, and tests heretofore made of a small amount of crude crystals turned out to be higher in grade than that from Brazil. The Metal Reserve Corporation has leased certain areas containing quartz crystals in the Ouachita National Forests and this corporation proposes to do very extensive mining. Bauxite, of course, is our No. 1 mineral. More men and more money have been devoted by the Geological Survey on this mineral than all other minerals in Arkansas. More extensive geological surveys are planned for the future with money provided in this bill, and it can be said now that Arkansas will give forth to the Nation sufficient bauxite from which aluminum will be made to supply our needs.

We have recommended for the Bureau of Mines a total appropriation of $8,835,130, which is a decrease over the budget estimate of $194,905. It is hard to discuss separately the Bureau of Mines and the Geological Survey, because their work is to some extent in the same field. The Geological Survey makes the necessary surveys and the Bureau of Mines makes the necessary investigations and tests. Extensive studies and investigations, however, have been made of practically all of Arkansas' minerals as well as the minerals of other States. The hearings are very extensive. Sixty million tons of bauxite and "potential ores" depending on the perfection of the extraction process have been discovered in Arkansas: 6,835,000 tons grade A; 8,941,000 tons grade B; 10,439,000 tons grade C; and the balance of 34,000,000 which cannot presently be processed; and extensive investigations are planned for the ensuing year, by which it is believed that additional large deposits may be discovered. Arkansas produces presently 97.3 percent of the bauxite produced in the United States. Other strategic minerals, such as manganese, mercury, nickel, tungsten, chromium, tin, and a multiplicity of other critical materials have been discovered throughout the Nation, and these deposits assure us of victory insofar as the mobilization of strategic and critical materials are concerned.

The National Park Service has been provided with $3,957,810, which is $1,529,555 less than they had last year, and many of our parks are now being used exclusively by our military services. Others are being turned over to the military services, soldiers from the battlefields are going to have the exclusive use of many of our best and most beautiful parks for their enjoyment. The Park Service has rendered a very great contribution to the war effort.

This committee recommended $4,897,350 for the Fish and Wildlife Service, which is $1,014,220 less than last year. This Service is also engaged in the war effort and they are making a tremendous contribution toward solving the food supply of this and the other United Nations.

For all activities in Alaska we have recommended $1,392,600, which is $607,720 less than they had last year. Alaska has become a strategic area. For the first time in my knowledge the Alaskan Railroad has been more than self-sustaining. It may be said that Alaska is, so far as this Nation is concerned, the most strategic area at the present time.

We have recommended $21,600 for Hawaii, which is $46,800 less than the amount they had last year—the total amount for last year being $68,400. The Virgin Islands have been given $125,000.

I have not agreed with all of the reductions made in this bill. I do not agree with all items that have been allowed. However, as a whole, I think the bill represents the very careful and considerate judgment of this committee, and while very drastic cuts have been made in practically all items I wish to compliment the various departments and other witnesses for being charitable with this committee in its endeavor to honestly extend in this bill the economies so desired by the people in all matters and more especially in those items which do not make some contribution to the war effort.

Also, I would like to call your attention to the fact that while we have reduced the total appropriation from $192,860,791.43, allowed last year, to the sum of $82,188,576, which is the amount recommended this year, "making a net reduction of $119,999,475.43," I wish to call your attention to the fact that of the amount allowed for expenditures for the next fiscal year, all but approximately $19,000,000 will be expended from receipts of the various divisions of the Department of the Interior. In other words, the taxpayers of the United States, for the maintenance of all these activities, shall not be called upon to pay more than approximately $19,000,000. This is an excellent record, and, in my judgment, all sections of the Department of the Interior from its director to its minor officers should be highly complimented.

We think we have done a reasonably good job. We hope the House may reach such conclusion from a very careful study and consideration of the bill, and we believe the amounts finally allowed by the House should be sustained, bearing in mind the historic function of the House of Representatives with reference to making appropriation bills.

Summing up the status of the bill, I advise that the amount for the next fiscal year is $119,999,475, below the 1943 appropriation. This represents a very drastic reduction in practically all funds for the many activities of the Department of the Interior. The reduction in Budget estimates recommended by your committee is $9,327,260. The bill as reported to the House through voluntary cuts by the Department of the Interior, reductions made by the Bureau of the Budget, and reductions made by your committee, all told, reflects a 60-percent cut from the current appropriations.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORRELL. I yield.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to congratulate my colleague and the other members of the subcommittee for the splendid job they have done in bringing this appropriation bill to the House at a considerably less amount than was contained in the bill last year. I feel that the action of the subcommittee can be followed by some of the other subcommittees. It is a splendid example and I hope the example set will be contagious.

Mr. NORRELL. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL].

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Chairman, before covering the subject matter pertaining to the Bonneville item in this bill, I wish to point out the great contribution to the common defense made by this committee. This contribution has resulted from the committee's early vision in providing transmission capacity from the Bonneville plant, which is in my district. The War Department subcommittee also shares in this contribution by their early vision in authorizing the last eight generating units. It is with a high degree of satisfaction that I refer to the committee's contribution, as I can speak with intimate knowledge.

The facts are that when our Nation entered this war, we were ill prepared to fight a modern war. Such wars are based on highly developed electrochemical and electrometallurgical industries. Through the operations of international cartels, during the period from 1920 to 1941, this Nation was relegated to an inferior position in this field of activity. Those of us who have investigated this matter early knew that Germany was expanding such industries by 1,000 percent of the capacity available in 1933.

It is hard to realize how this Nation would have been able to cope with the existing situation without the early provision for Federal hydropower. It is apparent to those of us who are familiar with the situation, that our Nation's expenditure of blood and treasure, would have been far greater if we had no early expanded electrical capacity, so as to make electrometallurgical and electrochemical processes early available.

At least 75 percent of the light metals going into our air program comes from the Federal power plants in the Pacific Northwest, in California, the Western States, and the Southeast. The largest portion of these light-metal requirements comes from the western plants. Appropriation provisions for these western plants comes within the jurisdiction of the Interior committee. It has been stated on several occasions that preparedness depends on foresight. Without the foresight of this committee, our country would have been ill-prepared.

When the factual history of our war effort is written the work of this committee will stand out as an outstanding example of vision. The sad part of the story is that the men in the war agencies did not have vision or make full use of the authority and funds that Congress provided. Congress was way in advance of the war agencies on the light metal, rubber, mineral, and power problems when it passed the Thomas Act and provided funds for Federal hydro plants and the necessary investigations and processes connected therewith. What is more remarkable still, this vision was exercised in the midst of highly conflicting points of view growing out of the public-private power controversy. These controversies, from my observation point, are secondary to the proper utilization of our resources, both in peace and war. I take pride in the fact that I early urged what this committee approved. I pointed out the basic facts on the power, metal, and rubber situation when I addressed this House in May 1940—CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 8, page 5786. This was 8 days before the President addressed both Houses on the emergency and what lay ahead.

From this observation point it can be plainly seen that the prime industries of the future will be those engaged in the production of electrochemical and electro metals. Airplanes and our future commerce will not be possible without such productivity. In addition, we, as the arsenal for the world, are drawing on our own resources at a rate higher than any of us can visualize. We must find substitutes, if we are to hold our own as a first-class nation.

It is clear that to Congress belongs the task of post-war planning. In the consideration of such planning this House will find that they will have to consider two approaches to the resources phase. These approaches will be concerned with an inventory and use of the national resources that should be dedicated to future new competitive commercial uses, and secondly, such planning must cover necessary substitutions for those resources entering the depletion cycle.

Energy and power will play an important part in such future planning. Base metal electroproduction must come from low-cost power. The post-war unemployment problem is definitely tied up with adequate and proper resource utilization.

I deem it advisable for the membership of this House to be fully acquainted with the war-power developments in the Axis countries of Norway, and especially in Japan. We on the Pacific coast are especially interested in what Japan has and will be doing. Such an investigation will bring out the advanced preparations of all of these countries to secure world domination.

The South American situation also needs close study. That continent has nearly 50,000,000 horsepower of potential hydropower which is largely unused. This South American power is extremely high class on account of great falls and heavy, steady rainfalls. In the hands of unfriendly competitors, it can become a threat to our position. Nearly half of this South American potential power lies in Brazil in close proximity to high-quality and extensive mineral deposits. Another highly important study should cover the depletion of our own resources and an inventory of what we have and what we need. The growing pains experienced by our war agencies bespeak the necessity of a worth-while inventory.

I have been impressed particularly by these agencies' part in the shipbuilding program now being carried on by Henry J. Kaiser in the Pacific Northwest region. I doubt if there is any question in anyone's mind as to the importance of the Kaiser shipyards.

I think too many of us have not realized the importance of electric power in ship production. We hear of ship production always in terms of the large number of workers required. We usually hear of ship production in terms of astronomical man-hour figures, but it is quite apparent to anyone who delves into the subject that the modern, high-speed shipbuilding, which may prove the salvation of the United Nations, is at least equally dependent upon high-speed electrically operated tools, such as heavy duty cranes, presses, drills, lathes, and particularly the electric welding arc. These tools have been the instruments through which ship fabrication has been reduced from the World War No. 1 record of 236 days to less than 10 days at present in some cases. The yards in my district lead the country in ship production speed.

One kilowatt of electric power is necessary to make every five shipyard workers effective. A yard employing 50,000 men must have at least 10,000 kilowatts of electricity. If the electricity is not available, the 50,000 men must work under the obsolete methods of 25 years ago.

The figures given by Department of the Interior officials to the Appropriations Committee show that the Northwest region as a whole, and particularly the area around the city of Portland where the Kaiser shipyards are located would be a power shortage area if it were not for Bonneville Dam and Grand Coulee Dam, and for the system of transmission lines and substations through which the electric power from those two dams is transmitted to the industrial sections.

The power companies established in the Portland area have for several years been dependent upon Columbia River power which has been made available to them. Without this power they would be unable to meet the rapidly growing needs of their normal market, to say nothing of the added demands for power placed upon them by the shipyard developments. In view of this fact I am convinced that the present is no time to deny the reasonable request of the Department of the Interior for the use of funds for operation and maintenance.

On the basis of the committee's evidence I believe the Department of the Interior has been cooperating with existing privately owned utility systems in the region. It is pouring its power without stint into practically all of these systems. Through these interconnections Columbia River power is being made available not only to the shipyards in the Portland area but in the Puget Sound area as well.

Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the following excerpts from the hearings, page 470, showing the operations of the Bonneville agencies:

The vital role being played by the Administration in the war program is indicated by the fact that the region will be producing about 30 percent of the total aluminum pig capacity of the Nation, utilizing more than 625,000 kilowatts of power, which is more than the ultimate capacity of Bonneville Dam when completed—518,400 kilowatts; an aluminum rolling mill capable of producing 240,000,000 pounds of aluminum sheet annually, and using approximately 50,000 kilowatts of power; production of tremendous tonnage of new ships, 1 shipyard alone turning out 113 Liberty ships during 1942, with a dead-weight tonnage of over 1,000,000 tons; a steel-rolling mill capable of producing 72,000 tons of steel annually, requiring 14,000 kilowatts of power; the production of magnesium requiring 57,000 kilowatts of power; and many other essential products, such as calcium carbide, sodium chlorate, and ferroalloys. In addition, many other types of industries which are not direct customers of Bonneville have developed in the region in the war production effort, all of which development would have been impossible had not these power projects been built by the Federal Government. The war strategy has also required the construction of many airports, Army camps, naval stations, and other similar establishments of the War and Navy Departments in this area. The Administration has undertaken the servicing of all these activities, including defense housing projects, which have been necessary because of the tremendous increase in the number of defense workers required for this expanded production program.

As a result of recommendations made by the Administration for the acceleration of construction of electrical facilities in the region in anticipation of the present crisis, Bonneville Dam, which was scheduled for completion in 1946, will now be completed in 1943, and installation of generators at Grand Coulee Dam has been advanced so that six units will be in operation by February 1944, in addition to two Shasta units loaned to Grand Coulee for the duration of the war. Three more generating units have been authorized at Grand Coulee by Congress, but their completion date thus far is indefinite due to priority difficulties.

The present rated generating capacity at these two dams of 626,000 kilowatts will be increased by the end of the calendar year 1943 to more than 1,200,000 kilowatts, approximately 100 percent increase in capacity during this calendar year. The increasing tempo of the Administration's part in the war effort is reflected in its power deliveries since 1940:

Year	Kilowatt-hours	Increase over previous year
1940	354,208,000
1941	1,568,728,000	1,214,520,000
1942	3,939,600,000	2,370,872,000
1943 [1]	7,637,800,000	3,698,200,000
1944 [1]	9,647,533,000	2,009,733,000

[1] Estimated.

To meet these large increases in load, a rapid expansion of transmission facilities to take the tremendous quantities of power from the generating plants to the load centers was required. The construction of electrical facilities, accelerated in 1941 in anticipation of these new loads, was interrupted upon the declaration of war in order to conserve critical material. Only such lines and substation requirements were continued as were necessary to maintain minimum service to war plants. The rapid expansion of these facilities is best illustrated by the following data:

Fiscal year—	Mile-years of line in operation	Substations	Kilovolt-ampere-years capacity
1940	52.1	3	14,910
1941	614.6	25	265,029
1942	1,403.6	34	840,625
1943 [1]	2,228.9	50	1,639,369

[1] This includes only projects authorized as of Jan. 1, 1943.

FINANCIAL STATUS

The accomplishments of the Administration and the effect of contracts and new commitments are being reflected in the revenues being returned to the Treasury. A summary of actual revenues received to June 30, 1942, with estimated revenues for the fiscal years 1943 and 1944, follows:

1940, actual	$367,900
1941, actual	1,874,645
1942, actual	6,160,368
1943, estimated	12,003,519
1944, estimated	18,007,166
Estimated total June 30, 1944	37,413,598

The Bonneville Agency, which is under consideration, operates the transmission facilities, markets the power, and collects the revenues. The Corps of Engineers, another agency, operates the Bonneville generating plant. Its power costs have been allocated as provided by law. The Grand Coulee plant is operated by another agency, the Bureau of Reclamation. It is not completed, and its first costs have not been allocated as provided in the reclamation law. Therefore in approaching a pay-out cost determination we can deal with absolute figures as far as Bonneville power plant and Bonneville Power Administration are concerned and estimated figures for Grand Coulee. This will be close enough for the purposes at hand.

I will not deal with this over-all figure by combining the figures given in the hearings with citation thereto. The figures I am covering apply to the fiscal year 1944 as given in the RECORD. Revenues and expenses are given for other years also, but for brevity I will cover the 1 year:

The gross revenue given on p. 480 is	$18,085,500
Operating and depreciation expenses, Bonneville Power Administration alone, p. 481	4,271,990
Net Bonneville Power Administration operating income, p. 481	13,813,510
Interest on Bonneville Power Administration Federal investment, p. 481	2,145,696
Net income available for power cost and surplus, and operating expenses at generating stations, p. 481	11,667,814
The operating expenses at stations, p. 521	1,344,675
Net for interest and amortization of two dam plants	10,323,139

The only item that need be covered to complete the over-all pay-out calculation is the interest and amortization of the plant costs allocated to power. This is given on page 518 of the hearings, and when considered with the generating plant operating expenses I have just cited, shows surplus over-all charges of all kinds of $3,267,000 for the fiscal year 1944. These figures definitely answer the question of returns as given from the balance sheet figures submitted by the Administrator.

I must add a word of caution at this point, and that is not to take random figures scattered throughout the hearings. The only correct approach is via the balance sheet route as given on pages 480 and 518 of the record.

The real control must not be lost in any discussion. This control is the requirement of the basic act that requires rate reviews every 5 years to insure a balance sheet return to the Federal Treasury. It is mandatory for the Administrator to charge rates which will insure a full return.

I need to point out that the War Production Board has not used these facilities to their fullest extent. If they had we would have had more planes in the hands of General MacArthur. The testimony of Mr. Krug, as given on pages 959 to 983, is misleading as there is a gap of 2 years in W. P. B. recited activities, which is ignored. The record is complete in the appropriation hearings on the Senate side.

If this record is compared with the House Krug testimony, the gaps will be obvious.

The Department of the Interior is asking for no new appropriations for the Bonneville Power Administration in 1944. It is asking only for congressional approval to reallocate $3,287,000 of moneys already appropriated so that the Bonneville Administration can carry on its operation and management functions effectively during the next fiscal year.

Such funds are to be used primarily for the purpose of transmitting power to war industries in the Pacific Northwest with a combined metal-plant valuation in the neighborhood of $300,000,000. Those plants are all being operated by private enterprise and their combined value is roughly equal in amount to the total investment thus far in Bonneville and Grand Coulee Dams and the Federal electric power transmission system which takes the power from those dams to market.

I should like to point out that power, when it is made in the generators at Grand Coulee Dam and at Bonneville Dam, is of little value to anyone. There are no big cities close to either of those dams. There are no industries located at either of those dams. Bonneville and Grand Coulee power is of value only when it can be delivered to the industrial centers and the military zones of the Northwest.

That is what the Department of the Interior, through the Bonneville Power Administration, is doing, and that is the purpose of the requested funds.

I am informed that 95 percent of all Bonneville and Grand Coulee power will be delivered to war industries during the next fiscal year. These war enterprises include pig aluminum plants capable of producing more than 600,000,000 pounds of raw metal annually, one of the largest sheet rolling mills in the country, a new magnesium metal plant with 800 electric furnaces, several chemical plants devoted to the manufacture of explosives and other war materials, a number of alloy plants which make materials vital in the production of armor plate and other hard-steel products, and at least 1 dozen military installations such as Army and Navy airfields, depots, and encampments. All of these enterprises are war enterprises; and all of them require electric power which they would be unable to receive if it were not for the Federal development of the Columbia River. For the delivery of power to all of these enterprises and to others which will be established during the fiscal year 1944, the Bonneville Administration will collect more than $15,000,000—perhaps as much as $20,000,000—which will be paid into the Treasury of the United States. These power sales will more than double the volume of sales by the Bonneville Administration during the past 12 months.

The Bonneville Administrator has testified before the Appropriations Committee that he will require $3,287,000 to operate his agency. More than 10 percent of that money is required for armed guards to protect the system against accident and sabotage.

According to the Bonneville Administrator's figures 3,287,000 operating dollars will put into the United States Treasury more than $15,000,000.

That sounds like good business. I urge the approval of this item in the pending bill.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, over a period of years I have entertained some difficulty about the ramifications of the various power agencies in the Federal Government. As a result of some studies in that field I dropped a bill in the hopper today to consolidate all power activities of the Federal Government in a so-called Federal Power Administration, under the direction and supervision of a Federal Power Administrator.

One never realizes the diffusion of power operations in the Government until he sets himself about it for a little while and determines how far they go. Nor do we have an adequate conception of the immensity of our power operations and the investment in public power today. We ought to make up our minds that public power is here to stay. It is like administrative law. It is here to stay, and it has to have some good direction. It has to have some coordination when necessary. But I start from the broad premise that public power is here to stay. So the thing to do is to coordinate these activities wherever possible, that we may more intelligently legislate and appropriate in this field.

It occurs to me we are appropriating something in excess of $300,000,000 a year or more on power projects and that our investment in public-power projects is well in excess of $2,000,000,000. You cannot minimize that kind of an investment, and it certainly needs the attention of Congress.

I doubt very much whether there is a single individual in Congress or out, or in any place in the Government today who has a truly comprehensive understanding of our power activities. We have already consolidated in some other fields. We have taken the security agencies and put them under the Federal Security Agency. The Federal loan functions have been placed under the Federal Loan Agency. Public works functions have been placed under the Federal Works Agency. By the same token it occurs to me that all power activities ought to be put under a single power administration for better direction and development.

Let us take a look at the ramifications of power throughout the Government. In the field of planning for power projects we have the National Resources Planning Board. We have the War Production Board, which deals with the allocation of power supply. We have the Army and Navy Munitions Board and the National Power Policy Committee.

In the field of power generation, marketing, and distribution we have the Bureau of Reclamation, which is considered in the instant bill, which includes Grand Coulee, Fort Peck, and others. In fact, the Bureau of Reclamation has charge today of some 28 power projects on 17 reclamation projects, and its installed capacity is 1,447,000 kilowatts. In the field of generation you also have the Indian Bureau. Next, you have the Tennessee Valley Authority, with 1,300,000 of installed kilowatts. Finally, you have the Federal Works Agency, which has control of the construction of a power project on the Santee-Cooper and also supervises the Grand River Dam in Oklahoma, and a number of projects in Nebraska.

Here then are two categories, namely, those agencies dealing with planning in the power field and those that deal with generation. Next, you have those that are lending agencies on public power. That includes the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It includes the Defense Plant Corporation and the Rural Electrification Administration. There is a fourth category—the control agencies that deal with the regulation of power. That would include the War Production Board, as it relates to allocations of power supply. It would include the Federal Power Commission, which deals with rates and applications. It would include the Securities and Exchange Commission, which deals with regulation of holding companies and securities.

It is a rather interesting thing that if you go about looking for all these power agencies you will find them in four different departments of government and in six or more differentiating agencies. Obviously, no legislator can keep that whole complicated picture in mind.

If we consider it from the standpoint of legislation, think of the legislative committees that deal with the subject. First of all, the Committee on Military Affairs has jurisdiction over certain power activities—all legislation dealing with the Tennessee Valley comes under that committee; second, there is the Flood Control Committee; third, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, where power is involved; fourth, there is the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which deals with power as it relates to control, through the Securities and Exchange Commission; next, you have the legislative Committee on Agriculture, which legislates on matters that pertain to the Rural Electrification Administration; finally, when it comes to the lending functions involving power, the Defense Plant Corporation and the R. F. C. customarily appear before the Committee on Banking and Currency.

There you have six legislative committees of the Congress that deal with this question of power legislation.

When it comes to appropriations for power it is the same bewildering labyrinth of authority. The Subcommittee on Agricultural Appropriations deals with appropriations for the Rural Electrification Administration. This Interior Department bill from the Interior Subcommittee deals with the Bureau of Reclamation, Indian Affairs, and National Park Service, including Bonneville, Grand Coulee, Fort Peck, and others. The Independent Offices Subcommittee has jurisdiction over T. V. A., the Federal Power Commission, and the Securities and Exchange Commission. The War Department Civil Functions Committee has jurisdiction over the Army and Navy Munitions Board and the planning activities of the War Department in the field of power. Finally, if there is any deficiency or supplemental requests that the other five subcommittees did not catch, then you still have the deficiency subcommittee. Here, then, are six subcommittees of the Committee on Appropriations and six legislative committees that deal with this whole question of power.

There is not only duplication in the field of public-power activities but there is duplication right here in Congress in handling problems relating to the power activities of government. We must spell out this whole program of consolidation. I am persuaded that we have got to consolidate. We must unify these activities if we are going to have a harmonious and effective public power policy; so the bill which went into the hopper today sets up the Office of Power Administration under the supervision and direction of a Federal Power Administrator. Consolidated therein will be Bonneville, Tennessee Valley Authority, the Rural Electrification Administration, the Federal Power Commission, the R. F. C. activities insofar as they relate to power loans, the Securities and Exchange functions that relate to the control and consolidation of power activities, and similar functions of the Federal Works Agency. In addition thereto, it sets up an advisory committee consisting of the chairman or the administrative heads of every one of these agencies, who, taken together, shall be a Federal public-power advisory committee in wartime and in peacetime.

The National Power Policy Committee and the Power Division in Interior would be abolished. I propose to bring about a transfer of those functions in the interest of economy, in the interest of efficiency, in the interest of a coordinated public power policy, and in the interest of a development in the future that will be coordinated, that will have good substantial direction, and that will make it possible then for the Congress to intelligently deal with this whole ramifying and complicated subject.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Has the gentleman included anywhere in his bill coal or oil? They are a form of power that is increasingly tied up with the public interest and increasingly subject to Federal regulation. It seems to me some day we have got to have some sort of coordinated regulation of these competing forms of power that compete between each other and we have got to have regulation that will include both public and privately owned sources of these three competing kinds of power.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I did not include them for a very good reason. I realized first that they are competitive, and secondly there has been a good deal of controversy already over regulation of these competing fuels whether we call it power, oil, coal, hydro, or something else; and for that reason I leave it as a sort of separate domain because each of them is already being separately dealt with by different agencies of the Government.

Several years ago, I served on the special committee of this House on the reorganization of the executive branch of the Government. It was a fruitful and constructive experience. The studies of that committee were persuasive of the need for more and more reorganization of Federal agencies in the interest of economy, better policy, and improved public service. Here is a field in which the reorganization technique can be applied in the interest of consolidation of these activities that should prove most salutary. I believe that this proposal merits the immediate consideration of the appropriate committee of the House.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa, a very valuable member of the committee [Mr. JENSEN.]

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, most of the items in this bill have been covered quite thoroughly by our very able chairman, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON], and by the very able ranking Member on our side, the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER], and also by my colleague on the committee, the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JONES]. I wish to say here that every member of the committee worked hard and long to bring out a bill that we could support on the floor unanimously. For almost 6 weeks we met daily. We listened to over 100 people who came before us to testify. After that we marked up the bill, which was no small job. Generally speaking, the workings of the Interior Department are carried on very efficiently. Nevertheless, there was room for saving and so we did cut this bill to what we thought necessary, but leaving enough money for every branch of the Interior Department to carry on the work of the Department and carry it on efficiently. I possibly got a little tough on occasion, but I am not apologizing for it, because under present conditions it is necessary to cut all nonwar expenditures to the bone. Our Treasury is in mighty bad shape right now, and it is going to be in worse shape as this war goes along; so it behooves everyone of us to save every dime we can without detriment to our war effort. It is not pleasant to me to have to take sharp issue with the ranking Member, the distinguished and able gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER]. I appreciate his position in regard to the Central Valley project in his State. The argument was developed quite thoroughly and we finally decided to permit an expenditure of $11,500,000.

Mr. Chairman, some disturbing things were brought up and aired quite thoroughly in the committee, part of which had to be off the record because it was of such a nature as to be military secrets. The disturbing thing that came before our committee was the fact that there seems to be a disposition on the part of some high officials in this Government to hinder the development of our national resources.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. I hesitate at this time during this war emergency to bring this out too forcibly, but I can say in all honesty and sincerity that it just does not make sense when we need every kind of strategic war material, when we stop projects of all kinds, reclamation, power, and every other kind of Government project and many private projects and industries from getting the necessary steel and other materials that they need to carry on their business that at the same time something should be stopping these mines and our domestic resources from being developed.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. SPRINGER. I want to compliment the distinguished gentleman on the fine statement he is making. I would like to ask one question, however. On page 27 of the report which accompanies the bill I find that attorneys' fees for certain Indian tribes of the Flathead Indian Reservation in Montana have been increased $18,400 over the amount which was awarded in 1943. Will the gentleman explain that large increase in attorneys' fees for those Indian tribes?

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENSEN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. CARTER. May I say that the attorneys' fees for the Indians comes out of the tribal fund.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is correct.

Mr. CARTER. They have a tribal council that carries on the business of the tribe and it has requested this. As I recall they pay the attorneys for a period of 10 years. I have forgotten the exact number of years, but it is over a number of years. May I say further that the committee has scrutinized these attorneys' fees very carefully in this bill and in every other bill since I have been on the committee because we did not want unscrupulous attorneys taking advantage of the Indians. I think the gentleman will find upon investigation that there is ample justification for every cent that is allowed for attorneys' fees.

Mr. SPRINGER. May I ask this additional question of the distinguished gentleman now speaking and also members of the committee: Is it the opinion of the committee that this increase of attorneys' fees is fully justified by the testimony which was heard by the committee?

Mr. JENSEN. Yes. In fact, proven to our satisfaction, I may say to the gentleman. There was need for this additional attorney's fee and consequently we all agreed on it. I do not think there was a dissenting vote on this particular item.

Mr. SPRINGER. I thank the gentleman for his explanation.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, I was speaking about these metals that we have which are not being developed. Since the time our report has been made public and our hearings have been made public just a few days ago I have received numerous letters from people in different sections of the United States who have private metal deposits. They all tell me how they have been given the walk-around and have not had an opportunity to develop their mines right at a time when we need these metals so badly, not only for our war effort but also to produce food. Our farmers are being stymied to a marked degree because they cannot get the necessary machinery, consequently our food-production program suffers while at the same time this is permitted to go on. Some individuals in high places are holding back the development of our own natural resources and I promise right now that I shall not stop until I have a pretty good idea who the fellows are who are guilty of what I call sabotaging our war program. I invite every good American to assist me in correcting this thing at the earliest possible moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE].

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, the bill we now have before us carries appropriations involving some $72,000,000. It makes appropriations for at least 6 unrelated subjects and has over 100 separate and distinct items. To my mind this raises the question of the desirability of a separate item veto in our procedure here in Congress. In the past various Presidents, including President Grant, President Hayes and, I believe, President Taft, have recommended a separate item veto by constitutional amendment. Thirty-nine States in the Union have a program under which the Governor may veto an item separately or in some cases he may reduce an item.

I think the principal question here, perhaps the only question, aside from the desirability of the program, is whether or not it can be accomplished without amending the Constitution. It is my view that it can be. In order to stimulate a little thought on this subject I am today introducing a bill which is very simple and provides in substance that each item of an appropriation bill shall be considered a bill within the meaning of article I, section 7, and may be vetoed by the President separately. The item vetoed would be returned to the Congress for further consideration just as other bills are considered under such circumstances.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a brief statement I have prepared on the constitutionality of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, in his budget message several years ago President Roosevelt directed the attention of Congress to the desirability of a power in the Executive to veto separate items in an appropriation bill, and called upon Congress to decide whether this result should be accomplished by a constitutional amendment or by legislation. A constitutional amendment would, of course, make this practice obligatory on all future Congresses. However, it would seem that the desired result could be attained without the necessity of a constitutional amendment.

Article I, section 1, of the Constitution pfovides as follows:

> All legislative power herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and a House of Representatives.

In construing this section, it is necessary to consider other pertinent sections as well as the general intent of the instrument as a whole. While the section provides that "all legislative power * * * shall be vested in a Congress," it is clear that the framers were referring here only to affirmative legislative power. In article I, section 7, they gave legislative power to the Executive in the following language:

> Article I, section 7: Every bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate, shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the President of the United States; if he approve he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his objections, to that House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the objections at large on their journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If, after such reconsideration, two-thirds of that House shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two-thirds of that House, it shall become a law. But in all such cases, the votes of both Houses shall be determined by yeas and nays, and the names of the persons voting for and against the bill shall be entered on the journal of each House respectively. If any bill shall not be returned by the President within 10 days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the same shall be a law, in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the Congress, by their adjournment, prevent its return, in which case it shall not be a law.

The Courts have held that this provision confers upon the Executive legislative power. The legislative power of the Executive is purely negative in character, and even that power of negation is subject to being overruled by a two-thirds vote of Congress. In brief, Congress is the sole repository of affirmative legislative power; that is, the power to say what the law shall be. The Executive has only the power to say that a certain measure adopted by Congress shall or shall not be the law. However, the right and duty of the Executive to exercise this negative power as his judgment dictates, is as clearly expressed in the Constitution as is the right and duty of Congress to perform its part of the legislative function. This is clearly borne out not only by the language of the Constitution, but by the history of the veto power in Anglo-Saxon government.

In an early day in England, the Crown possessed all the powers of legislation. The rise of the English Parliament first restricted this power of legislation to a negative power of veto, and finally abolished it altogether, the last veto being by Queen Anne in 1708. In the American Colonies, the veto power had a different history. In all the Colonies, the Governor could veto legislation, and in all but Maryland, Rhode Island, and Connecticut the King could veto a bill, even after it had been approved by the Governor. The King used the veto power freely to prevent acts of the Colonies injurious to the mother country. This abuse of the veto was complained of in the Declaration of Independence. After the beginning of the Revolutionary War, the American Colonies limited the veto power of their respective Governors. In no State but Massachusetts did the Governor have even a qualified veto over legislation, and that not until the Constitution of 1780 was adopted. Under the Articles of Confederation there was, of course, no Executive veto.

The framers of the Constitution were, of course, familiar with this history. They knew both the advantages and disadvantages of the Executive veto, and the subject was very carefully discussed at the Constitutional Convention. It was their general purpose to create a Government consisting of three coordinate branches, legislative, executive, and judicial. In order to maintain such a government, it was necessary not only to carve out the place of each branch in the whole scheme, but also to declare certain fundamental principles for keeping each in its respective sphere. The power of veto was given to the President as a check on the law-making powers of the Congress. The delegates evidently had in mind two main purposes; first, the protection of the executive branch from encroachment by Congress; second, the prevention of hasty and ill-advised legislation. This was well expressed by Alexander Hamilton in the following language:

> It establishes a salutary check upon the legislative body, calculated to guard the community against the effects of faction, precipitancy, or of any impulse unfriendly to the public good, which may happen to influence the majority of that body (Federalist, No. 73).

Beginning in 1820, the use of the rider—often attached to an appropriation bill—became prevalent and often reduced the Executive veto to a nullity. By rule, the House of Representatives subsequently prohibited this practice. However, the practice of assembling appropriations in large bills containing hundreds of separate items on wholly unrelated subjects is rapidly accomplishing the same result.

Many of the States, confronted with this problem, have met it by constitutional provisions definitely giving the Executive the power to veto a separate item of an appropriation bill. Thirty-nine States have taken such action. As opposed to this plan of protecting the integrity of the Executive veto by constitutional provision, the Federal Constitution leaves the matter to the good faith of Congress. The Constitution is, after all, not a mere compilation of legalistic rules. It is rather the pattern of a certain philosophy of government. It states general principles rather than detailed procedure. The fundamental object of the Constitution was to create a government of laws as distinguished from a government of men. It sought to accomplish this by dividing the powers of government among three independent and coordinate branches, each one of which should be a check on the other. It is to this fundamental principle rather than to any mere declaration in the Constitution that the citizen must look for the protection of his property, his liberty, and even his life. The Constitution does little more than to create these three branches and draw the line between them. It seeks to maintain that division for all time by setting up certain checks and balances. In the last analysis, however, the preservation of that form of government is not to be sought in any mere words written on paper, but rather in the acceptance of that philosophy of government of which the words themselves are the mere evidence. Such a government can only be maintained if each independent branch thereof recognizes the rights and duties of the others and protects them as actively as it protects its own.

In the matter of legislative procedure, the Constitution simply says:

Article I, section 5: Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings.

This was intended as a broad and comprehensive grant of power and has so been recognized by all three branches of the Government. In construing the right of Congress to make rules, the Supreme Court has said, in United States v. Ballin (144 U. S. 1):

It—

The House of Representatives—

may not by its rules ignore constitutional restraints or violate fundamental rights, and there should be a reasonable relation between the mode or method of proceeding established by the rule and the result which is sought to be attained. But within these limitations, all matters of method are open to the determination of the House, and it is no impeachment of the rule to say that some other way would be better, more accurate, or even more just. It is no objection to the validity of a rule that a different one has been prescribed and in force for a length of time. The power to make rules is not one which once exercised is exhausted. It is a continuous power, always subject to be exercised by the House and within the limitations suggested, absolute and beyond the challenge of any other body or tribunal.

In that case, the Supreme Court called attention to the fact that the Constitution required the presence of a quorum, but set up no method of making this determination and that it was therefore within the power of the House to prescribe any method which would be reasonably certain to ascertain the fact. The right of Congress to make rules for the purpose of legislation is so broad and final that the Supreme Court accepts the complete law as it has passed Congress and been signed by the President and deposited with the Secretary of State, as the law which passed the House in accordance with their rules, and will not have recourse to the Journals of the respective Houses to prove the contrary.

Attention has been called to article I, section 7, which provides that "every bill shall be presented to the President of the United States." Webster defines a bill as follows:

A form or draft of a law presented to a legislature but not yet enacted, or before it is enacted; a proposed or projected law.

The term "bill," as used in the Constitution, does not have any definite or technical meaning and apparently had none at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. It is simply a vehicle for carrying proposed law through the legislative bodies. There is no constitutional requirement that it shall be in any particular form, or that it shall contain any designated elements. It is simply a device by which the legislative will is expressed concerning suggested legislation. Neither usage nor constitutional limitation requires us to attach any technical or restricted meaning to the word "bill" which will prevent the carrying out of the real intent of the framers in adopting the Executive veto. We must, as in all construction of the Constitution, look to substance and not to mere form.

In State v. Platt (2 S. C. 150), in discussing the meaning of the term "bill," the court says:

In a technical sense, the term "bill" is applicable properly to the enactment as a whole. Although the technical use of words should prevail where not inconsistent with the clear intent of the instrument, yet when such intent requires that words should be used in the larger sense, it is competent so to regard them. If we should hold that the Constitution regards the enactment as a whole, in an exclusive sense, we would be led to the inevitable conclusion that to become a law, all the substantial parts of the measure must have together passed through all the requisite stages. The consequence of this would be that alteration in a substantial part during such progress would be fatal to the whole bill.

Forced upon the opposite construction that every substantial part of a bill is to be regarded as a bill in the sense of the Constitution, we find nothing in our way but the technical import of the term "bill." It is not easy to perceive why, if any detached part of a statute is a law within the meaning of the Constitution of the United States forbidding States passing laws impairing the obligation of contracts, any part of a bill is not a bill under a clause intended to secure deliberation in the passage of legislative enactments. Such a conclusion is inevitable if regard is had to the fixed principles governing constitutional construction. The objects had in view by a constitution in government are habitually substantial; matters of form are usually left to the legislative body as subject to change with the progress of ideas and events. The great objects in view in framing a constitution are the division and distribution of the powers of government, the establishment of limits and boundaries beyond which they shall not be exercised, and the creation of an efficient responsibility, tending to restrain and furnish the means to correct neglect or abuse of public authority. Clauses having for their object the creation of responsibility in the exercise of political functions are, to a large extent, intended to act upon the motive, either by way of creating inducement for right action or removing the temptation or opportunity to such abusive exercises. This is in part accomplished by fixing the responsibility for all political action in some definite person, or body of persons, by securing deliberation in the performance of public acts, and by ascertaining modes of authentication and action in important cases vitally affecting the welfare of the state. It is obvious that, in construing clauses of this class, substance rather than form is to be considered. The object to be secured is to be sought for not alone in the formal expressions of the Constitution, nor yet in the technical character of the means employed to serve its ends, but in the nature of the subject intended to be acted upon through such means. In a word, the language of the Constitution in such cases is to be construed in the largest sense fairly attributable to it, and that will best subserve the objects it has in view.

Article I, section 7, simply means that all legislation which has passed the Congress must, before it becomes a law, be presented to the President. The intent of the Constitution is that legislation shall be a result of the meeting of the minds of the Congress and of the Executive—the former affirmatively creating the legislation and the President exercising his right of affirming or denying.

The method by which this result is to be accomplished is left largely in the discretion of Congress. For example, a provision could be put in each appropriation bill stating definitely that for the purpose of the Executive veto, each item shall be considered as a separate enactment of the Congress and subject to a separate veto. There are, no doubt, other ways by which this result could be obtained.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill for amendment be dispensed with and that it be in order at this time to offer amendments to any part of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the pending bill, on page 93, line 5, makes an appropriation of $125,000 for the fisheries industry. The Bureau of the Budget recommended $193,540, while the appropriation for 1943 was $365,540.

I respectfully submit that the item should be increased from $125,000 to $193,540. This is an increase of $68,540 over the amount provided in the pending bill, but it is a decrease of $172,000 under the appropriation for 1943. The increase I request conforms identically with the suggestion of the Bureau of the Budget.

I think the item is most important, and while I realize it cannot be considered adequately at this time, I hope that the item may be restored in the Senate and that it may receive sympathetic support of the subcommittee, with acceptance in conference, if increased by the Senate.

I know the deep interest manifested by the subcommittee in matters pertaining to fisheries. This particular item has to do with the production of food for war purposes. I do not think that was generally understood by the subcommittee at the time of its consideration, and I believe that the subcommittee would be sympathetic upon due consideration.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. CARTER. I said earlier in the day on the floor of the House that perhaps some of the items were cut more than they should have been cut, and I referred to this item in particular. I think this: That the committee exercised its very best judgment at the time, but perhaps was not aware of the facts and circumstances, and I would be inclined to follow the suggestions of the distinguished gentleman from Virginia and consider this item very sympathetically in conference.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I gladly yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I have been very much interested in the general information the gentleman is giving the House. I think what the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER], the ranking minority Member, has said is the unanimous opinion of the subcommittee handling the bill.

Mr. BLAND. I thank both the gentlemen.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. The gentleman stated that the reduction in this item will considerably interfere with the production of food. I think one of the sources of information that came to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries was that about 100,000,000 pounds less of fish was caught in 1942 than in 1941.

Mr. BLAND. Something like that. I am going to ask permission to extend and revise my remarks, which will contain that very statement.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. It is very important that we should keep that item in the bill and I am glad to see the Chairman of the Committee having jurisdiction over fisheries, here to support it.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. ANGELL. I agree heartily with what the gentleman has said. I am a member of the special Committee on the Conservation of Wildlife Resources. We have held extensive hearings and we went at some length into the question of conservation of food fish, and we found in some reports that were submitted to us that there was an immense quantity of food in the fish and wildlife that we could make use of in the war effort if we give it proper protection. On the basis of information that came to us, I think it would be a very grave mistake at this time to make the reduction proposed under the Budget estimate.

Mr. BLAND. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I gladly yield.

Mr. JENSEN. Of course, we must never lose sight of the fact that there are many groups of people that are asking for appropriations, great, huge appropriations, to produce everything imaginable in the way of food.

Mr. BLAND. I thoroughly agree with what the gentleman says.

Mr. JENSEN. We have cut the agricultural appropriation bill and other bills. We cut that bill down by the hundreds of millions of dollars, and we are cutting out expenditures for reclamation projects, irrigation projects, at the request of the War Department and the War Production Board, and we had to be fair about this thing.

Mr. BLAND. I am not criticizing the committee; I appreciate its task.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, if this matter does not go in in the Senate, I certainly hope that everyone who asks for an increase will exercise discretion, because I am sure if they do not exercise discretion the conferees are liable to turn them all down.

Mr. BLAND. I simply ask that it be given full consideration.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think it is necessary in arriving at the best economy, the important thing is the selection of the items where economies are effected. This particular item, it occurs to me, involves the very foundation of the work of the Fisheries and Wildlife Service and if economies are necessary I think they might come from some other item.

Mr. BLAND. This is a highly important item.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question?

Mr. BLAND. I gladly yield for that purpose.

Mr. JENSEN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois where we are going to draw the line.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is a matter for the subcommittee to determine, after it has heard the justification for the items.

Mr. JENSEN. That is right, but this is one of the border line cases.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The determination rests with the committee.

Mr. JENSEN. Just as in the selective service.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. JENSEN. It is quite a problem.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, the fishing industry has been asked to produce some 6,000,000,000 pounds of fish and fishery products during 1943 as its contribution to the war effort. The highest peacetime production has been about 5,000,000,000 pounds, with production during recent years ranging between three and one-half and four billion pounds.

The Department of the Interior has been given the responsibility for fish production in the war food program and of coordinating the activities of all war agencies affecting fisheries. In this work the Division of Fishery Industries is the focal point for basic information regarding the commercial fishing industry; thus the Nation's wartime food program, insofar as it pertains to fish and fishery products, is influenced by the functions performed by this small but essential unit.

The Appropriations Committee has recommended a reduction of $68,540 in the item for fishery industries in the Department of the Interior appropriation bill for 1944. This represents a 35 percent cut below the Budget estimate and strikes at the heart of the Nation's wartime fishery program since the major portion of these funds are used for the employment of highly specialized fishery experts.

It is with this appropriation that the Government maintains a record of some 37,500 fishing vessels of the commercial fishery and provides the basis for the withdrawal and return of fishing craft by the Army, Navy, Coast Guard, and War Shipping Administration.

It is with this appropriation that the Government maintains record of the some one hundred and thirty thousand fishermen in our commercial fisheries, providing data for the War Manpower Commission, Selective Service, and United States Employment Service.

It is with this appropriation that the Government maintains record of the production and prices of fishery products for guidance in allocating food for military, lend-lease, and civilian needs, and for establishment of price ceilings.

It is with this appropriation that the Government obtains data on the materials and equipment requirements of the fishing industry for guidance in the allocation of essential materials and equipment to an industry vital to the war program.

It is with this appropriation that the Government obtains data to guide the fishing industry in the care and more effective use of its fishing gear.

It is with this appropriation that the Government obtains information necessary in guiding the Nation in making adjustment to wartime food shortages.

It is with this appropriation that the Government obtains the necessary technological information to guide the fishing industry in obtaining more efficient and effective utilization of its products during wartime.

It is with this appropriation that the Government obtains necessary information on the nutritive value of fishery products and recommends the best methods of preparation so as to conserve nutritional properties in a diet being affected by war.

Knowing first-hand the importance of the work coming under this item, I am convinced that inadvertently a mistake has been made in reducing this item. I note that, commenting upon the appropriation for the Fish and Wildlife Service, the subcommittee, on page 15 of the report, says:

> In considering estimates for this activity the committee for the second consecutive year was faced with the necessity of making deductions in many deserving and valuable projects which are not related to the war. It is hoped that many of them may be restored to their former level when the existing emergency has passed.

The entire amount of $193,540 recommended by the Bureau of the Budget is used exclusively to carry on the Government's fish-production program. It is an essential part of our war food program, the fisheries being one of the principal sources of vital protein foods needed by our soldiers and sailors on the battle fronts, by our allies, and by our people at home.

In view of the serious effect the reduction in the item for fishery industries would have on functions so essential to the Nation's war program, I hope that the amount of the item be restored to the Budget estimate. I realize that there is no opportunity now for the subcommittee to consider the full effect of this reduction. I am hoping that the Senate will restore the item and that the subcommittee in conference will accept the item.

Much of the attention of Congress has recently been centered on the food situation. The Nation's fisheries are of vital importance, both as a source of food and of other products essential to the prosecution of the war. The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries has given close attention to fishery problems for many years, and it is intensifying its study of these problems under the guidance of its subcommittee on fisheries, which consists of Hon. J. HARDIN PETERSON of Florida; Hon. JOSEPH J. MANSFIELD of Texas; Hon. JAMES DOMENGEAUX, Hon. HENRY M. JACKSON, Hon. CECIL R. KING, Hon. FRANCIS D. CULKIN, Hon. FRED BRADLEY of Michigan, Hon. LAWRENCE H. SMITH of Wisconsin, and Hon. ALVIN F. WEICHEL of Ohio.

Our fisheries have never been organized. The truth is that the various groups are distinctly individualistic, and there is lacking that unity of effort which is essential to a satisfactory solution of existing problems.

The Coordinator of Fisheries, Mr. Harold Ickes, has issued a statement to the effect that although the production goal for our fisheries has been set for 1943 at an all-time high, the best information is that the catch will not be greater than 3,650,000,000 pounds. This is 2,000,000,000 pounds less than we will require. The industry must find the remedy.

It may be reasonably assumed that the fish may be caught if the fishing industry has the boats and the manpower with which to do the catching, and if the labor and equipment to process the catch can be found.

There are very many disturbing factors in the present situation. One of these is that hundreds of vessels, including a very large percentage of the most efficient deep water craft, have been taken over by the armed services. Every boat taken over has meant that much less production. There has been enacted into law H. R. 2238, which it is hoped will facilitate the return to private ownership for fishing purposes of some of the fishing vessels and similar craft that have been acquired by the United States and other vessels adaptable to the fisheries. It was realized that the withdrawal of vessels from the fisheries had meant a curtailment in the catch and the need to implement the fisheries with whatever equipment can now be made available is obvious. Secretary Ickes and Admiral Land recommended the passage of the legislation.

Appearing in support of the bill, and speaking of the efforts of the Coordinator of Fisheries, Mr. Charles E. Jackson, Deputy Director of the Fish and Wildlife Service, said:

> Without floating equipment it is impossible for the fishing industry to produce. This is borne out by the fact that in a single year's time the production of fish dropped from 4,900,000,000 in 1941 to 3,700,000,000 pounds in 1942, a drop of approximately 25 percent. It was not until toward the end of 1942 that the drain of manpower from the fishing industry further seriously curtailed production. The industry today is faced with two serious problems; first, the shortage of floating equipment, and, second, the reduction in manpower. The Office of the Coordinator of Fisheries has been working on these two major problems since the very beginning of the war.
> Little success was obtained in the early part of the war in securing the return of vessels, the military situation being such that floating equipment simply could not be returned to the fishing industry. In the last few months, however, the situation has improved materially. On last October 30 the War Shipping Administration wrote the Office of the Coordinator of Fisheries, advising that as of that date the War Shipping Administration would submit all requests for fishery floating equipment to the Office of the Coordinator of Fisheries for it to pass on. This policy has consistently been followed, and only a few fishing vessels have been taken out of the fishery. These few were not suitable for fishing or had not been engaged in fishing for a number of years. The Army, Navy, and Coast Guard have gradually shifted their demands so that needed vessels are recruited from sources other than the fisheries.
> Such a serious situation with regard to floating equipment for the production of Alaska salmon was confronting the industry for the coming season that the Secretary of the Interior directed a letter to the Secretary of War on January 18, 1943, a copy of which is submitted for the record, together with a copy of the reply from the Secretary of War of January 25, both of which are self-explanatory. Suffice it to say that the War Department is cooperating in every way with the Coordinator of Fisheries and the War Shipping Administration to supply sufficient floating equipment to obtain the maximum production of Alaska salmon this coming season.
> In a coordinated plan, the War Shipping Administration, the Army, the Navy, and the Coordinator of Fisheries have gradually undertaken a program of returning vessels and floating equipment to the fishing industry. It is not difficult to return those vessels that were taken on a charter basis, but in those cases where fishing vessels have been purchased outright it is impossible under present laws to return these vessels to the original owners. The legislation proposed here is designed to accomplish that purpose.

Mr. Jackson also testified that in order to expedite the return of fishing craft to the fishing industry, the War Shipping Administration had arranged with the Navy to set up a committee composed of a naval officer, a representative of the War Shipping Administration and the Coordinator of Fisheries to proceed to the various naval districts for the purpose of working out an arrangement with the commandants of the naval districts to release the fishing vessels. Mr. Jackson said that this committee was then, March 18, 1943, on the west coast.

Another disturbing factor in the fishery situation is that until recently the Selective Service System did not regard fishing as an essential occupation and consequently many of the best fishermen were drafted. It takes time and experience to make a good fisherman, and the removal of skilled captains and engineers has been a blow to the industry at many points. I hope that this will be rectified.

Another disturbing factor has been and is that wages and salaries in industrial plants doing war work have attracted hundreds of men and women who formerly helped to process and handle fish products.

It is also feared that either entire or partial restrictions imposed on many productive areas may contribute to a shortage.

Other factors enter. Rope, twine, and netting are essential to fishing and are difficult to obtain. Food rationing detains many boats in port because of the difficulty of obtaining sufficient points to supply the food these men need at sea. It must be realized by those administering food priorities that if adequate supplies of fish are to be caught, these obstacles must be removed. It is of paramount importance that those agencies which have placed restrictions on the fishing industry should remove them at once. The removal of present handicaps will result in immediate increased production. Sympathetic consideration is being given to these problems by those who have them in charge and it is hoped they may be solved.

It is becoming increasingly obvious to all that if we are to have sufficient food for our armed services, for our allies, and for our own people we cannot neglect this vital industry. The importance of the fisheries in the war effort becomes clear when we recall that fishery products rank fifth in the essential food list besides supplying vitamins, oils, and fish meal byproducts for livestock and poultry feeds. During 1941, 4,900,000,000 pounds of fish were sold through commercial channels for human consumption and for industrial uses, while more than 12,000,000 sport fishermen took with hook and line and consumed at home, or gave to their friends, another 300,000,000 pounds of nutritious fresh-water fish.

Fish utilization has been increased. Some personnel have been assigned to the task of developing uses for fishery products not now popular as food on American markets. There has been developed from menhaden, a canned food product. Menhaden were formerly used only for making fertilizer and oils. This new use should result in the production of 15 to 20 million pounds of food for domestic and export use. A total of 150,000,000 pounds of new sea-food products can be made available next year as a result of developing methods of utilizing common sea mussels, never before marketed in the United States in commercial quantities, but long popular in European countries. I am informed that, based on the work of the Fish and Wildlife Service, approximately 10,000,000 pounds of the common fresh-water smelts of the Great Lakes for which there was formerly a very limited market, will go to the armed services and civilian trade for the first time. More than 200,000 pounds of fillets from the Great Lakes herring are now being marketed for the first time, and this yield can be increased materially in the future. Similar studies may result in great new quantities of clams, of carp, and of other species being used as food to serve the United States and for lend-lease.

The Fish and Wildlife Service reports that the fish hatchery program has been realined to produce more food fishes for the duration and that the soil and water conservation programs of recent years have been responsible for the construction of thousands of new ponds that can produce an estimated 100,000,000 pounds of pan and game fish after stocking.

The Fish and Wildlife Service also reports that in order to provide essential food for war purposes personnel of the Service have been loaned to friendly South and Central American republics to make surveys of their coastal fishing grounds and to assist in organizing operations to take the fish locally so as to reduce long, expensive shipments of cured fishes from distant waters. These surveys have been made in the Caribbean, in Mexico, the British West Indies, in waters of the Pacific off Peru, and within the past 60 days, of the South Pacific where our troops are now fighting.

The situation demands organization and cooperation between individuals, local groups, State associations, the State officials, and the Federal officials. By intelligent cooperation and organization far more can be accomplished in the future than in the past. One thing needed to be learned by all groups of fishermen in the United States is that "In unity there is strength."

For more than 25 years I have been a member of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. During all of that time, I have been peculiarly interested as the fishing industry is the most important in my district.

It is gratifying for me to report that there is a greater manifestation of interest shown in the fisheries by the Department of the Interior and the Fish and Wildlife Service than ever before in the period of my service.

Recently, Secretary Ickes, head of the Department of the Interior, appeared before the committee and discussed its problems. Secretary Ickes manifested a comprehensive and keen interest in the fisheries and a knowledge of fishery problems, which in my opinion promises well for the future. Certainly, it is a much greater interest than has ever been shown before, for during my 25 years of service, this is the first time that the Secretary of a Department having jurisdiction over the fisheries has appeared to discuss the problems of the fisheries, and its related industries.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last 2 words.

Mr. Chairman, I am addressing my remarks principally to the chairman of the subcommittee, the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma. I note that the bill provides a total of $15,118,500 for reclamation purposes, which is a reduction of $74,554,770 from the 1943 appropriation and $5,636,200 less than the Budget estimates. Of course, this can mean but one thing, and that is that many of our reclamation projects that are in the course of development in such States as my own will have to be stopped. I cannot understand why the War Production Board has stopped the construction of many of these works.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Of the $5,200,000 to which the gentleman refers, $4,000,000 was cut out of the Central Valley projects, so that the other reclamation projects are cut but very little.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Of course that applies only to the reduction in Budget estimate. May I ask the gentleman from Oklahoma this? Do I correctly understand that all work has been stopped by the War Production Board on the reclamation projects, except in minor matters, unless priorities are secured from the War Production Board for the necessary materials with which to complete these projects?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I may say to the gentleman that he is correct. Of course, $55,650,000 is carried over in the reclamation fund, and then there is some money in the general funds. It would not stop all the reclamation projects, but it would stop some of them, and certainly would slow up many others. On the other hand, the War Production Board issues its stop orders, and during this emergency it is supreme and there is just nothing that our committee or this House can do about it until those stop orders have been suspended. As I said in my opening remarks, I hope they will be suspended within a few days or a few weeks.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I regret very much that funds are not provided in the bill to carry on the development of what is known as Buffalo Rapids No. 2 in eastern Montana. It is a pumping project on the Yellowstone River.

Buffalo Rapids No. 2 is under construction. No. 1 has already been constructed. It is a water conservation and utilization development where labor was contributed by the Works Progress Administration and the Civilian Conservation Corps. Of course, since the C. C. C. and W. P. A. folded up we now have a camp consisting of 150 men, what we call a conscientious objector's camp, and they work on this project. This project is just about two-thirds completed.

The construction of Buffalo Rapids No. 1 has been completed and the project turned over to the Department of Agriculture, which under the water conservation and utilization law will supervise its operation. No. 2 is two-thirds completed.

The two projects can bring 8,100 acres under irrigation in 1943, in addition to the 12,000 acres now under ditches, and 6,800 acres in 1944.

Now, the amount of steel required to complete these undertakings is insignificant, 31 tons in 1943 and 100 tons in 1944. From this small expenditure we would reap 40,350 tons of alfalfa in 1944, and 80,700 tons in 1945, which is important to the livestock industry in that section of my State.

It will require $345,000 from the Department of Agriculture and $515,000 from the Bureau of Reclamation to complete this project.

Also there is the Canyon Ferry project. I am going to give a brief outline of this project. It is over in the First District, and my understanding is that this proposed Canyon Ferry project will bring a supplemental supply of water by 1945 for 50,000 acres now periodically affected by water shortages. When fully developed it will irrigate 300,000 acres of new land and provide a partial supply of water to an additional 150,000 acres, plus generating 35,000 kilowatts of power. Through its power plant and regulation of the river for the benefit of power developments downstream, the output of electrical energy along the river will be ultimately increased by 150,000,000 kilowatt-hours per year.

This is a pretty big project. It is on the Missouri River.

The area in which the Canyon Ferry development will be constructed is already settled, having a farm population of 42,000 people, and an annual crop production of $9,500,000. The power development would be deferred.

On the additional 50,000 acres to be provided supplemental water by 1945 could be grown 50,000 tons of alfalfa, 1,000,000 bushels of potatoes and 112,500 hundred-pound sacks of dry edible beans.

During 1943 the construction would require 300 tons of steel. The new facilities needed for irrigation would cost about $8,749,000. The cost of the power plant and transmission lines, to be constructed later, is estimated at $2,655,000.

Now, there is another project known as the Missoula Valley development, near the city of Missoula, Mont. This is also over in the other district. But I understand it is a distinctly worth-while undertaking.

The Missoula Valley development near the city of Missoula in western Montana and the Bonanza and N-Bar-N projects in northeastern Montana are water conservation and utilization projects where investigations have been completed and work could be begun promptly. They are small undertakings and under an accelerated program could be completed within 1 or 2 years.

Now, to complete the Missoula Valley project would require but 17 tons of steel in 1943 and 60 tons in 1944; again, relatively small amounts. The completed facilities will water 2,100 acres of land by 1944, on which can be grown 9,450 tons of alfalfa in 1944. The estimated cost of the project is $360,000.

Only 21 tons of steel in 1943 and 26 tons in 1944 are required to complete the Bonanza development of 910 acres. The construction costs would total $75,000.

Then, we have what is known as the N-Bar-N project at a cost of $500,000, located below Fort Peck. This project would consume only 55 tons of steel in 1943, 200 tons in 1944, and 100 tons in 1945, and bring in 1,000 acres of new land in 1944, and 6,380 acres in 1945. Livestock in this area would be fed 12,720 additional tons of alfalfa that can be grown there by 1945.

In addition to the projects included in the program, I wish to call the Committee's attention to the need for work to improve the Milk River and Sun River projects in my State to prevent crop loss and to restore to productivity areas damaged by drainage. Only small amounts of material would be required.

The wood-stave Pishkin Canal siphon crossing of the Sun River development is in extremely poor condition and must be replaced with a steel conduit. The construction, estimated to cost $50,000, would provide a greater water supply and remove the hazard of a serious crop loss through a system failure.

It is also urgent that drainage of Greenfield Lake on this project, which has been rising steadily with run-off water from increased irrigated acreage, be provided. The development will restore to agricultural use considerable lake-shore land and will remove a seepage threat from adjacent and somewhat higher lands. An appropriation of $40,000 is required. About $100,000 will be needed to continue the present drainage program of the Sun River project, where seepage has been increasing steadily as more land is irrigated.

The Milk River project is also affected by a major drainage problem. About 3,200 acres of the Fort Belknap irrigation district of the Chinook division has been taken out of production as a result of seepage. Drainage of this idle land, capable of producing as good crops as any land in northern Montana, is essential if the district is to survive. Much of the area is only slightly affected and can be placed in production immediately. The cost of this improvement is about $100,000.

The Montana areas in which there are investigations yet to be completed are the Bitter Root, Marias, the Yellowstone, Big Horn, and Powder River, the Kalispell, Milk River, and Sweetgrass. In connection with the Yellowstone River survey, there is the Laurel-Park City area where an important agricultural section needs attention.

The construction or completion of these various projects would require very little steel, yet we were unable to secure such priorities. I repeat again that this is a mighty short-sighted policy of the War Production Board and the O. P. A. That there is a shortage of food no one will deny, and it is going to get mighty keen before this emergency is over. Already we are told that there are many places where the farmers are flooded out.

Along the main stem of the Missouri River from Fort Peck to Kansas City over 800,000 acres have been flooded out. The number of acres would run into millions if we take into account the flooded acres along the tributaries which flow into the Missouri River.

In other places they are being frozen out by late frost and snows. In my own State my understanding is that 45 percent of the fall wheat crop has been already destroyed. It is impossible to predict just what is going to happen.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Did the gentleman take up any of those projects with the War Production Board?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I did, and I could not get any priority either, so I am not blaming the committee. But I am pointing out that it is a mighty short-sighted policy. I do not care whether it comes from the War Production Board, or where. We must have food in this country.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Our committee has been very sympathetic with reclamation projects, but under the circumstances the committee could not recommend an appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Montana has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. May I say to my distinguished colleague from New York that I have pointed out to my friends in the West that the West has no better friend than the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK]. He has always been a supporter of our reclamation projects. We appreciate the splendid work he has done. As a matter of fact, we appreciate all the members of this committee, and in fact all the members of the Committee on Appropriations, because they have treated us very fine in the past. But whether this policy is a War Production Board policy or not I do not care. I repeat that it is a short-sighted policy. If they do not change their ways, we may find ourselves short of food right here in this country in the not very far distant future.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. I should like to have the chairman of the subcommittee make an explanation as to why the Central Valley project in California is receiving an appropriation here of $11,000,000. If all the other reclamation projects have been eliminated, why has this been left in the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I may say to the gentleman that that is obvious. The War Production Board has lifted the stoppages on this particular project. A representative of the War Production Board appeared before our committee and urged that this item be included. It was stated that they were giving very serious consideration to other items. We are hopeful that the stop orders will be canceled against many of the other projects.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. So the War Production Board is granting priorities in this particular case?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is correct.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. May I ask the subcommittee if it investigated priorities and releases of material now being made by the War Production Board to build reclamation projects in South America and Africa, at a time when they deny them in this country?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That was entirely without our province. Our committee could not investigate a matter of that kind.

Mr. CURTIS. It is taking place, though, is it not?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Montana has expired.

THE AMAZING AND INCREDIBLE SHIPSHAW TRANSACTION

Mr. COFFEE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

DENIAL OF PRIORITIES TO AMERICAN PROJECTS CONTRASTED WITH WAR PRODUCTION BOARD TREATMENT OF SHIPSHAW OF CANADA

Mr. COFFEE. Mr. Chairman, because of the question propounded by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS] just a moment ago and because in the minds of many of the Members there is some doubt about this granting of priorities to plants outside of the United States and the denial of priorities to plants in this country, I take this time to discuss the matter in connection with the Interior Department appropriation bill. I direct your attention to page 486 of the hearings under the title "Loan to the Aluminum Co. of Canada," wherein will be found a very illuminating discussion by the distinguished members of the committee with Dr. Paul Raver, Administrator of the Bonneville Power Administration.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS SUBCOMMITTEE EXHIBITED COMMENDABLE SKEPTICISM OF SHIPSHAW

In that section of the hearings there are statements made by the members of the subcommittee who participated, questioning the advisability of the War Production Board granting at times higher priorities to the Shipshaw project on the Saguenay River in the Dominion of Canada, than to power projects in the United States. I have introduced a resolution in this Congress seeking to have the transactions making that development possible, and similar transactions investigated. House Resolution 212, to investigate the supplying of equipment and facilities for furnishing electric power and energy for war purposes, is now pending before the Committee on Rules.

WE UNDERWROTE SHIPSHAW

Let me give you briefly the history of this Shipshaw scandal. The whole thing was kept very secret until this year, approximately 2 years after the first agreements were entered into between Metals Reserve Company of the United States and the Aluminum Co. of Canada, Ltd. The New York Times on January 31 gave the first public intimation that the United States Government was financing a branch of the Aluminum Trust in Canada. I quote from the New York Times:

> Not the least amazing thing about it is that it is already paid for. The $65,900,000 cost of the new plant was financed by the Aluminum Co. of Canada out of contracts for sales of aluminum to Britain and to the United States, which were in some measure paid for in advance so as to encourage this enormous new power development so essential to war.

NO INTEREST ASKED ON LOAN TO CANADIAN PLANT

By a series of four contracts, two in 1941, two in 1942, Metals Reserve Company of the United States, a subsidiary of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, advanced $68,500,000 to the Aluminum Co. of Canada, Ltd. That money was an advance payment on 1,370,000,000 pounds of aluminum to be delivered by the end of 1945. The first two contracts provided for interest to be paid on the advance until it was amortized by the delivery of aluminum. That is the usual procedure. The 1942 contracts, however, provided that, not only would no interest be paid on additional advances provided for therein, but that interest already paid on the first advances would be returned. In other words, the end result was that $68,500,000 was advanced the Aluminum Co. of Canada, Ltd., without interest at all.

SHIPSHAW A SECRET UNTIL RECENTLY

In October 1941 construction began on the Shipshaw power development in Canada. As I have pointed out, it was kept very secret until recently. The project will have cost $65,900,000 when it is completed in November of this year. In other words, our advance payment completely covered the cost of that power development.

WHY CODDLE THE ALUMINUM TRUST?

The Aluminum Co. of Canada, Ltd., is controlled by exactly the same interests as control the Aluminum Co. of America. They are both part of the international Aluminum Trust, with I. G. Farbenindustrie of Germany. The Canadian branch was established in 1928 by the American company as "Aluminium, Ltd." to develop certain properties of the Aluminum Co. of America. The Aluminum Co. of Canada is a wholly owned subsidiary of Aluminium, Ltd. May I quote from page 2725 of the Canadian House of Commons debate of May 14, 1943, on this matter:

The Canadian company obviously was organized originally as a separate corporation to escape the United States antitrust laws in order that this company might be able to play its part in the international cartel, whose agreements restricted production in the democratic countries and allowed Germany greatly to expand her aluminum production before the war.

A HIGHLY DUBIOUS POLICY

The United States has financed, interest free, a power project for this international cartel, which will enable it to produce aluminum in such quantities and at such a low price as completely to prevent light-metals production in competition anywhere in the world.

WE SUPPLIED CRITICAL MATERIALS AS WELL AS MONEY

The financing of this project by an American agency is a disgrace in itself. That is, however, by no means the end of the story. Materials for the construction of this Canadian project were sent from the United States. The War Production Board has admitted that shafts and certain other items were sent to Shipshaw. Power projects in this country vitally needed the same materials. It is claimed that most of the fabrication for Shipshaw was done in Canada by Canadian firms. It develops, however, that those Canadian firms are Canadian subsidiaries of American firms—Canadian General Electric, Canadian Westinghouse, Canadian Allis-Chalmers, and so forth. I have reason to believe that these Canadian plants are not capable of building the large fabrications required for this huge project. How much material was fabricated here in American plants and merely distributed through the Canadian subsidiaries?

POWER PROJECTS HERE WERE STOPPED WHILE THIS GREAT CANADIAN ENTERPRISE WAS GIVEN ALL HELP

While we were helping build Shipshaw, the erection of power projects in the United States was being stopped by War Production Board, which denied priorities sufficient to enable them to go into the oper market and secure the material with which to carry on. I have here a description of many of the projects in the United States against which the Board issued stop orders.

Mr. OUTLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COFFEE. Yes.

Mr. OUTLAND. Was not one of the projects stopped the Central Valley project?

CALIFORNIA POWER PROJECTS AFFECTED ADVERSELY

Mr. COFFEE. Yes. And the need for power in that area is particularly acute because of the fuel-oil shortage. At Keswick Dam, three 25,000 kilowatt units were cut out by W. P. B. stop order. At Shasta Dam, unit No. 5, with 75,000 kilowatt planned capacity, was also stopped. These units, if they were all allowed to go to completion, would replace annually about 2,000,000 barrels of fuel oil now being used to run steam-generating plants. There is a tight oil situation in that area now, which development of hydro power projects would greatly relieve. When the major emphasis of this war shifts to the Pacific, as it must if we are ever to defeat Japan, the situation will be a great deal tighter. As a matter of fact, it has been suggested that with increased demand for oil for fighting craft in the Pacific, it may be necessary to shut down war production plants in California now using oil.

Yet construction of these hydro plants in California was stopped while construction of the Shipshaw project in Canada went on.

These California plants were not to be used for power alone. If completed, they would have enabled supplemental irrigation water to be furnished to 2,000,000 acres of land. That land is not now growing food at top capacity.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COFFEE. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. I call attention to the fact that that stop order was only partially issued.

Mr. COFFEE. That is correct. Construction was allowed to go on under low priorities on facilities for fish protection and that sort of thing. The generating units I've mentioned were not allowed to go to completion, however.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr' COFFEE. Yes.

Mr. ANGELL. And is the Grand Coulee project not one of them also?

GRAND COULEE HELD UP

Mr. COFFEE. Yes. Construction of generating units 7, 8, and 9 was stopped. At Grand Coulee, a dam and a powerhouse are already built to hold these three new generating units. Their construction has been authorized by Congress, and shafts for two units were nearly completed when their construction was stopped last year. Each unit had a rated capacity of 108,000 kilowatts. All existing capacity is now being used and new loads are being located in the area.

SHIPSHAW ADVANCES WHILE GRAND COULEE IS ORDERED TO STAND STILL

I have the names of the companies, where generator shafts were being manufactured for Grand Coulee, before the order went out to take them out of production. Shafts for Grand Coulee Units 7 and 8 were taken out of the production schedules of the Mesta Machine Co., Pittsburgh, Pa., after some work had been done on them. Why were they removed from the production schedules of one of the few machine shops in the country capable of handling such large shafts? Presumably because of a shortage of critical materials. Yet a letter from Hon. Donald M. Nelson, chairman of the War Production Board, answering some questions I asked him, admits that shafts for generators and turbines at Shipshaw were put in the production schedules of Camden Forge Co. and the Midvale Co. in the United States.

Power engineers say that shafts are the bottleneck in power plant construction. Every shaft sent to the Shipshaw project, owned by the Aluminum Trust, meant one less shaft for badly needed projects in this country, Government owned, and privately owned.

Not only were production schedules shifted around, but priorities higher than those for power projects in this country were given to materials to go to Shipshaw. Mr. Nelson, in his letter to me, says this "was part of the uprating to AA-1 of the entire aluminum program." Why were materials meant for this power project in Canada considered more a part of the aluminum program than materials going to power projects in this country, equally vital to aluminum production?

GRADES IN PRIORITIES

Nelson's letter belittles the amount of materials given high ratings and sent to Shipshaw. As a matter of fact, at the time that the blanket priority for the power program was AA-3, men within the Power Branch of the War Production Board itself expressed great concern for the completion of the scheduled projects on time, if the policy of giving higher priorities to certain projects were continued and allowed to interfere with regular production schedules. All assurances given to the President and to the Secretary of War, and others, as to the adequacy of our war power supply, were based on the assumption that all projects scheduled for completion would be completed on time. Uprating of particular units was interfering with the schedules. It would seem that not only did materials go to Shipshaw, but the uprating of Shipshaw construction in this country interfered directly with our own war power program.

STOPPAGE OF GRAND COULEE CONSTRUCTION HAS GREATLY INTERFERED WITH OUR WAR POWER PROGRAM

Mr. ANGELL. And is it not a fact also that they are in need of additional power in that area—I mean the Pacific Northwest—where 30 percent of the aluminum will be manufactured?

Mr. COFFEE. The gentleman is absolutely correct. As a matter of fact, the situation is too tight right now, that with a dry year, war plants may have to cut down.

DAVIS PROJECT DISCRIMINATED AGAINST

Mr. MURDOCK. Can the gentleman say whether the Davis project in Colorado was also one of those against which a stop order was issued?

Mr. COFFEE. Yes. I have a complete break-down of the whole proposition. Davis Dam, which would have an initial installation of 180,000 kilowatts which would have augmented the supply of power in southern California, southern Nevada, and Arizona, where large war plants are located, was not allowed to go to completion. Congress had appropriated $8,000,000 for construction which was proceeding under low priorities. By a stop order, the project was abandoned and must, in the future, start from scratch. Yet, as I have pointed out, materials, time, and manpower went into the construction of shafts and forgings for Shipshaw in Canada.

OTHER AMERICAN ENTERPRISES DENIED PRIORITIES

I could enumerate many more projects that have been stopped while construction of Shipshaw went on. Work on the Colorado-Big Thompson project on the Continental Divide has been stopped. The power plants originally to be built would have generated a total of 103,000 kilowatts. Work on the third generating unit of Douglas Dam and the third generating unit at Cherokee Dam, both in east Tennessee—part of the T. V. A.—was stopped in December of last year. Each unit would have had 30,000 kilowatts capacity.

Smaller power projects all over the country, serving Army camps, or small communities, or rural electric cooperatives, have not been allowed to go to completion. Some of them lack only small amounts of steel or fabrications.

These are mentioned because they are pertinent to the Interior Department appropriation bill, because the subcommittee manifested an interest in the fact that we have for some peculiar reason sent materials, under high priorities, to this project in Canada while our own projects are being cut out.

What I say here I do not want to be construed in any sense as reflecting upon our good ally, one of the United Nations, the Dominion of Canada. There have been heated discussions in the Canadian Parliament on Thursday and Friday of last week, on this same matter. The matter has been discussed in the Canadian press. The Canadians are not sold on this deal any more than we are. They do not like the war emergency to be used as an excuse for giving the international aluminum trust a power project that will enable it to control the aluminum market after this war.

CANADIAN MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT DENOUNCES SHIPSHAW FINANCING METHODS

Let me quote from a speech the Honorable M. J. Coldwell, M. P., made in the Canadian House of Commons on May 14. This will indicate how Canadians feel about this project:

On March 23 the Minister of Munitions and Supply said that in the dim and distant future the Aluminum Co. may obtain some benefit from the Shipshaw development and there may be some post-war value in it for them. I say that these powerful aluminum interests have obtained in effect the greatest power resources at present available in the world, virtually as a gift; and thus they can, if they will, effectively block, in Ontario and New York State and eastern North America as well, any government-owned public power development because their plant will be paid for during the war, and any plant which the Province of Ontario or the government of New York State, or the Government of Canada or that of the United States, or both, may wish to build, will have to be paid for over a period of years. Not only that, but they will be able, through the cheapness of power, to control the price of aluminum almost everywhere on earth, and when we realize that we are entering upon an age of light metals and that they have entered into the field of magnesium production as well, we can understand how dangerous a monopoly we are building up by our public funds and war activities in this country.

I wish I had time to go into all the details with reference to this project. I have spent considerable time in attempting to ferret out all the facts.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COFFEE. I yield.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. I want to compliment the gentleman for calling this to the attention of the House, and remind him that when we passed the reciprocal trade agreements we placed an amendment in that bill this year urging the President to take cognizance of these cartel arrangements which threaten every business interest in our Nation. It is time that our Nation stopped and considered what is happening to it under these cartel arrangements.

INTERNATIONAL CARTELS ARE INDEFENSIBLE

Mr. COFFEE. I thank the gentleman for bringing up this matter of cartel arrangements. It is part of this whole situation I am bringing to your attention today. In January of 1941 a Federal grand jury brought in indictments against the Aluminum Co. of America and several other companies for conspiring and combining with the German firm, I. G. Farben Industrie, to keep the price of magnesium artificially high by restricting production. Magnesium is a lighter metal than aluminum. The two metals together make a very strong alloy used in the construction of airplanes. Aluminum Co. of America (Alcoa) and these other companies conspired to prevent the proper development of our light metals program.

As I have pointed out, the Aluminum Co. of America and the Aluminum Co. of Canada are controlled by the same interests. They are the two biggest branches of the International Aluminum Trust. Is this most recent transaction another big step toward complete monopolization of the light metals market of the world? That is exactly what it is.

CANADIANS WAKING UP TO THE IMPLICATIONS OF SHIPSHAW

I should like to discuss the way the Canadian Government has been taken in on this deal. That is, of course, a matter for the Canadian Government to investigate, if it sees fit, but I think it should be brought up here just to emphasize the fact that the investigation I am urging is not, by any stretch of the imagination, meant as a reflection on our good neighbor and ally, Canada. As a matter of fact, you will find that some gentlemen in the Canadian House of Commons have already indicated a desire to have this whole thing investigated from their side of the border.

I think I may conclusively demonstrate the benefits the aluminum trust has gained in agreements with the Canadian Government, by quoting rather extensively from remarks by Hon. M. J. Coldwell, whom I have quoted before:

It is to this giant corporation that the governments concerned have given or advanced hundreds of millions of dollars to enable them to build a huge plant at Shipshaw and to expand their aluminum monopoly. How was this huge expansion financed? This is where we enter more directly into the provisions of the bill we are now discussing. Part of Canada's contribution, although not all, is covered by P. C. 11745, which provides for a special write-off or accelerated depreciation of $154,500,000 * * *. I have the prospectus of the company, and it has the following to say about Canada's contribution:

"Normally such capital expenditures for plant additions are written off for tax purposes over a period of years. In order to give effect to the fundamental basis of the contracts, permission has been granted the company to amortize these capital expenditures by a special deduction from income at a stipulated rate per pound of all aluminum delivered, * * * the effect being to amortize the estimated cost of the additional aluminum producing facilities and 60 percent of the estimated cost of the additional power facilities by the time all deliveries have been made under the war contracts."

A GREAT CANADIAN STATESMAN FEARLESSLY EXPOSES SLIMY RECORD OF SHIPSHAW

Mr. Coldwell then goes on to discuss some other projects of this company, Aluminum Co. of Canada, costs of which have been written off by accelerated depreciation. He concludes:

It seems to me therefore that the total is not $154,500,000, as we were told in the house this year, but nearer to $175,000,000.

A STRANGE OFFERING OF ALUMINUM TRUST SECURITIES

The prospectus from which Mr. Coldwell quotes is the prospectus of the Aluminum Co. of Canada, Ltd., published in conjunction with the issuance of $15,000,000 preferred stock. Mr. Coldwell discusses this stock issue:

Why are the preference shares being offered now for the first time in the company's history? * * * I am advised by people who have made inquiries that if one wants to get preferred shares the limit is 25 shares. Why? Because they want to give the small investor a chance to get in first, they say. In my opinion what they really wish to do is to spread some of the preferred shares over the country in order that there will be public opinion favorable to the aluminum company. That is a trick of utility corporations everywhere.

I might point out that the prospectus mentioned above, says, on the front cover:

This prospectus is not, and under no circumstances is to be, construed as, an offering of any of this issue for sale in the United States of America or the territories or possessions thereof, or an offering to any resident thereof or a solicitation therein of an offer to buy any of this issue.

That is very clear is it not? Why does the company not want shares sold in the United States? Because then the company would come under the prying eyes of the Securities and Exchange Commission of the United States. It evidently does not want that.

WHY SHOULD UNCLE SAM FINANCE THE ALUMINUM TRUST?

We can see from this little bit of information I have given the House this afternoon, some of the ramifications of this huge advance the United States has given to the Aluminum Trust. We can see some of its effects upon our war power program now, and on our light metals development program. We can see its probable effects on the light metals market after the war. We can see its effect on any further power development in the St Lawrence region of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, this whole matter should be investigated by Congress in the interests of effective prosecution of the war, and in the interests of proper development of the natural resources of this country when the war is over. House Resolution 212 provides for the establishment of an investigatory committee to do just this.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. First, I want to compliment this committee for the statesmanlike job they have done in matters of wartime economy concerning progress very close to my own heart.

Secondly, I would like to talk about the Columbia River which enters the United States in my own State and travels to the sea. It never leaves the State of Washington. During that travel it falls hundreds of feet, and constitutes, to my knowledge, today the greatest single source of water power in the Western Hemisphere.

When we speak of water power in the United States it might be wise for us to realize that nearly 40 percent of all the water power is to be found in the State of Washington. We have there, when we shall have fully developed all the water power possible in the State of Washington, nearly 50,000,000 horsepower. I mention this for only one reason. When we speak of developing our water power as a national resource; when we speak of our national investments in water power; when we speak of that investment as an obligation against our national integrity, let us remember that to liquidate that obligation will require the sweat and purpose of the people who will live near our rivers, those who use that water power to create useful things for the rest of the Nation. Specifically, in the case of the Columbia River, it will be paid for through the service that the people whom I now represent can render to the rest of the Nation. We should not forget that. In any bill, such as the able gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], has introduced today, which would allow Federal jurisdiction over that vast amount of water power, out there along the Columbia and elsewhere in the Nation, we should not lose sight of the fact that those people should be allowed wide latitude in the use of that water power through the trying years, the lean as well as the fat. Their voice should be dominant in matters of policy. Their continuous industry demands it. Their continuous industry spells part of our security.

I also want to compliment this committee for calling attention to the discriminatory act in the matter of the Shipshaw affair and to call the attention of this House to the printed proceedings of the committee, particularly pages 486, 487, 488, and 489, as well as the letter to be found on page 539, which is Jesse Jones' letter to Senator TRUMAN, who investigated it. It should be investigated further. If we want to have healthy international relationships it must be by open covenants openly arrived at. There is entirely too much secrecy in what is to be found in these hearings. I want to quote, if I may, something that the able chairman of your subcommittee, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON], said during these hearings. He said:

Referring to the story that was in the paper that morning about the Shipshaw affair, I have just heard about it. Frankly, I was not only amazed, but shocked at the story. I have known and admired Secretary Jones for many years. I have also admired his businesslike methods, as well as his quick and definite decisions. I shall, of course, not pass final judgment until I hear his side of the controversy, but the story, to say the least, calls for a clear-cut explanation, or else there must be a thorough investigation of the whole transaction.

My colleague the gentleman from Washington [Mr. COFFEE] has introduced a resolution calling for such an investigation. I believe it should be allowed to come to the floor of this House by the Rules Committee and this matter at least have some light thrown on it.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORAN. I yield.

Mr. ANGELL. I want to compliment the gentleman for his statement and for the vigor with which, as a new Member, he is representing his district. But I also call attention to the fact that the Columbia River is not entirely in the State of Washington. It is the boundary line between Oregon and Washington, and the great Bonneville project, a portion of which lies in my district, is in the State of Oregon. I know the gentleman agrees with that.

Mr. HORAN. I want to assure my able friend, the gentleman from Oregon, that the things I said in behalf of the people of Washington I would certainly not deny to the people he represents. We can work together out there, I assure him.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, he will, of course, realize that Washington was originally part of the Oregon country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, when I asked this question about irrigation projects in foreign lands I was not aware of the facts about the Shipshaw project. It, of course, will have to stand or fall on whatever the facts are. It is alleged that the United States is now supplying materials for irrigation works in South America and Africa. If this is true, it should be stopped so long as our own projects are held in abeyance. I do not believe it is a safe proposition to turn the future of reclamation over to the War Production Board. I have the greatest respect for many of the eminent businessmen on the War Production Board; they are doing a good job; they have many problems, many things on their minds, but they are not familiar with the reclamation program. Unless someone has lived with it and has seen reclamation projects work, they do not know how vital they are to the economy of our country. As one Member of this House, I seriously object to letting the War Production Board write the ticket so far as the future development of irrigation is concerned, for the simple reason that the top-notch men down there do not know about irrigation matters. I realize, of course, that there will have to be restrictions of material, but I do say that this splendid subcommittee which has given so many hours of careful study and has been fair in its consideration of these matters in times past should continue to handle this matter. We should not make our program of appropriations dependent upon the will of any executive bureau. Personally, I hope that before this bill is sent to the White House a few changes can be made.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield.

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. The gentleman is familiar with the particular problem that affects the Great Plains States as far as irrigation projects are concerned. I wonder if he has any thought as to what might be done to give consideration to this area by way of small projects in view of the decisions of the War Production Board?

Mr. CURTIS. Without a doubt the studies should go on. There are many projects which could be built even during wartime and which should be built. Chester Davis has made the statement that if we produced all the food possible through using every avenue of production we still would not have enough to meet the demands being made on this country. A certain amount of construction should go on as a part of the war program, but by all means a full program of studies and investigations for post-war irrigation projects should be carried on.

The gentleman is interested in the same valley I am, the Republican River and its tributaries. These projects should be advanced, for they will make a great contribution to the war effort. I want all parts of that great valley to have the benefits of flood control and irrigation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am sure that this subcommittee has been diligent and has been motivated in its activities in presenting this bill to the committee with a desire to effect savings of public funds wherever possible, particularly those which do not have to do with the prosecution of the war. However, I regret that the committee has seen fit to drastically curtail the appropriation requested by the Fish and Wildlife Service for Federal aid in wildlife restoration and for funds to permit the Fish and Wildlife Service to carry out its activities.

The total amount recommended for this service is $4,897,350, which is a reduction of $1,014,220 below the 1943 appropriation and $855,015 less than the Budget estimates.

I am a member of the Select Committee on Conservation of Wildlife Resources and we have held extensive hearings considering the activities of the Fish and Wildlife Service in the conservation program and particularly its functions which have to do with the furthering of our war efforts. I call the committee's attention to the testimony given by Dr. Gabrielson, who heads this department of Fish and Wildlife Service, appearing in the hearings on page 627. Here is given the evidence disclosing that this department is making an unusual contribution toward supplying the Nation with fish and game for food during this critical time.

Fishing is an essential war industry. In 1941 the commercial production of fish for food and other purposes reached an all-time high of approximately 5,000,000,000 pounds. It fell materially last year due to interference of the war in our commercial fishing efforts. The Fish and Wildlife Service reports that it could if provided with the staff and the necessary funds produce safely over 6,000,000,000 pounds of fish products in a year without depleting this resource. They estimate that there could be safely taken this year 2,000,000,000 pounds more than was taken last year. They point out that fish and wildlife constitute a resource that costs very little so far as the Federal Government is concerned and the only investment of the Federal Government for the production of this great natural resource is the funds provided to the Fish and Wildlife Service. Last year hunters alone during the open season took about 255,000,000 pounds of meat from game birds and game animals. Dr. Gabrielson points out that during the last 5 years his department has been able to take more than 50,000,000 pounds of salmon per year out of the Alaskan waters than each of the first 5 years after the passing of the 1924 act, known as the White Act, establishing a system of regulations of the commercial fisheries of Alaska. With rationing and the extreme shortage of meat we should not curtail this supply of fish and wild game.

In March of this year I asked Dr. Gabrielson to give me a short report on the activities of his department and received in reply the following letter, which I include as a part of my remarks:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
FISH AND WILDLIFE SERVICE,
Washington, March 20, 1943

Hon. HOMER D. ANGELL,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. ANGELL: In accordance with our telephone conversation, I am submitting the following information concerning the activities of the Fish and Wildlife Service in connection with the fisheries and the war food program.

Normally, we have no regulatory authority over the commercial fisheries with the sole exception of that exercised with regard to the aquatic resources of the Territory of Alaska. There our jurisdiction is directly comparable to that exercised by the individual States through their State conservation authorities and organizations. Our activities with regard to the commercial fisheries carried out under authorization of organic legislation and annual appropriation acts, consists of biological investigations with a view toward recommending conservation and management measures, methods of increasing the populations, and means of restoring depleted resources; the collection and analysis of statistical information on the fisheries and its publication; the collection, compilation, and daily publication and dissemination of market news information at seven field offices in important commercial fishing regions, and technological studies to improve handling, processing, and refrigeration practices, to develop new fishery products, as well as to conduct investigations on net preservatives and improvements of fishing gear. These are the only services which the Federal Government ever has provided for the fishing industry, and in this respect the United States is far behind the other main fish-producing nations such as Great Britain, Norway, and Japan.

Even before the declaration of war we realized that some conservation of our fishery activities to an emergency basis was necessary in order that we might be able to render more effective assistance to other agencies concerned with fishery matters and production, and such conversion was undertaken as necessity demanded. Immediately upon the establishment of the Office of Agricultural Defense Relations, the War Production Board, and the Office of Price Administration, we were called upon to perform special services in order to provide these agencies with the information they needed. We have furnished these agencies regularly and promptly basic information upon which many important plans, decisions, and orders were based.

On July 21, 1942, the President signed Executive Order 9204 (7 F. R. 5657) designating the Secretary of the Interior as Coordinator of Fisheries and establishing the office of the Coordinator of Fisheries. The primary duty of this office originally was to coordinate the plans, policies, and programs of Federal and State agencies, and the commercial fishing industry in the interest of maintaining an adequate fishery production program. At the outset we found that 21 different Federal agencies were carrying on work or issuing orders that affected the fishing industry. Through work with a liaison committee composed of representatives of each of the 21 agencies, and our continuous insistence and efforts to insure that the fisheries be recognized as an important, essential, and indispensable food producing industry, we now have overcome many formerly troublesome problems and cleared away some confusing issues and uncertainties. Some examples of the type of work we have been doing will show the diverse nature of our activities:

Upon the outbreak of war the Navy, Army, and the Coast Guard began at once to purchase, requisition, or charter fishing vessels both along our coasts and in Alaska. The fleets were reduced so greatly that production of fishery products declined. By constant effort we have finally effected an arrangement whereby the armed services may not take over any fishing vessel without the approval of the office of the Coordinator of Fisheries. During recent weeks progress has been made in effecting return of purchased and requisitioned vessels to the industry.

Through our negotiations with the War Manpower Commission on the subject of occupational deferment of skilled men in the industry, Occupational Bulletins 18 and 20 recently were issued by the Director of the Selective Service System. These bulletins declare commercial fishing to be an essential war industry and list as eligible for deferment from induction men holding the majority of the important positions in the fish-producing and processing industries.

With the recent rationing of canned foods, fishing vessels began at once to experience difficulties in obtaining adequate supplies for their crews. Through work with the Office of Price Administration, amendments to General Ration Order No. 5 (institutional users) and Ration Order No. 13 (individuals) have just been issued which classify the major fishing vessels as "institutional users" and which list fishermen as eligible for supplemental supplies of rationed foods. Adequate provisioning of fishing vessels is thus assured.

The controlled materials plan soon to be substituted for the priorities system by the War Production Board, as it will affect the fishing industry, has been based on our estimates and recommendations.

Pursuant to the provisions of Executive Order 9280 (7 F. R. 10179), the Secretary of Agriculture, on February 8, 1943, issued Food Directive No. 2 (8 F. R. 1777) delegating to the Secretary of the Interior responsibility for those phases of the war food program concerned with the production and processing of fishery commodities. Prior to that time the Office of the Coordinator of Fisheries served as an investigative and advisory agency, but was without any regulatory authority. Food Directive No. 2 confers authority to issue such orders as may be necessary to insure the maintenance of an adequate fishery production program. The Directive was issued by the Secretary of Agriculture because of the fact that the desired personnel and facilities for administering the production and processing phases of the war food program existed in the Department of the Interior. The Secretary of Agriculture also recognized that utilization of these facilities instead of setting up units and personnel in his own Department for the purpose of administering the fishery program would result in greater efficiency and economy of funds and personnel. Arrangements have been perfected so that the Office of the Coordinator of Fisheries, handling production and processing, works closely and in complete harmony with the Food Distribution Administration of the Department of Agriculture which is responsible for distribution of fishery products and purchases for Government requirements.

We have worked out a program designed to increase production with a view toward meeting the requirements stipulated by the Food Distribution Administration for the coming year. At the present time prospects for large increases in production are not too good because of the shortage of boats and manpower. Unless these shortages are alleviated production may fall as much as 2,000,000 pounds below the fish requirements for 1943 desired by the Army, Navy, Office of Lend-Lease Administration, other Federal agencies, and the civilian population. There are plenty of fish available and new sources have been explored successfully for producing substitute processed fishery products to compensate somewhat for the great demands for such items as canned salmon, canned sardines, and salted codfish that are in short supply.

On March 1 and 2, at the invitation of Secretary Ickes, 17 representatives of the fishing industry, labor, and consumers, met with our staff in Washington to discuss industry's problems, devise means of solving them, and to develop a practical production program for 1943-45. The meeting served to focus attention upon many important problems, facilitated exchange of information, and has led to the development of methods of offering to the industry direct assistance in meeting their problems. To accomplish the latter objective, the country has been divided into 11 principal areas and a man with the best overall knowledge and widest experience has been placed in charge of each area to serve as area coordinator. Local representatives will be stationed in the major fishing ports, under the supervision of the area coordinator, and local industry committees will be appointed soon in order that the local representatives and the area coordinator may bring into their work the benefits, advice, and collaboration in solving the industry's problems. The local committees will be especially helpful in devising means of utilizing existing facilities, equipment, and manpower to better advantage, and in some instances short-cut methods of increasing production undoubtedly may be devised.

For the first time we have the authority to set up and operate an effective fishery program The production program which has been outlined is constructive and is designed to effect healthy developments in the industry and substantial increases in yield. We are working on a 3-year program rather than a program for the present year only, inasmuch as food will be a badly needed item until long after the war. We shall have to supply food to the war-torn countries until they have had time to reestablish their own agriculture, cattle raising, dairy industries, and fishing enterprises.

The cooperative arrangement between the Department of the Interior and the Department of Agriculture for handling the fishery war program, referred to above, is functioning efficiently. All of the most able men in both departments are hard at work and things are moving satisfactorily as never before. There appears to be no justification for disturbing the existing arrangements at the present time, especially since serious interruptions in important work and loss of valuable time are always coincident with organizational transfers and revisions.

Sincerely yours,

IRA N. GABRIELSON,
Director.

Mr. Chairman, I express the hope that the Senate will restore the appropriation requested and approved by the Bureau of the Budget and that our conferees will support the restorations when the matter is returned to the conference committee.

The committee has seen fit also, Mr. Chairman, to reduce the allowance for Federal aid in wildlife restoration. This activity is under the provisions of the Robertson-Pittman Act. In 1943 there was an appropriation of $1,250,000. The Budget estimate for 1944 is a like amount. The funds from which this appropriation is paid are provided by a special tax paid by sportsmen under the provisions of the Robertson-Pittman Act. There is at the present time over $9,000,000 in this fund. It is in the nature of a trust fund. Dr. Gabrielson testified with respect to it, hearings, page 706, as follows:

That fund, as you know, comes from a special tax on sporting arms and ammunition, the collections from which are set aside in the Treasury by act of Congress in a special fund known as the Federal aid to wildlife-restoration fund. A great many of the States have built up programs based on that act, for land purchase, and various other things that they are doing, so it would be very difficult for them if appropriations were suddenly discontinued.

The appropriation has been cut very materially, from $2,750,000 for fiscal year 1942 down to $1,250,000 for the current fiscal year, largely because the States could not continue some of the previously planned development work; but they are anxious to keep enough of this fund so that they can keep up their commitments on land acquisition and keep their key personnel now employed on essential wildlife management fact-finding work.

Under the provisions of this law the State matches funds provided by the Government, and, as Dr. Gabrielson testified, they have built up programs based on a continuing policy with the expectation of receiving their proportion of these funds.

It is not only unfair to the sportsmen who have contributed the funds, but to the States which have been induced to provide projects under the act, and they will suffer great loss if the appropriations are cut off and they are not allowed to proceed with their programs.

I include as a part of my remarks the following excerpts from the testimony and a statement presented by Dr. Gabrielson which appears in the hearings, page 707:

FEDERAL AID IN WILDLIFE RESTORATION

When this Federal aid in Wildlife restoration program started functioning almost 5 years ago, the majority of the States were badly in need of factual information on how best to manage their wildlife. This undesirable condition stemmed from the fact that funds were not available to enable them to procure such information. With funds that have been made available, the cooperators have stressed wildlife management fact-finding. The program has been highly successful and much of the success has come from the technically trained men employed as project leaders. These men have accomplished splendid results in the field of wildlife conservation and restoration by furnishing information and advice on how State wildlife resources can be increased and more effectively administered.

Wildlife populations are not static and certain species of game birds and mammals, such as ring-necked pheasants and cottontail rabbits, which have high reproduction potentialities, under favorable conditions can quickly produce populations that are capable of assuming pest proportions if they are not held in check. Likewise big game ranges must be investigated annually and their populations inventoried to ascertain whether hunting pressure must be increased or decreased in order to insure sound utilization of available ranges and the wildlife inhabiting them. Through the assembling of factual information by trained workers and the translation of that information into appropriate seasons and bag limits, perpetuation of the Nation's wildlife resources is assured, along with assurance that maximum utilization is obtained.

Outside of birds classed as migratory, in treaties with Canada and Mexico, the States are responsible for the management of the Nation's wildlife. In normal times the pursuit of wildlife is most important in providing healthful outdoor recreation for more than 10,000,000 licensed and unlicensed hunters. While the recreational benefits are paramount even in times of war, wildlife does provide a very useful supplemental supply of highly nutritious meat. During the last hunting season more than one-quarter billion pounds of usable meat was harvested by the Nation's sportsmen. This is a solid contribution to the present inadequate meat supply of the Nation.

In the Southeast particularly, and to a considerable extent elsewhere, the State game departments, through this program are cooperating with organized Soil Conservation Service districts in providing supplies of seed of perennial legumes, particularly for strip plantings adjacent to woodlands. Farmers thereby are not obliged to plow to the edge of the woods and cultivate land that is not productive, due to the shading and leeching action of bordering trees. These wildlife strips provide food and cover for farmland wildlife but most important to the farmer, they insure permanent cover on a strip of nonproductive land, which has had to be cultivated heretofore to prevent the encroachment of woodlands. Through such cultivation in the past, serious soil erosion has frequently resulted. In Virginia last year seed distributed to the farmers permitted the establishment of field border strips 1 rod wide for a distance of 300 miles.

As the result of studies carried on under this program, the Missouri Conservation Commission last year inaugurated a farm pond construction program. Thereby more than 650 demonstration farm ponds were constructed and as a result of that demonstration it is reported that 4,500 of these one-half to 2-acre ponds were constructed by farmers last year. Through the fencing of these ponds with a margin of land around them, wildlife seed stock refuges have been established. Through this work the farmers are assured of a dependable water supply for livestock and culinary use during drought periods and in adition, through stocking the ponds with fish, a supplemental food supply of a high protein value is being produced. Encouraged by Missouri's successful efforts, Ohio has undertaken like work under its Federal-aid program.

A number of States are engaged on fur-management studies designed to increase returns from this natural resource which annually provides around $50,000,000 in raw pelts. Surveys and investigations are being conducted to determine methods of improving environments of fur animals, to find ways to trap and prepare the skins for the market so that better utilization will be made of fur bearers, and to trap and distribute fur animals to suitable but vacant areas. For example, Louisiana, which annually harvests around 6,000,000 muskrats, is conducting studies on its extensive coastal marshes to determine how the productivity of those marshes can be increased.

A number of the States, especially in the West have undertaken the live trapping and transplanting of beaver. These animals stabilize stream flow, impound water, improve environmental conditions for wildlife, and in addition are real assets to the livestock industry in providing dependable water supplies in areas which otherwise could not be used for the summer grazing of livestock. Idaho, through this program has trapped and transplanted more than 3,700 beaver, most of which have been placed on lands administered by the United States Forest Service and the Grazing Service. Those two services have requested the planting of these valuable fur bearers in selected locations with the view of expanding grazing opportunities for range livestock.

Many of the participating States have emphasized the acquisition of lands for wildlife use. In the West, particularly, lands have been acquired in order to provide a badly needed balance between summer range and winter range for deer and elk. Lands of no value to agriculture have been purchased for waterfowl usage by a number of the States in order that the waterfowl population, which has been greatly increased through sound management in recent years, may be spread out and harvested more effectively by the Nation's sportsmen. During the fiscal year, which ended June 30 last, the 46 participating States had 301 projects approved. Of the money obligated thereby, 41 percent was for the acquisition of land, 30 percent was for wildlife restoration development activities, 24 percent was for wildlife management research and 5 percent was for wildlife management coordination.

With the decrease in the appropriation from $2,750,000 for the fiscal year 1942 to $1,250,000 for the current fiscal year, together with the war and the impossibility of obtaining materials for construction work, the 47 participating States are stressing wildlife management investigations more than has heretofore been the case. Their object is to assemble facts for translation into action to insure that the maximum wildlife populations may be harvested without impairing the basic resource and concurrently to institute measures to make certain that wildlife populations are maintained at maximum levels consistent with prudent management so that they will be able to bear the greatly increased hunting pressure that can be anticipated after the war is over. Estimates as to increased pressure are predicted on the 30-percent increase in hunting licenses sales immediately following the termination of World War No. 1, notwithstanding that during that war more hunting licenses were sold progressively from 1916 through 1918.

The recommended appropriation of $1,250,000 for carrying on this cooperative wildlife restoration program in which the State game departments participate to the extent of 25 percent of project costs will enable the several State game departments to carry forward well conceived long-range wildlife restoration fact-finding and management programs on a reduced scale. It will enable them to maintain a nucleus of trained and experienced wildlife technicians who will be available after the war to counsel and advise State game administrators on the multitude of problems pressing for solution in connection with the management of the Nation's wildlife, a product of the soil, the supply of which in normal times is never equal to the demand of those who desire to participate in its taking.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. This is an item that does not reflect in the Budget estimate. What would happen if we cut this half in two? That proposal has been made seriously, and I would like to know what objection there is to it.

Dr. GABRIELSON. You will notice that it has been cut very drastically from a $2,750,000 appropriation in 1942. This really should not show in our appropriation either, because we do not get this money; we just distribute it to the States. We get a small portion of whatever is appropriated for the administration of the act, but not to exceed 8 percent of the appropriation for administration.

TAX ON SPORTING ARMS AND AMMUNITION

This money is collected through a special tax on sporting arms and ammunition. It was imposed for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act. It comes out of a special tax which a special group of people pay. The money is distributed to the State game departments under a formula set up by Congress.

The work under this appropriation is carried on in the various States.

I trust, Mr. Chairman, that the Senate will restore this item as recommended by the Budget so that this useful service and wildlife restoration may go forward and by so doing help in the winning of the war, and that our conferees will agree thereto when it goes to conference.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent, the pro forma amendments were withdrawn.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I listened with interest today, as I do whenever we have an appropriation bill before us. It seems to me that we have reached the state of mind in regard to these appropriation bills that many seem to think all we have need to do is to appropriate enough money and we can produce all the food we can possibly need. We are in a much more embarrassing position as far as food is concerned than most people realize.

Today I received the report showing the downward trend, as far as butter is concerned. Butter production is more than 7 percent below 1 year ago. Day before yesterday I had the weekly report on cheese. Cheese is 24 percent below last year's production. We sit here appropriating money but at the same time we let these agencies for whom we also appropriate money run hog-wild and some of these agencies are doing more harm to food production than all the money we appropriate and our efforts here can remedy.

WHY IS THE AVERAGE BUSINESSMAN NOT DESERVING OF SIMILAR CONSIDERATION TO THAT AFFORDED OTHER GROUPS?

I wish to call the attention of my colleagues to two situations. First, I wish to remind you of the Ways and Means Committee bill to allow the increase in the public debt with the special amendment attached to it preventing the Executive Department of our Government from placing a $25,000 limit on salaries. The reason given for the amendment was that the Executive had exceeded his authority, and this assumption of power was corrected by the amendment. This amendment had majority sponsorship, as well as majority and minority support.

Secondly, I wish to call your attention to the following section of the same Price Control Act—paragraph (h) of section 2 of the Emergency Price Control Act (Public Law No. 421):

> The powers granted in this section shall not be used or made to operate to compel changes in the business practices or methods, or means or aids to distribution, established in any industry, except to prevent circumvention or evasion of any regulation, order, price schedule, or requirement under this act.

If there is a Member of this House who believes that this section of the Price Control Act has been followed by the O. P. A., I wish to yield to him to so state at this time. Everyone knows that the O. P. A. has disregarded, not only the spirit of this law but the word of the law as well. We have seen hundreds of small businesses hampered, hamstrung, and, in fact, put out of business. The small packing plants and the canneries of our country are two good examples of what the O. P. A. has done to prevent the orderly marketing of food products and to prevent the maximum food pack for this season.

This O. P. A. outfit, since its inception, has seemed to be more interested in making America over than in making America strong. They now seem more interested in putting through their particular schemes than they are in providing for maximum food production in 1943. The question resolves itself around to this point. If the Congress was justified in correcting the Price Control Act so that the executive department could not place a $25,000 ceiling on the salaries of a limited number of people in the higher income brackets, why has it not by corrective legislation action clarified the provisions of this same Price Control Act so that this O. P. A. outfit will not continue to ruin one small business after another? There surely was no more assumption of power by the executive branch in regard to the $25,000 salary limitation than there has been by the machinations of this O. P. A. outfit. What is fair for one group is fair for the other.

We have had enough committees, we have had enough hearings—but where are the legislative proposals to do anything about it?

We passed the Wolcott amendment to protect all our citizens from the O. P. A. This provision was eliminated by the other body. We should not be put in the position of advising our constituents that they must continue to suffer from the unfair rulings and the assumed powers of the O. P. A.

Mr. PITTENGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. PITTENGER. I want to pay my tribute to the gentleman from Wisconsin as being one of the leading agricultural experts in the Congress of the United States. He is one of the most valuable Members of Congress. Now, he does not have to answer this question, but if he wishes, he can. I think the Department of Agriculture is equally at fault with the O. P. A. in connection with this food shortage. I think the O. P. A. has done more harm than good in its effort to ruin small business. Does the gentleman agree with me, and he may answer or not.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. I always answer if I have the time. First, I humbly thank the gentleman from Minnesota for his kind words. My answer is that the Agriculture Department has had a lot of criticism that it should not have had. We must realize that the Department of Agriculture has not been able to put through a program that it wants any more than you or I can put through the kind of program that you or I may want.

Taking the whole picture into consideration, I personally must stand here and defend what the Agriculture Department has tried to do, though I know they have made mistakes. Covering as many fields as does the United States Department of Agriculture, it is not humanly possible to avoid mistakes. There is one thing about the Department of Agriculture, and that is this—if you have a grievance, you can present your grievance to them and you get sympathetic consideration of it, but as far as the O. P. A. is concerned, all you get is a promise. The Agriculture Department has been most cooperative with me ever since I have been a Member of this House. They furnish the facts and do not add their interpretations unless asked to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last eight words.

Mr. Chairman, this is one appropriation bill in which I always take much interest because I come from one of the great western States which has much public land and a large proportional interest in the Interior Department appropriation bill, with regard to Indian reservations, reclamation, and the like.

I expected this cut. We anticipated there would have to be a severe cut on account of war conditions, although it is a little heavy in spots. I want to add my word of commendation of the fine work of the committee and I want to sanction what my friend from Montana said about the gentleman from Manhattan who has always been so considerate of us in the great open spaces of the West. May I also join with the gentleman from Utah in what he said earlier today. I feel that the War Production Board has stopped work on some mighty important reclamation projects which would have contributed very powerfully to the war effort.

There is one matter which I did not mention to the Subcommittee on Appropriations. I shall mention it here. Uncle Sam is a great land owner. Two-thirds of the area of my State is in the public domain, or at least under the control of the Forestry Department, the Indian Service, or some such agency. Throughout the entire West a great deal of the public domain has been used for war training purposes, bombing ranges, and that sort of thing, having been taken over by the War or Navy Departments.

I hope that some provision will be made either in the Interior bill or in some military appropriation bill for the rehabilitation of those vast areas which have served as a proving ground for tanks, bombing ranges, and so forth, before they are turned back to us, as we hope they will eventually be turned back to the livestock people for grazing purposes and other uses of that kind.

Mr. JENSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. JENSEN. I may say for the RECORD that 54.6 percent of all the land in the gentleman's State is owned by the Government.

Mr. MURDOCK. That is a little less than I thought, but it confirms what I just said.

Mr. JENSEN. On page 227 of the hearings, the gentleman will find a table showing the percentage of land and the acres owned by the United States Government in every State of the Union.

Mr. MURDOCK. Yes, I notice that; but the column to which the gentleman refers is administered by the Interior Department. However, that confirms my statement that Uncle Sam is a great landowner, and we hope he will continue to be a good husbandman. It is in such appropriation bills as the Department of the Interior appropriation bill that we look to Uncle Sam to take good care of his resources and develop them to the limit.

Mr. JENSEN. I may say further that Uncle Sam owns 14.5 percent of all the land in the whole of the United States.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, much of that great area is forest land and mineral ground and we are interested in roads. Especially do we need access roads to tap the forests and the new mines that are being developed and more which ought to be developed. Right now we are called on to furnish more and more critical materials. The great Rocky Mountain region is the treasure chest of America and that is where we need development.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I wish to again advert to the subject I mentioned this afternoon when the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JONES] so graciously yielded to me.

It will be recalled the Interior Department appropriation bill for 1943 called for the amount of $162,000,000. Perhaps some of you will also remember I offered 3 amendments to reduce that amount. The first called for a reduction of approximately 28 percent. When I offered this amendment, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] opposed it and questioned my sincerity in offering it. That amendment received 5 affirmative votes, including my own, and had 82 votes against it.

My second amendment called for a reduction of 14 percent and it received 14 "aye" votes and 76 "no" votes.

My third amendment called for a reduction of the amount requested—that is, $162,000,000 of 5-plus percent and it received 37 affirmative votes and 86 negative votes.

Now just a year hence, the Appropriations Committee has brought in this bill which calls for a reduction of 56 percent of the amount requested in the appropriation bill last year. Strange to say, this reduction has had the unanimous approval of the Appropriations Committee and will probably have the unanimous support of the House. What a change of spirit must have come over the Appropriations Committee and the Members of this House. It is encouraging, to say the least. Now if the Congress can only come to realize the need of making comparable savings in other governmental departments it will be truly wonderful.

How my heart throbbed with joy as I sat here this afternoon listening to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] so vigorously and enthusiastically making the same speech, in substance, I made a year ago—the speech wherein he questioned my sincerity.

Mr. ROCKWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last 10 words.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want this bill to pass without calling attention to one more item in it. I shall not offer an amendment today to this bill, but I am expecting that the Senate will offer an amendment and I want to say just a word concerning it.

On page 96 is what we generally speak of as the Robertson-Pittman Act. For those who are not familiar with this act I want to say that there is a 10-percent tax on munitions for civilian use which goes into a fund, which is used for the preservation of wildlife. Up to last year there was about $2,500,000 a year appropriated out of that fund but last year the amount was cut, on account of the war, to $1,250,000. It was hoped that at least an equal amount would be put into the bill this year, but the committee decided to cut it $500,000 from last year's appropriation, or a cut to about one-third the amount provided in normal times.

That particularly affects my State of Colorado. In my particular district, in just one little section, over 2,000 elk and deer died this past winter because they lacked proper feed and too much segregation resulting in disease. There was over $4,000,000 worth of wild game killed in my State last year, and more than that will probably be killed this year. This is important when our civilians do not have sufficient meat. This section of the bill should appropriate sufficient money to properly protect this wildlife.

I mention this item particularly because it does not cost the Treasury anything. The money is already in a fund which has accumulated to some $10,000,000; it is increasing all the time and I ask the committee, when and if the Senate increases the appropriation to somewhere near what it ought to be, that they be sympathetic to it.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROCKWELL. I yield.

Mr. ANGELL. It is true, is it not, that this is really a trust fund, a fund provided for the sportsman and is not out of the public Treasury; it is money that is paid by the sportsmen, who are glad to put it up, in order that this very fine work may be carried on?

Mr. ROCKWELL. That is true.

Mr. ANGELL. For the protection of wildlife.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROCKWELL. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I want to endorse what the gentleman has said regarding the attitude of sportsmen; I am sure that is quite true all through the West, and I know, particularly in my State, exactly what the gentleman has indicated is correct. The sportsmen gladly pay this money into this fund, and I think the major proportion of it ought to be expended for the purposes for which it is collected.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROCKWELL. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE. I wonder if the gentleman is entirely correct that this money in the Treasury is not usable by the Treasury for other purposes. I am interested in this fund. As a matter of fact, the first year I came to Congress I offered an amendment to increase the appropriation bill which made the first $1,000,000 available under the Pittman-Robertson Act. The House accepted it. The explanation was given at that time that this tax was a tax which had been put on with some other nuisance taxes, and this particular tax on ammunition was not repealed with a sort of gentlemen's understanding that it would be the measure of appropriations that might be made under the Pittman-Robertson Act. However, I think the money is in the Treasury and could be appropriated for other purposes, except that from a bookkeeping standpoint the appropriations that are made under the Pittman-Robertson Act are measured against it.

Mr. ROCKWELL. That is not my understanding. My understanding is, as the gentleman from Oregon says, that a trust fund has been created and can be used for no other purpose. The committee, in its report, states that the money will stay there and accumulate. Their idea is that it will all be spent after the war, if the money is not spent now. My contention is that it is an economy to spend enough of it now to keep going in a small way the work that has been done up to this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. BUFFETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, America is today the strongest country financially in the world. Nevertheless, we are headed toward an economic Pearl Harbon infinitely more disastrous than the defeat at Oahu unless we begin immediately to put government finances in order.

I am no alarmist. But I know of no greater disservice to America than to remain silent about the administration's policy of financial appeasement. Their financial failures parallel with deadly exactness the events leading to Pearl Harbor. When China was attacked in 1937 the President talked about quarantining aggressor nations, but war exports to Japan increased. After we had babied Japan with war materials, what happened? The strongest fortification in the world, America's bastion of strength that dominated the entire Pacific, was smashed to pieces in a few hours.

Mr. Roosevelt's policy on inflation has followed the same pattern that produced Pearl Harbor. To keep this discussion clear, let us define the term "inflation": inflation is a major decline in the purchasing power of the dollar. In 1932 Mr. Roosevelt campaigned with energy on the theme that the country was going into bankruptcy because of the deficits of those years. Those deficits of 1931 and 1932, of which he talked so eloquently, were $901,959,080 and $2,942,051,451, respectively. Today, every 12 days, on the average, our deficit is greater than was the shortage then in a full year. Think of it! An increase in our shortage of about 3,000 percent from a condition which Mr. Roosevelt represented as the road to bankruptcy. I say this with no partisanship, because the cost of living and the arithmetic table are nonpartisan. Inflation, like rain, falls on the just and the unjust alike. But when we are making a mistake that Mr. Roosevelt has said will lead to disaster, and then he enlarges that mistake 30 times, either we are going to wake up promptly or calamity will befall us.

Here we encounter the alibis for this fantastic situation. It is explained that because we are at war, the budget of America must be unbalanced as it is today. That simply is not true. Practically all our expenditures are being paid to American people in dollars. These dollars could be collected from them in proportion to the increase in Government expense if the administration willed it. There will never be as good a time to do this task as now. Certainly the willingness and ability to pay heavy taxes will not increase after peace has arrived. Then the fervor of our war patriotism will have cooled.

England is collecting over 50 percent of her war expenditures in taxes. In the year ended April 1, Canada collected about 48 percent of her governmental costs. But what is the record in America? During the 1943 fiscal year to date, only 25 percent of our expenditures have been collected in taxes. Unfortunately, there is no way of accurately portraying the ominous consequences of this failure of America's leadership. Like floating downstream in the Niagara River above the falls, the signs of disaster are recognized only by those who have explored the end of the journey. So it is with a financial policy of collecting only one-fourth of the cost of this war, while our allies are doing 100 percent better on this vital front. Frantic skirmishing on the price-fixing front cannot conceal the danger or substitute for action in the decisive field of taxation.

In his message to Congress the President asked for $16,000,000,000 in new taxes for the coming fiscal year. So far Congress has made no progress on this task. With all the earnestness at my command, I plead with the majority leadership of this House to prepare a tax program immediately that will raise not less than $16,000,000,000. What should those taxes be? Frankly, as a new Member of this body, I am not a tax expert. But I have some ideas. No political cowardice will keep me from presenting them in this hour of national crisis. Let me suggest them briefly: first, a Federal sales tax on goods and services, possibly excepting basic food commodities; second, a special Victory tax on gasoline and other motor fuels and oils, replacing rationing and black markets; third, additional or new taxes on tobacco, coffee, chocolate, and beverages generally; fourth, some increase in personal income-tax rates. Any large increase in personal tax rates will black-out the middle class. It will masquerade as a soak-the-rich policy. Actually, it will result in making "poor whites" out of everyone except the bureaucrats and the idle rich. Other specific taxes could be designed to absorb excess income before it produced explosive inflation in the market places of the Nation.

My suggestions may not provide the right answer and certainly not the full answer. But I say this—either levy new taxes in proportion to our expanded spending or curtail our commitments abroad to fit our resources. Whatever taxes we levy will be labeled unfair and unjust. They can result in general defeat at the polls for those with the courage to vote for them. But if America is to be saved we here must exhibit moral courage that will match the physical courage of our boys on the battle fronts. Taxes commensurate with Government expenditures are one of the prices of liberty. Actually, liberty with high taxes or slavery with high taxes is the choice confronting us. Can we see that truth in time?

To do this job, Congress must have genuine help from the Executive department. The blame for our present plight does not rest alone on the shoulders of Congress. Mr. Roosevelt has taken credit, and rightly, for the overdue social gains of the past 10 years. The credit is due the President because he dominated Congress and controlled its efforts. So then it is only correct and logical that the economic crisis existing today be charged up to the President who has controlled the actions of Congress. Just as the social reforms are a New Deal achievement, the financial errors and today's inflation are likewise his failure. Let me be specific.

Following the first major inflationary act, breaking the gold pledge, the New Deal, quite like a spendthrift who finances his riotous living by loans from his friends and relatives, kept borrowing steadily until the war danger threatened us. The insidious progress of this financial sickness was never effectively challenged. The forces for upright financial practices could not effectively combat such tricky arguments about debt as, "We owe it to ourselves," and other sleight-of-hand financial phrases. Compare that kind of leadership with what Churchill said to England a few weeks ago, and I quote:

> These savings of the nation arising from the thrift, skill, or devotion of individuals are sacred. The state is built around them and it is the duty of the state to redeem its faith in an equal degree of value.

The policy here of evading and confusing the problem fooled many of the people but it did not entirely mislead Congress. Occasional attempts were made in this legislative body to levy taxes that would balance the Budget. A Federal sales tax, higher personal taxes, and other special taxes have been proposed from time to time. But for 10 years the Executive has had practically absolute control of legislation. Programs to tax adequately have been pettifogged by the Executive branch again and again, just as the Administration has blocked pay-as-you-earn taxation for many months. It is clear that the failure to prevent inflation by higher tax levies is not alone the failure of Congress. It is important that that responsibility be squarely placed.

For we are now nearing the crisis in our financial affairs. Strong measures to preserve the value of the frugal savings of the common people of America must be enacted, or else the same formula that has produced dictatorship in other parts of the world will produce it here. First would come social dissensions, resulting from the disruption of home life and skyrocketing of prices. These disorders would take the form of food riots, sectional strife, or recurrent labor disputes. Whatever their apparent nature, the underlying cause would be the protest of the people against destruction of the America they love by unsound economic practices. Should that day arrive, it will provide an alluring setting for the Executive power to seize all the reins of government. All that would be necessary then would be to shrewdly charge that the Congress had caused the crisis by failing to enact adequate tax legislation.

Special powers would be arbitrarily assumed, based on the necessity for preserving order and stopping dissension. That old alibi for despotism is hard to combat in a critical hour. It has been used wherever democratic nations have been destroyed from within. Always the primary cause has been inflation and economic distress. The first act of the dictator has always been to dissolve the legislative body, claiming that the legislature is incapable of dealing with prevailing conditions. Likewise, the promise is always made that once the emergency is over, the Reichstag—Hitler—the Chamber of Deputies—Mussolini—or whatever the legislative body is, will resume its functions. This sort of tragedy need not happen here. If it does happen, every American boy who dies in this war will have died in vain.

It will not happen if Congress will enact tax levies commensurate with the present national expenditures.

The people of America are counting on the Members of Congress to preserve their liberty. Victory in this battle does not rest on our brave soldiers and sailors but on us at home. With you and me rests the final decision between solvency and liberty or inflation and slavery. Before the judgment seat of God each of us must some day answer for our actions during this critical hour.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this bill and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes, 10 minutes to be reserved to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. STEWART] who desires to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. STEWART: On page 39, between lines 14 and 15, insert the following: "Presbyterian College at Durant, Okla.: For 100 pupils, $40,000; for pay of principal, drayage, and general repairs and improvements, $7,000; in all, $47,000."

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is to reinstate an appropriation for a college, the Oklahoma Presbyterian, a going institution heretofore supported by the Interior Department for the past 40 years. My own daughter attended this college.

To give you a little better background, my father came to the Indian Territory in 1894 as a Presbyterian missionary to the Choctaw Indians. Somehow, someway this college failed to receive an appropriation 2 years ago. Yet it has produced some of the most outstanding Indian citizens in all America. I hope you will not forget that our very freedom which we enjoy today was brought about by the cooperation of the Choctaw Indians. In the Congressional Cemetery stands a humble monument to Pushmataha, an ally of General Jackson, who was the only full-blood Indian who ever rose to the rank of a general, and the only Indian statesman that was ever successful in getting all of the Indian tribes together. When the great war with England was raging in 1812, Tecumseh gathered many tribes, and it was the answer of this great general who brought the Choctaws over on the side of the United States, whom this Government gave military honors for his contribution to our very freedom today. Let us keep faith with our solemn agreements. I appeal to you to reappropriate this money. I am just as strong for my Catholic brethren, my Methodist brethren, and my Baptist brethren as I am of my own religion in this respect. Do not discriminate. I thought enough of this college that I sent my own beloved daughter there. She attended this school. We are pioneer folks, and this school was one of the trail blazers of our civilization.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Was there a Budget estimate or request for the item involved in your amendment?

Mr. STEWART. I am sorry I cannot give you that information. I have never been able to have any information.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEWART. Yes, I yield.

Mr. CARTER. I regret to inform the gentleman from Oklahoma that there was no Budget request presented for this item, and that may be the principal reason why it was not favorably considered by the committee.

Mr. STEWART. Possibly that is so, but I am appealing to you as Members of Congress, because some ideologists went in there to shear the wings of a great institution—to prevent the appropriation for this school. The gentleman from Oklahoma, the chairman of this subcommittee [Mr. JOHNSON], knows the picture as well as I know it, and I ask him to express himself at this time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will yield——

Mr. STEWART. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I will say I am very familiar with the history and the record of this school. It is one of the outstanding schools of the entire United States. It has turned out some of the finest citizens of the country, and as a member of the committee I opposed closing the school. That is still my position.

Mr. STEWART. Thank you for your contribution. I just wanted to get that picture before the Members of Congress. Sometimes the Members of Congress do not get a clear picture of the country as a whole. I feel I am as tolerant as any man in Congress. I would go as far for a man who opposes my religious or political views, if he were honest and conscientious in his convictions as I am in mine. I am going to ask you few Members who are here this afternoon to restore this appropriation.

I might add as I go along, I read in a trade journal that we had in one department here in Washington 2,700 attorneys, controlling the affairs of that department, and England was able to cope with 10 attorneys with a like branch of government. I want you to figure that out. I am appealing to you. I believe that you men will see that these cold-hearted experts, if you please, are in error. They would pass judgment on an institution that has served America for 50 years, and one man of Indian blood has served three terms in the United States Senate, Senator Robert L. Owen and two others, Charles D. Carter and Bill Hastings in Congress. Please do not pass judgment on this institution until you learn of the great good it has done. I hope you do not oppose me. I beg of you your support, because I believe we all see eye to eye. I hope that you recant and reconsider and forget the ideologists who are trying to destroy one of the greatest institutions in the United States, even though it is a small church school.

Mr. BENDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BENDER. How large a body has this institution?

Mr. STEWART. It is a very small school—100 or 200. It has never had over 200.

Mr. BENDER. Is it not a fact that it is less than 100 today?

Mr. STEWART. It is far less, because no appropriation was made 2 years ago, and it has been carried on by public subscription.

Mr. BENDER. Is it not a fact that it is less than 25?

Mr. STEWART. I do not know what the number is.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman will yield, I can give the exact figures.

Mr. STEWART. All right; go ahead.

Mr. CARTER. Somebody said just 16 students.

Mr. STEWART. I do not know, but he may be like some of these others. I want to restore the institution; that will take care of 100 or more and they will have the enrollment if you vote for this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I regret to find myself in opposition to the genial gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. STEWART]. He has made a very fervent plea for this school, but his plea, with all due deference to him, comes a little too late. This committee held hearings for a number of weeks. Many Members of this House who were interested in various matters appeared before the committee. The gentleman from Oklahoma never appeared to present his case. We have no estimate from the Bureau of the Budget on this matter, and I say that this matter was called to the attention of the committee by the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON], who presented communications that had been written in behalf of the institution. The chairman of this subcommittee was very much in favor of the support of this school, and I say to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. STEWART], that when it came time to vote, although the chairman of the subcommittee favored it, the remainder of the committee was unanimously against it under the conditions under which it was presented. Had the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. STEWART] gone to the Bureau of the Budget, or had he come to the committee and presented the matter with the fervor and devotion he has presented it here on the floor of the House, he might have appealed to us in such a manner that we would have put the school in, but I ask him now to withdraw his amendment so that we can get on with the bill.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. STEWART. I wrote a letter to the committee asking for the privilege of appearing on this matter and it is in your files. I wanted to make a clear case, and I hope the gentleman will withdraw his remarks and support this matter instead of opposing it.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Was the gentleman notified to appear?

Mr. STEWART. I never had notice to appear. But I wrote a letter.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I understand that the gentleman was notified to appear.

Mr. STEWART. If I was, it was missed in the mass of correspondence that comes to my desk.

Mr. CARTER. I am sure that if the gentleman wrote a letter to the chairman of this subcommittee or to the clerk of the committee asking to appear, that he would have received a prompt reply. I saw but two letters in connection with this school, neither of which was written by the gentleman from Oklahoma. I might say that we have taken pretty good care of the gentleman's district, so far as schools are concerned. We have provided for two other schools.

Mr. STEWART. The subcommittee chairman just left the room, but I wrote him a letter asking him the privilege of appearing before the committee and presenting this matter.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I would like to say that I think the gentleman was notified to appear before the committee. I am so informed by the clerk.

Mr. STEWART. I do not care what the clerk told the gentleman. I was not told.

Mr. CARTER. I do not yield further. If the gentleman applied for permission to appear before the committee and did not get it, that is regrettable and I say that I hope he will withdraw his motion, and that next year he will present the matter to the Bureau of the Budget and let it be brought up in an orderly way.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. RABAUT. A remark has been made here about one of the clerks of the Committee on Appropriations. If there is a group of men in this whole Capitol that is devoted to the office which they hold that group is the clerks of the Committee on Appropriations, with which I have been connected for a long time. They are most devoted to their duty, and I am sorry to hear anything said derogatory to any one of them. If a letter was sent to the committee, there will be evidence of it.

Mr. CARTER. I agree with the gentleman. The clerk of this subcommittee is most efficient and courteous.

Mr. RABAUT. And I hope that the evidence will be produced.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for this time only for the purpose of making some remarks pursuant to what was said by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BUFFETT] a little while ago about national finances, and then to ask some questions of the members of the committee.

It is true of course that the only real cure for the problem of inflation is additional taxation. A nation cannot bring into balance the available supply of goods with the available purchasing power of the people, so long as it permits billions of dollars of new money in the form of deposits to be created by the banks and loaned to the Government at interest month by month.

As long as that condition prevails the attempt to control prices by means of O. P. A. will be of itself a most difficult and hazardous procedure. As a matter of fact, I have put into a short volume called Out of Debt, Out of Danger my own thoughts about this whole problem of our national debt and national financial structure. A copy of that book I am going to take the pleasure of sending to each Member of Congress in a day or two. I rise at this time only to say that one of the chapters in this book points out that in time of war the kind of financial policies that should be followed by a nation are quite the opposite of those that should be followed in peacetime and that the thing we need to do above all others is to have sufficiently courageous taxation including, if necessary, a compulsory savings program so that we can avoid the creation of a single dollar of new money by the banking system of this Nation.

I should now like to ask one or two questions of members of the committee. In the first place I should like to say that I saw recently a statement to the effect that the War Production Board had lifted its stop order against the completion of the Friant Dam in California and also the Madera Canal. I realize this action on the part of the War Production Board is somewhat late from the standpoint of this particular bill, but I should like to ask some member of the committee, perhaps the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER], what effect that might have on future actions.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Gladly.

Mr. CARTER. While I have received no official notice, I understand that that is the case, that the stop order so far as the Madera Canal and the Friant Dam has been removed. This appropriation bill carries an item of $11,500,000 in addition to the carry-over which was $26,500,000; so there is a considerable amount of money with which to work at the present time.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. And could that be used on the Friant Dam or any portion of the Central Valley project?

Mr. CARTER. Yes; there may be a very small portion that is earmarked, but it would not in my opinion amount to more than $3,000,000 which could not be used for these purposes.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Will a portion of it be used for the completion of the Shasta Dam and the installation of power units there?

Mr. CARTER. It will be used immediately and continuously until that power is brought in which will probably be soon after the first of next year.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. And how about the transmission of that power?

Mr. CARTER. There is plenty of money provided in this bill for the transmission line and it is the opinion of the committee that the only transmission line the Government should build is from the Shasta power house to the Shasta substation about 25 miles away.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. It would have to be turned over to the Pacific Gas & Electric Co. unless the transmission line authorized by Congress were completed from Shasta Dam to load center at Antioch.

Mr. CARTER. There is no hope of having that done for many years.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. But there is no prejudice against that being done as soon as possible?

Mr. CARTER. No; not if it is decided it should be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] for 5 minutes.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Chairman, this afternoon we have been discussing a bill making appropriations for the Interior Department. During this time there has been some consideration of the question of food supply. I see on the floor the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRADLEY] who has just returned from a visit to that great interior hinterland, Hot Springs, Va., where I understand he crashed the gate and was admitted to the food conference.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE. I yield.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. I want to make it perfectly clear that I did not crash any gates; as a matter of fact, I was welcomed very cordially, as I expected to be, by our former esteemed and distinguished colleague the Honorable Marvin Jones.

Mr. CASE. I am sure that the gentleman was treated nicely by Mr. Jones, who was a former distinguished Member of this body. If the gentleman at this time cares to elaborate on what he discovered, I shall be pleased to yield to him further.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. I shall be very happy to tell the gentleman and the Committee what I found down there.

The United Nations Food Conference convened at Hot Springs, Va., last Tuesday, the 18th. As you all will remember, the Government originally ruled that the press of this country would be barred from covering the conference with the exception that they would be permitted to attend only the opening and closing sessions. In order that the American people would not be kept completely in the dark on developments at this conference, I introduced, on April 13, in company with our own Senator HOMER FERGUSON, House Concurrent Resolution 18. This resolution was designed to permit the Congress to have full knowledge of all discussions, all transactions, and all decisions which may be arrived at during the course of the sessions by having in attendance a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Representatives—to consist of three Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, two of whom shall be members of the majority party and one who shall be a member of the minority party; five Members of the House, to be appointed by the Speaker, three of whom shall be members of the majority party and two of whom shall be members of the minority party.

This resolution further sought to permit the vitally interested people of this Nation to be kept informed of the happenings of this historic meeting through daily attendance of representatives of at least the three major wire-press services, namely, the Associated Press, International News Service, and United Press. It is provided in that resolution that the gentlemen of the press are subject to a reasonable amount of censorship to prevent the disclosure of military secrets which might bring aid and comfort to the enemy.

No action having been taken upon this resolution by the Rules Committee up to April 27, I addressed a letter to its chairman, the Honorable ADOLPH J. SABATH, urging the imperative necessity of prompt action immediately upon the reconvening of the House on May 3. I pointed out to the chairman that if, as we had been led to believe, nothing of a military nature was to be discussed at this conference, there should be no objection raised to the adoption of my resolution and further that if discussions are to be had and decisions arrived at or commitments made which might affect the post-war security and economy of this Nation, then by all means it was imperative that favorable action be taken immediately on this resolution.

I became concerned about what appeared to me to be an obvious muzzling of the press and I became worried about some possible deliberate attempt on the part of the sponsors of this conference to keep valuable information away from the people of the United States or from we Members of Congress, who are the duly elected representatives of the people. Consequently, I continued to push for action before the Rules Committee. Republican members on that committee caused our resolution to be brought up for discussion last Friday. I was not called in before the committee at that time but I was promised that I would be called before the committee to testify early this last week. Not having been called and no action having been taken on my resolution, immediately after Mr. Churchill finished speaking on Wednesday, I jumped into my car and drove 220 miles down to Hot Springs, Va., to look into this conference personally. I consider it my duty to my constituents and my country to keep myself as fully informed as possible on all matters which pertain to the general welfare.

Some newspapers have carried the story that I crashed the gate at this historic conference. Even though it be true that I was the first and only Member of Congress to go to the trouble of seeking entrance to this conference up to the third day of its sessions, nevertheless I was very courteously received. Here is what actually happened.

On my arrival I was, of course, stopped by one of the military police, of which there are some 200 posted very wisely all around to protect the safety and welfare of these hundreds of representatives of the 43 Allied Nations that have honored us with their presence at this historic international conference.

Upon presenting my official identification as a Member of Congress, I was promptly and courteously sent to the main guard desk at the front door of the famous and beautiful huge Homestead Hotel, where my credentials were again examined and I was promptly escorted to the office of the secretariat, Mr. Michael J. McDermott, of the State Department, and was given a daily visitor's pass. I was permitted to register and fortunately able to obtain a room in the very much overcrowded hotel. Huge as it is, this hotel is not able to accommodate all of the delegates and some of them are of necessity occupying rooms in buildings nearby.

Following my assignment to a room, the captain of the guard was good enough to take me up to meet my former esteemed colleague—a Member of the House for 24 years and recently chairman of the Agriculture Committee, and now a judge in the Court of Claims, the Honorable Marvin Jones, duly elected chairman of this historic conference.

I talked with Judge Jones for a long while about the aims and purposes of the conference and was very pleasantly received indeed. Following that session, Mr. McDermott took me all over the building, through the various meeting rooms, and so forth, and later I went down to the press room for an interview by members of the press in attendance.

On Thursday morning I returned to Washington for the purpose of repeating to my colleagues in the House the warm assurances of Judge Jones that all Members of Congress were welcome at any time to attend any and all sessions of the conference and that nothing whatsoever will be kept from them. In my humble opinion, it is most imperative that the Members of Congress accept this invitation whenever their time permits and sit in on these historic meetings. After all, I have been told that this conference is but the first of a number of such international conferences that it is expected will be held between now and the peace to follow this devastating war. These conferences are looking toward the post-war period and it seems to me that we as Members of Congress are woefully remiss in the discharge of our duties if we fail to profit by our mute attendance at these conferences and get the viewpoints of the international delegates who are thus assembled. It seems to me this is a golden opportunity for the Members of Congress to interview these delegates—statesmen and economists—from all over the world and get their outlook on the post-war world, in order that we may be in a better position to pass upon the various questions that will be presented to us and thus render decisions which in our humble opinion will be for the best interests of our Nation and the post-war world in general. Furthermore, we are more than remiss in our duties if we do not indicate by our presence that we are alive to our responsibility as the people's representatives by being willing to keep ourselves thus informed. Obviously, if we do not attend this conference in some numbers, it seems to me that it is perfectly logical for the administration officials, charged with the responsibility of arranging for the conference, to feel that Congress is disinterested and therefore there is no reason to issue any invitation to Members to attend any future conferences which may be held. In other words, this conference might well be regarded as setting a precedent and it is up to us in the public discharge of our duties to see to it that Congress is actively included—not necessarily as voting delegates—but certainly as observers in any and all of these future conferences.

Now, as to the aims of this particular conference, let me quote from the opening address of the since-elected chairman, Judge Marvin Jones:

> The fact that representatives of 44 nations, from every part of the earth, have traveled long distances under wartime difficulties to be here bespeaks your earnestness and the importance of the subject we are to discuss. More important, it reflects a genuine desire on the part of all free peoples for a better understanding of our common problems and a united approach to their solution.
> This conference has rightfully been referred to as a forerunner of other conferences which unquestionably will have a part in shaping the post-war world in which freedom will again rule.
> Thinking people everywhere now realize that what we have called surpluses are, for the most part, not surpluses at all, but are the results of accumulations caused by defects in the systems of distribution and the inability of the masses to purchase the food they need. The peoples of the world have mastered the machinery of production to a far greater degree than they have mastered the machinery of distribution.
> If by the exchange of views and a consideration of these questions we can produce a better understanding and promote the flow of farm commodities and the articles produced therefrom into the markets of the world; if we can leave the peoples of the world freer and more able to produce and secure the things they need; if we can make it possible for surplus products to be distributed and used and thus prevent them from overloading and overwhelming the distribution machinery of the countries in which such surpluses have been backed up for lack of a market, we will not only have achieved a great world-wide humanitarian objective, but each of us will have helped to promote the economic and social betterment of his own country as well.

Now, I earlier referred to the very justifiable indignation of the press at the original decision which was to bar them from all excepting the opening and closing sessions of the conference. Considerable modification has since been made in the initial regulations. Here is the actual situation as I saw it on my arrival Wednesday evening.

Press headquarters have been set up in the Hotel Casino, which is located about 100 yards distant from the hotel proper. In this rather spacious building, the many reporters covering the conference have their work tables, their press wire outlets, and so forth. One of the major wire press services—International News—has set up an electrical printer. In another section of the city two blocks away, the news photographers have been provided with a temporary darkroom for developing their photographs. These boys, however, are operating under considerable difficulty in that they have to drive some 20 miles to Covington in order to get their pictures on the wire transmission services. This is no fault of the conference.

It is true that so far the members of the press have been denied permission to enter the hotel proper, where all the sessions are being held, for the purpose of either attending the various sessions or for interviewing the delegates. My own personal opinion is that the press should be permitted reasonable representation at all open sessions and should be given an opportunity to interview the various delegates within the hotel proper, if the delegates themselves are willing to be interviewed. Now, of course, this much is true: The conference has in no way whatsoever attempted to restrict the utterances of any of the delegates and has made it perfectly clear that not only can they step outside of the hotel proper to talk to reporters but they can also at their request call the reporters into a special press conference room which has been arranged in the hotel proper. So far—and the conference is only a few days old—it is natural to assume, and it is a fact, that some of the delegates—unaccustomed to American press procedure—are perhaps somewhat backward in accepting press invitations to be interviewed. On the other hand, it is likewise but natural to assume that these individual delegates desire and expect full press coverage back in their own nation and our American press stands ready to give them that coverage and can do it very quickly if permitted to thus promote international good will.

In all fairness, I think I should say that Judge Jones and Mr. McDermott, of the State Department, who has been designated chief press officer of the conference, are both hopeful that some method can be worked out to better the press relations with this conference. Both join me in very sincere regrets that there has developed an unfortunate lack of understanding of the press situation on all sides. Certain it is that we still have a free press in America—we are told we are fighting to preserve the freedom of speech—and certain it is that we do not have today at Hot Springs a free press. There still remains in America a power of the press and if this and future conferences are to be successful, then that power of the press to influence public opinion in America must be fully respected and so far as I am concerned, I intend to continue to exert every influence that I can bring to bear to see to it that the American people get freedom of the press at all times and on every occasion.

In conclusion let me just add one word of caution to any of the Members who may desire to attend the conference sometime between now and its closing, which has definitely been set by resolution for June 3. Hot Springs is temporarily in the same position as many other cities in this country. It is woefully short of accommodations. The Homestead Hotel itself, headquarters of the conference, is overcrowded beyond its capacity—in fact, to such an extent that some of the delegates have had to be quartered elsewhere. Judge Jones, therefore, has suggested to me that I call the attention of the Members to the reasonably good rail accommodations which are presently available. One can leave Washington at 11:30 at night on the Chesapeake & Ohio pullman and arrive in Hot Springs early the next morning in plenty of time to attend the sessions, which generally start at either 9 or 10 o'clock and continue throughout the day and into the evening. Returning, one can leave there on the sleeper at 8 o'clock and arrive in Washington about 3:30 a. m. Of course, I appreciate this is an early hour to land here—and I understand it is a through sleeper for New York—but the fact remains, and I am sure the membership appreciates, that if one will go to bed early, as is the habit of the membership, one can still get a full 7 hours' sleep and upon arrival in Washington can go directly to the office and get in several hours of work free from interruption by telephone or presence of constituents.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Chairman, I congratulate the gentleman from Michigan, and I ask unanimous consent that he may have permission to extend his own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE]?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. DWORSHAK].

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DWORSHAK. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I have asked the gentleman to yield in these last few minutes of debate in order to secure opportunity for a word of commendation for the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee handling the bill. This is one of the most important of the annual supply bills and one of the most difficult. And in all the years I have been on the committee I do not recall seeing it disposed of with such dispatch and general approval, in the committee and in the House. That is all the more notable in view of the fact that the bill as reported has been reduced 60 percent below the current expenditures of the Department and 11 percent below the Budget estimates. It is a record which has not been equaled this year—if ever before in the history of the Congress—and I wish to compliment the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] who probably knows more about the affairs of this Department than any other man in the House, and with him the members of his subcommittee, including especially the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER] and the members of the subcommittee on both sides of the aisle. The reductions in the bill are in keeping with the national program of retrenchment and the subcommittee in recommending them have contributed in that respect to the successful prosecution of the war program. I congratulate the gentleman from Oklahoma, Chairman JOHNSON, and his committee on the conduct of the bill, throughout the hearings and particularly on its management and passage without amendment on the floor here this afternoon.

Mr. CASE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DWORSHAK. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement which the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has just made, I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding the limit on time that has been given, the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. DWORSHAK] may be accorded as much time as was used by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair may say to the gentleman that time has been previously fixed by unanimous consent and can only be changed by unanimous consent.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Chairman, that is my request, that notwithstanding the fixing of time, the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. DWORSHAK] may be accorded an extension of time equivalent to that used by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CARTER. Is that the desire of the gentleman from Idaho?

Mr. DWORSHAK. I only want about 3 minutes.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given enough additional time to make up 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Chairman, I wish to add my word of commendation of the members of the subcommittee for the effective manner in which they have demonstrated in a realistic way how economy should be applied to the administration of the Federal Government. They have reduced the current year's budget by $120,000,000, and, while I am sincerely interested in the Interior Department and the effect of its work in the development of the great West, I think that this same pattern of economy should be carried throughout other appropriation bills which will come before the House.

I want to call attention to the fact that last October some stop orders were issued by the War Production Board which affected most, if not all, reclamation projects which were then in process of construction.

I did not check the record, but I presume that approximately $60,000,000 remains unexpended of the 1943 appropriations for various projects. I have checked the appropriation bill for the current fiscal year, and I find that all of the amounts appropriated 1 year ago are to remain available "until expended," and that applies both to the reclamation fund and the general fund.

I simply want to make that observation because I believe that the House, having control over the purse strings of the Nation, will not transfer this control over the reclamation projects or various activities of the Bureau of Reclamation to the War Production Board or to any other wartime agency.

I believe that as soon as this war emergency shall have passed the House should demonstrate that it has control and insist upon seeing that neither the War Production Board nor any other agency shall bypass or divert the expenditure of funds which have been appropriated by the Congress for the various activities of the Department of the Interior, and particularly for the Bureau of Reclamation.

Reclamation projects throughout the West are contributing materially to the production of essential foodstuffs, and this important Federal program is proving its worth in this emergency. It is unlikely that many projects under construction can be completed until after the termination of the war, but then there should be resumption of the program directly controlled by the Congress, and no interference should be permitted by Federal agencies not charged with supervising this work.

Mr. BREHM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DWORSHAK. I yield.

Mr. BREHM. Does the gentleman feel that if we continue to spend, as we are spending, until the war is over, we will have anything to conserve on?

Mr. DWORSHAK. We will have to take that chance.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BARDEN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2719) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the previous question is ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Duke, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 122. Joint resolution to extend the provisions of the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937 for a period of 90 days.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days within which to extend their own remarks in the RECORD on the bill just passed, H. R. 2719.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today, at the conclusion of the other special orders, I may address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

(Mr. CARLSON of Kansas asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, at the conclusion of the legislative business and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made today and to include therein certain data.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an appeal issued by the United States Christian Council for Democracy for the passage of anti-poll-tax legislation.

I have been informed that this will exceed the usual two pages and will cost $135.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MORRISON] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. MORRISON of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I am taking the floor at this time because I feel the Members of this House are entitled to know exactly what happened last Monday during my appearance before the House Committee on Military Affairs, a proceeding which older and more experienced Members have told me was one of the most unusual hearings that any committee ever conducted in the history of our Congress. As you realize, I, as a Member of Congress, was recently charged by Drew Pearson, radio and newspaper commentator, with intent to receive a bribe in connection with the sale of two boilers to the Aluminum Co. of America.

I testified before the House Military Affairs Committee on that matter, giving a full statement and showing that I had neither received nor was I going to receive any bribe, fee, or commission of any nature whatsoever, but did of my own free will attempt to assist one of my constituents who had purchased two boilers from the New Orleans Public Service at New Orleans and had got entangled in Government red tape here at Washington while trying to sell them to the Aluminum Co. of America.

Drew Pearson, the man who made the bribery charge over a Nation-wide radio hook-up, testified immediately after me to the Military Affairs Committee. He failed to produce the slightest support of his lies about me, but this is what I wish the Members of the House to know about the Military Affairs Committee and its chairman. Immediately after Pearson testified, the hearing was continued without ever calling the principal witness, namely, Mr. E. A. Jumonville, of Plaquemine, La., the man who was subpenaed by the committee and came all the way from Louisiana with all his files to tell in detail this boiler transaction. Mr. Jumonville was told by the committee's attorney to go home, as his testimony would not be taken.

Mr. John P. Monroe, 2101 R Street, was charged by Drew Pearson as the one who purchased the boilers. I insisted that Mr. Monroe be subpenaed, but Chairman ANDREW MAY refused to do so. I then asked Mr. Monroe for an affidavit, which I have given to the committee. In this affidavit Mr. John Monroe swears that he did not have anything to do with this boiler transaction, either directly or indirectly.

Mr. Jumonville, in a sworn statement and under oath, said that I was representing him as his Congressman, that I had received no fee nor was I to receive any fee in connection with the boiler transaction. Mr. Jumonville further swore that all he wanted was the price as set by the O. P. A. for those two boilers, which he knew he was entitled to, just as every other businessman in America today gets the O. P. A. price whenever he sells a commodity. This evidence I had to force into the hands of the committee, with the chairman refusing to accept it from the witnesses in person.

Mr. Drew Pearson, whom I defined as a claptrap, fly-by-night columnist, testified under oath to the committee that he received his first information in connection with this boiler transaction from an anonymous phone caller. The person who informed him of my alleged fee, Pearson said, was an alleged friend of mine, whose alleged name he refused to divulge, allegedly giving same to Chairman ANDREW MAY in executive session. It is my understanding that Chairman ANDREW MAY has refused to give that alleged name to the other members of the committee. Evidently Mr. MAY is not very consistent, because information that he secured in another hearing approximately 2 weeks ago in executive session was given by him to every newspaper in America that would bother to ask him for it.

Personally, I know Drew Pearson lied on the radio and I know he lied on the witness stand, which, down where I come from, is perjury, and that the person's name he gave Chairman MAY was either manufactured and is fictitious, or else he conspired with somebody to agree to give this synthetic and bogus information.

I have had occasion to check into the record of Drew Pearson to see what kind of reputation he has for telling the truth. I find that United States Senators, Members of Congress, Cabinet members, generals, and even the secretary to the President have in no uncertain terms labeled him as a downright liar and garbage-can collector of filthy, manufactured, synthetic lies.

But Drew Pearson has not spent all of his time blackmailing, intimidating, and lying about public officials and Congressmen. His vocations describe a thwarted and frustrated man with a warped, twisted, and diseased idea of mankind and life. Among his minor contributions to society of which he boasts—and just ask him if you want to hear more in detail—was the illegal representation by the aid of an accessory or bag man, namely, a Mr. John Henshaw, of the Irish sweepstakes, which gave him a vile start in his obsessed, putrid craze for money.

I want the Members of this House to know that Pearson, who poses as a great liberal, is at heart a money miser and one of the greediest men for cash I have ever met anywhere any time. If he cannot get it honestly, look out for the blackmail. And as for his reputation for truth and accuracy, listen to this:

Congressman Martin Sweeney, of Ohio, who sued Drew Pearson in practically every court from coast to coast, branded Pearson as an unmitigated liar and a falsifier of facts. He said:

> I intend to pursue the matter to the very end, because I believe all persons in public life are concerned with the extent to which the "free" press may go in attributing to public officials false acts or un-American motives.

He then brought against Pearson the longest, largest number of libel suits in American history, which I understand still to be in process of settlement.

Jesse H. Jones, a high-ranking Cabinet member and Secretary of Commerce, stated frankly that Drew Pearson was a liar.

Secretary of State Cordell Hull, in referring to Drew Pearson, said he is only one-third right one-tenth of the time.

Senator ROBERT REYNOLDS said of Drew Pearson and Robert Allen:

> The truth is not in them.

Senator MILLARD E. TYDINGS, of Maryland, said, "There was not an atom of truth in this libelous statement by Drew Pearson and Robert Allen," when in a broadcast Drew Pearson charged Senator TYDINGS had had the W. P. A. build a road and yacht basin on his private estate to keep W. P. A. workers busy. On another occasion, the Washington Post had to publish a two-column full apology and retraction of false charges Pearson made against Senator TYDINGS.

Here is what Representative HAMILTON FISH, of New York, in answer to an attack made on him by Drew Pearson in his column on October 6, 1942, said:

> Drew Pearson in my opinion is the most contemptible, dishonest, and dishonorable smear propagandist in America, and by inference the most colossal liar in the Nation.

Senator GERALD P. NYE stated in answer to an attack on him in the Merry-Go-Round that it was a deceitful falsehood published by Drew Pearson.

Senator GUY GILLETTE, of Iowa, said a statement by Drew Pearson is absolutely without foundation.

Senator ROBERT REYNOLDS said on another occasion:

> Unfortunately the only way a public official can avoid vilification by these two men, namely, Robert Allen and Drew Pearson, is to bow to their will and the will of those they serve.

Senator ELLISON D. SMITH, of South Carolina, stated that an article in connection with him by Drew Pearson falsely insinuated things and was without foundation and is maliciously false.

Senator BURTON K. WHEELER, of Montana, stated Pearson had not only lied about him but had lied about Secretary of State Cordell Hull, Secretary of Commerce Jesse Jones, Senator MILLARD E. TYDINGS, of Maryland, stating that Drew Pearson was a little black animal with a white stripe down his back—must be a skunk. WHEELER declared that this very crowd in Washington, meaning Drew Pearson and his crowd, had been taught to smear every Senator and Member of the House who does not agree 100 percent with the New Deal bureaucrats.

Colonel Harrington, former head of the W. P. A., proved a statement of Drew Pearson's to be an outrageous, unjustifiable and bold-faced lie. In a column by George D. Riley and Page Huidekoper in the Washington Times-Herald on January 10, 1943, it was stated that there was nothing true about Pearson's claim of President Roosevelt prevailing upon Ambassador Joe Kennedy to refrain from publishing a book.

Here is what Cordell Hull said about one of Drew's articles appearing in the Merry-Go-Round April 14, 1939:

> Those parts of it of which I have knowledge are so thoroughly inaccurate and misleading that they could not, in my judgment, be sustantiated by anyone.

Senator NYE said:

> Pearson is a master of the half truth. When a direct lie does not suit his purpose because it might be too dangerous, he can lie by inference by merely leaving out qualifying remarks and explanation.

The gentleman from Alabama, Congressman FRANK BOYKIN, said:

> Drew Pearson is the damnedest liar that ever lived.

The powerful Rules Committee of Congress branded as "a false, malicious lie" statements made by Drew Pearson about the gentleman from Mississippi, Congressman COLMER.

White House Secretary, Stephen T. Early, described as a complete lie a story printed in the Washington Merry-Go-Round column written by Drew Pearson and Robert Allen on the recent slaying of an agent of the F. B. I. by two Army deserters in Virginia. "There is no truth in any detail of this story," said Secretary Early.

The gentleman from Oregon, Congressman JAMES W. MOTT, in a statement to the House Naval Affairs Committee, said:

Drew Pearson and Robert Allen are a pair of journalistic polecats.

The gentleman from Minnesota, Representative MELVIN P. MAAS, speaking of Pearson and Allen, declared:

Whoever gave out the scurrilous story is guilty of the grossest kind of contempt.

Here is what Drew Pearson said in a letter about General MacArthur which he himself manufactured:

DEAR GENERAL: You have done a great job and I am going to see that you are rewarded. When Congress convenes I am going to write my Congressman and have him take steps to give you another medal. This medal will have a ribbon on it down the middle of which will be a broad streak of yellow with a piece of baloney on the end.

Think of this, Members of the House, America's No. 1 hero, one of the greatest generals that ever lived, being subjected to this filth and abuse by Drew Pearson.

Drew Pearson, in an issue of Liberty magazine, said:

As the fierce battle around Manila neared a climax, an old friend of Douglas MacArthur's remarked, "Douglas may have to swim for it and he can still do it. But he will have to leave his medals behind, total estimated weight 13 pounds, 16 ounces."

The Washington Times-Herald, the largest newspaper in Washington, which ran Drew Pearson's Washington Merry-Go-Round for a long time, finally threw it out and stated:

We dropped the Washington Merry-Go-Round out of the Times-Herald because of the poisonous attempts Pearson and Allen have made, and are still making, to smear the reputation of a great soldier, and in our opinion one of the greatest Americans of all time, Gen. Douglas MacArthur.

Here is another crack that Drew Pearson made about General MacArthur, and I quote:

Wire pulling is one of the general's greatest arts. From his first days in West Point he learned how to get on in the Army.

Here is another quotation by Pearson:

But during the World War—

Meaning World War No. 1—

MacArthur won the confidence of Secretary Newton D. Baker, suddenly was promoted from major to brigadier general, was the only brigadier general below the grade of colonel to keep his temporary war rank afterward.

Here is another bit of slime from the pen of Pearson:

MacArthur got in wrong at the White House from the way he slid out of responsibility for the air-mail fiasco. Also the grand jury investigating Army purchases smeared him for rowing with Woodring.

MacArthur was forced to sue Drew Pearson for libel, and if the Members of this House knew the way Pearson responded to that libel suit to get it dropped not one decent, self-respecting Member of Congress would ever speak to Pearson again.

And now, Members of the House, just let us see the contrast between the war record of General MacArthur and Drew Pearson. General MacArthur served in World War No. 1. General MacArthur is serving again in World War No. 2, having displayed such indescribable courage and ability that today he is unanimously acclaimed as America's No. 1 hero, who is still fighting, still giving his all for his country. Drew Pearson was not in World War No. 1. Drew Pearson, who was young, able-bodied, and single, waited until a few weeks before the end of World War No. 1 to join what—not the Army, but the "Saturday Afternoon Tea Club," which is a slang expression for Student Army Training Corps, one of those bomb proofs from the draft in World War No. 1, almost as popular as Government jobs are today. That was in World War No. 1. Drew Pearson therefore did not fight in World War No. 1, nor is he a member of the armed forces now, nor is he fighting in World War No. 2, though he is one of those who howled loudest for us to get in. But rather his contribution to the war effort is based on a low-down, degrading, cowardly, yellow, stinking pen to defame, to vilify, to humiliate, and to attempt to destroy America's No. 1 hero, Gen. Douglas MacArthur. And, incidentally, the man he is accusing in this boiler transaction, E. A. Jumonville, is too old to be in the armed service, yet he has one son in the armed forces and another son leaving in 1 week for the Army Air Corps. Drew Pearson has no sons in any service.

Now, my friends, I regret that I have had to take up this time in the House of Representatives, but as you know, I thought that perhaps I was the only person that ever had trouble with Drew Pearson until I checked his record. My only comment, therefore, is this: Seldom do I have the unpleasant task of skinning a skunk. I hope I have done the job well.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in the remarks I made this afternoon in Committee of the Whole I may include certain excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include therein an address by Hon. Jesse Jones.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ROBERTSON, for 2 days, on account of official business.

To Mr. MCCORD, for Friday, Saturday, and Monday, on account of official business.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, May 21, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON THE CIVIL SERVICE

The Committee on the Civil Service will hold a public hearing on investigation of civil-service policies and practices of civilian employment in governmental departments at 10 a. m., Friday, May 21, 1943, room 246, House Office Building.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS

There will be a meeting of the committee at 10 a. m., on Friday, May 21, 1943, for consideration of housing bills, in room 356, House Office Building.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

There will be a meeting of the subcommittee on investigation of restrictions on brand names and newsprint of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, at 10 a. m., Monday, May 24, 1943.

Business to be considered: Public hearings pursuant to House Resolution 98 by Congressman HALLECK.

COMMITTEE ON FLOOD CONTROL

The Flood Control Committee will conduct hearings on flood-control reports submitted by the Chief of Engineers since the passage of the Flood Control Act of August 18, 1941, and on amendments to existing law. Flood-control projects for post-war construction will be among the most satisfactory public works, and the committee plans an adequate backlog of sound flood-control projects available for construction following the war.

1. Thursday, May 27: Maj. Gen. Eugene Reybold, Chief of Engineers, will open the hearings with any statements and recommendations he desires to submit covering national flood control and the projects that should be included in the bill to be reported, especially as they are related to national defense and as they will be important following the existing war to provide sound flood-control projects and desirable public works. He will be followed by Gen. Thomas M. Robins, Assistant Chief of Engineers, who has previously advised the Flood Control Committee during hearings and who will also appear before the committee and submit his views and discuss generally the projects that have been favorably reported since the hearings were conducted on H. R. 4911, Seventy-seventh Congress, first session, reported on June 19, 1941, which became the Flood Control Act of August 18, 1941. Col. George R. Goethals, Chief of the Flood Control Branch, Office of Chief of Engineers, will attend the hearings and will furnish to the members of the committee in detail any and all available information respecting the said projects on which favorable reports have been submitted by the Chief of Engineers.

The district engineers and the division engineers have furnished to the Chief of Engineers data and information respecting major floods since August 18, 1941, and particularly with respect to recent major floods in the various drainage basins of the country, which will be submitted to the committee.

2. Friday, May 28: General Reybold, General Robins, Colonel Goethals, other representatives of the Office of Chief of Engineers, and proponents on projects for the New England region including the Connecticut and Merrimac Rivers and the middle Atlantic region including New York, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey.

3. Tuesday, June 1: General Reybold, General Robins, Colonel Goethals, other representatives of the Office of Chief of Engineers, and proponents, on projects in the upper and lower Ohio River and tributaries, and on projects of the South Atlantic region, including rivers flowing into the Atlantic Ocean and Gulf of Mexico east of the Mississippi River.

4. Wednesday, June 2: General Reybold, General Robins, Colonel Goethals, other representatives of the Office of Chief of Engineers, and proponents, on projects along the Missouri River and tributaries and the upper Mississippi River and the Great Lakes region.

5. Thursday, June 3: General Reybold, General Robins, Colonel Goethals, other representatives of the Office of Chief of Engineers, and proponents, on projects in the lower Mississippi River and tributaries, including the Arkansas and White Rivers, and on rivers flowing into the Gulf, west of the Mississippi River, and in the Western Rocky Mountain region, including Texas and Colorado, and in the Pacific Northwest region, including the Willamette River and the Columbia River and tributaries.

6. Friday, June 4: General Reybold, General Robins, Colonel Goethals, other representatives of the Office of Chief of Engineers, and proponents, on projects in the Los Angeles area and in the State of California, including the Sacramento, San Joaquin, and Kern River valleys, and on projects in other regions and in other parts of the United States.

7. Tuesday, June 8: Representatives of the Department of Agriculture and the Bureau of Reclamation, and other governmental agencies.

8. Wednesday, June 9: Senators and Representatives of Congress.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

429. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the posthumous appointment to commissioned or noncommissioned grade of certain enlisted men and the posthumous promotion of certain commissioned officers, and enlisted men," approved July 28, 1942; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

430. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting budgets for the fiscal year 1944 for the military and departmental activities of the War Department, containing estimates of appropriations amounting to $59,425,586,500, and for the Office of Strategic Services in the amount of $38,476,000, and proposed provisions affecting said estimates (H. Doc. No. 205); to the Committee on Appropriations.

431. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to provide for the appointment of an additional Assistant Secretary of the Interior; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. CANNON of Missouri:

H. R. 2753. A bill making supplemental appropriations to carry out the provisions of an act to promote the defense of the United States, approved March 11, 1941, as amended, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. DIRKSEN:

H. R. 2754. A bill to establish the Office of Power Administration for the coordinated administration of all Federal functions pertaining to the generation, distribution and sale of electricity and the regulation of electric utilities; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. GWYNNE:

H. R. 2760. A bill to amend an act approved August 26, 1842, relating to appropriation acts; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MEMORIALS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, memorials were presented and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of California, memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States to enact House bill 2426 and Senate bill 971; to the Committee on Roads.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States to pass legislation authorizing the people of the Territory of Hawaii to form a constitution and state government and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; to the Committee on the Territories.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts, memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States to amend the Federal Motor Carrier Act, 1935, so-called, now part II of the Interstate Commerce Act; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. GRANT of Alabama:

H. R. 2755. A bill for the relief of Howard H. Thames; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KILDAY:

H. R. 2756. A bill for the relief of Dr. V. H. Williams; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LANE:

By Mr. O'NEAL:

H. R. 2759. A bill for the relief of Mrs. Alice E. Shinnick; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

828. By Mr. GRAHAM: Petition of 20 citizens of Lawrence County, Pa., urging the passage of House bill 2082, introduced by Hon. JOSEPH R. BRYSON, of South Carolina, to reduce absenteeism, conserve manpower, and speed production of materials necessary for the winning of the war, by prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors in the United States for the duration of the war and until the termination of mobilization; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

829. Also, petition of sundry citizens of New Wilmington, Lawrence County, Pa., urging the passage of House bill 2082, introduced by Hon. JOSEPH R. BRYSON, of South Carolina, to reduce absenteeism, conserve manpower, and speed production of materials necessary for the winning of the war, by prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors in the United States for the duration of the war and until the termination of mobilization; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

830. By Mr. FITZPATRICK: Petition of the Dressmakers Union, Local No. 22, International Ladies Garment Workers Union, urging the defeat of the Connally bill (S. 796); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

831. By Mr. REED of Illinois: Petition of Frances G. Teichmann, of Aurora, and 19 citizens of Aurora and Evanston, Ill., urging the passage of House bill 2082, introduced by Hon. JOSEPH R. BRYSON, of South Carolina, to reduce absenteeism, conserve manpower, and speed production of materials necessary for the winning of the war by prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors in the United States for the duration of the war and until the termination of mobilization; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

832. Also, petition of Mrs. Charles Schulhafer, of Aurora, and 19 citizens of Kane County, Ill., urging the passage of House bill 2082, introduced by Hon. JOSEPH R. BRYSON, of South Carolina, to reduce absenteeism, conserve manpower, and speed production of materials necessary for the winning of the war by prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors in the United States for the duration of the war and until the termination of mobilization; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

855. By Mr. BRYSON: Petition favoring passage of House bill 2082; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

856. By Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts: Petition of the General Court of Massachusetts, favoring the amendment of the Federal Motor Carriers Act, 1935, so-called, now part II of the Interstate Commerce Act; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

857. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the Perth Amboy Smelter and Refinery Workers Union, Perth Amboy, N. J., petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to labor legislation; to the Committee on Rules.

858. Also, petition of the Building and Construction Trades Council, Oakland, Calif., petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to House Joint Resolution 96; to the Committee on Appropriations.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, MAY 21, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord of life and power, we would not plead for ourselves alone, but for all who serve Thy cause by word and deed. In fashioning our conception of Thee, we pray that it may be resplendent of justice and august in truth; how much more bravely we would march forward, catching the light that is absorbing the shadow of doubt. In seeking the solution of our problems, give us to understand that calmness is might and candor is the nobility of labor.

With faith in Thy fatherhood as a blessed inheritance, we would have sacred access to Thee as a comfort in all trial and as guide in all wisdom, as an illumination in all darkness and as stability when we need rest. When men and nations live by envy and rivalry, by vanity and physical appetite, O Lord, have mercy on their pauperized souls. We praise Thee for the uncalendared and nameless millions of our country whose industry, sacrifice, and patriotism give abiding assurance to the glory of our common democracy. Spare our land from the selfish rich who disregard the poor and from the discontented poor who envy the rich. Deliver us from these vain tempers which disenchant many a worker and make labor loveless and joyless. Keep our souls strong and clear and may we recognize vividly the claims of high character. In our Master's name, Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills of the House of the following titles:

C., on August 11-12, 1940," approved April 23, 1941;

S. J. Res. 11. Joint resolution providing for an investigation and survey of certain crustacean food resources of the United States, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 16. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to construct and the President of the United States to present to the people of St. Lawrence, Newfoundland, on behalf of the people of the United States a hospital, dispensary, or other memorial, for heroic services to men of the United States Navy.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 1563. An act authorizing the acquisition and conversion or construction of certain auxiliary vessels for the United States Navy, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. WALSH, Mr. TYDINGS, and Mr. DAVIS to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. BYRD a conferee on the part of the Senate to the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2570) entitled 'An act to provide for the current payment of the individual income tax, and for other purposes," to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation therefrom of Mr. CONNALLY.

WAR DEPARTMENT CIVIL FUNCTIONS APPROPRIATION BILL, 1944—PERMISSION TO FILE CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have until midnight tonight to file a conference report on the bill (H. R. 2346) making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

HON. J. BUELL SNYDER

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I am certain I express the sentiment of the House in extending warmest felicitations to our distinguished colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER], who has just been awarded the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws by Waynesburg College.

Waynesburg College is one of the oldest educational institutions west of the Alleghenies. Sixteen of its graduates have become Governors of States of the Union and it numbers among its alumni some of the most eminent physicians, jurists, educators, and ministers of the day.

We congratulate both Dr. SNYDER and the college on this well-deserved recognition of the great service rendered by the chairman of the committee in charge of military appropriations to his district, his State, and especially to the Nation at large.

LEESVILLE, LA.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may include in my remarks a statement from the mayor of Leesville, La., a statement from the head of the State health department, and several other statements, the whole constituting a little less than four pages. I have obtained an estimate from the Government Printing Office that it will cost $171. Notwithstanding the rule, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to extend my own remarks and place these statements in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATTON. Mr. Speaker, I have a letter from the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MARTIN DIES], who is ill down in Jasper. He requests that I request in his behalf unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD two very delightful little themes written by some high-school boys in his district.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in two particulars: First, that I may include in one extension two articles by the distinguished columnist, Mark Sullivan; and, second, that I be permitted to revise and extend my own remarks and include therein certain quotations from Supreme Court decisions and from other lawbooks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE BEVERIDGE PLAN OF SECURITY AGAINST WANT

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, last night the weekly meeting of the Southern Policy Committee was addressed by Sir William Beveridge on what is commonly known as the Beveridge plan of security against want.

In a simple, clear, and convincing way Sir William explained the main purposes of the plan. His address made a deep impression upon all who were so fortunate as to hear him.

All civilized nations, I am persuaded, sooner or later, are going to adopt some plan to provide security against want. I would like to see America take the lead. As the Beveridge plan fits into a free-enterprise system of government, such as ours, and, in my opinion, the Congress will be considering before long some plan of security against want, I have introduced a resolution authorizing the Speaker to extend to Sir William Beveridge an invitation to address the House. I am sure that his address will furnish a great deal of food for sober thought.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include a letter dealing with living standards in Nazi Europe.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SUNDSTROM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in order to pay tribute to one of the war heroes in my district.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SUNDSTROM]?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I asked and was given leave to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, but I neglected to say how much these remarks exceeded the regular allowance. I understand I must do that, and I make the statement that the total of this extension will be $135, and I ask that they be included, notwithstanding the cost.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEIDINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a resolution adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Tyler, Tex.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HEIDINGER]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this afternoon, at the conclusion of other special orders, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRANT of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRANT]?

There was no objection.

[Mr. GRANT of Indiana addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT'S SHARE IN LOCAL COMMUNITIES

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, this week I listened to Mr. Fahey, Director of the H. O. L. C. testify before a committee of this House that they had foreclosed about 195,000 homes in the United States under H. O. L. C. mortgages. A vast majority of them have been resold. While those properties belong to the Government it is not taxable. In addition to that the United States is acquiring many parcels of real estate in various sections of this country on which it is erecting huge buildings in connection with our war effort. All of that real estate is removed from the tax rolls. In addition to that, these factories and other Federal war projects produce problems of sewer, school, sidewalk, light, water, and other municipal services which result in an additional burden on those municipalities and towns where they are located.

It would seem to me that the Federal Government should adopt a uniform policy of allowing those communities a service charge which will equal the tax that is lost by reason of such real estate being removed from the tax rolls. Some of the problems created through our war program have been met by Federal appropriations but not all of them. Very recently the Michigan Real Estate Association after some investigation and study have by resolution emphasized the urgent need of the Federal Government to share with other real-estate owners in paying the costs of necessary services rendered.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an article entitled "Nothing Else Matters" by Dr. J. Raymond Schmidt.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BRYSON]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes today at the conclusion of other special orders, and I also ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]?

There was no objection.

THE UNITED NATIONS VICTORY IN AFRICA

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, the completeness of the victory in Africa is the best news that we have received at any one time since our country went to war. What the next move for Allied arms will be, of course, no one knows or ought to know except the top military leaders. From the moment, however, that American soldiers set foot on European soil they will be regarded as an Army of liberation and there will be tremendous potential strength available among the people of the nations which have been occupied by the Nazis which can be drawn upon if our own action is right. It is of the greatest importance, therefore, that we recognize as representatives of the people in liberated nations only those who have loyally stood by the people, who have had no traffic or deals with the conqueror, and who therefore have proved themselves worthy of their own people's trust. Ultimately, of course, there must be established as soon as possible in these nations governments which will truly represent the freely expressed will of the people themselves.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GILLIE]?

There was no objection.

[Mr. GILLIE addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include the letter to which I referred in my remarks just now.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GILLIE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARENDS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I have two unanimous consent requests, one that our colleague, the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. PLUMLEY] may have permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article, and the other that I may be given permission to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an address by Mr. Frank W. Herring, Assistant Director, National Resources Planning Board, before the annual meeting of the American Road Builders' Association at Chicago, Ill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. GROSS addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday, May 26, at the conclusion of the legislative business and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, May 27, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 40 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Chicago Tribune.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an address recently made by our distinguished former colleague, Hon. William L. Nelson, of Missouri.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAVENS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INDIAN PROPERTY

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call to the attention of the Congress a condition that is usurping the tax structure of Oklahoma.

We have many restricted Indians. Some of them have become very wealthy from the discovery of oil on their allotments and the Interior Department has been reinvesting the proceeds in the purchase of lands. The Supreme Court has held that such property is not subject to State ad valorum tax. This law is impairing very materially the ability of local governments to operate. I wanted to bring the matter to your attention at this time. I plan to offer a remedy to reimburse the State for these losses in taxes when you will have an opportunity to pass upon the question later.

With the removing of heretofore not exempt tax property from the tax rolls will so impair local government to where many small subdivisions cannot function.

The removing from the tax rolls of real property bought for them through the Interior Department bears the same relation to a community as if the United States Government should buy the land for a military project.

With already failing revenues for the various States, if relief is not given, the Federal Government should assume the loss to the States to where the States can carry on local and State governments with the enforcement of laws and maintaining their institutions.

The loss from the building of a military project might be overcome somewhat, but not so with the change in title from a taxpayer to a nontaxpayer.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PAGÁN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter from the Secretary of the Interior on the Puerto Rican independence bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DEVASTATING FLOODS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. RANKIN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article and editorial on two subjects.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DEFENSE AID (LEND-LEASE) SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATION BILL, 1943

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2753) making supplemental appropriations to carry out the provisions of an act to promote the defense of the United States, approved March 11, 1941, as amended, and for other purposes; and pending that, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from New York if we can agree on, say, 3 hours for general debate.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. First, Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve all points of order on the bill, if that has not already been done.

In reply to the gentleman from Missouri, I may say that I understood from the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] that the tentative agreement was for 4 hours of general debate, or a maximum of 4 hours.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. We had a tentative conversation on the subject and I thought possibly we would be able, after consultation on both sides, to arrange for 3 hours of debate, in view of the fact that we hope to finish the bill today. However, I leave that to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I think if we could agree on a maximum of 4 hours, perhaps we might not use all the time.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on the bill proceed, not to exceed 4 hours, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from New York and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. McCORMACK. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker—and, of course, I shall not object—is it the intention to finish the bill today?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. We expect to finish it today, I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. The reason I make the inquiry is that if the bill is finished today I shall ask unanimous consent later in the day to adjourn over until Monday. Otherwise, I understand it is the desire of the members of the subcommittee that the consideration of the bill continue tomorrow.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Following the wishes of the leader, Mr. Speaker, we will make every effort to complete the consideration of the bill before adjournment today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 2753, with Mr. MILLS in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be recognized for such time as I may consume.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, this is a proposition to shorten the war and to reduce the over-all cost of the war, both in money and men. The title of this bill might very appropriately be "a bill to bring the war to an early and successful conclusion." It provides for food, industrial commodities, the charter hire, repair, and procurement of boats, and many other commodities and articles essential to the war program, with the exception of finished munitions.

Food is the most essential munition of war. We were told by General Marshall in the early days of the war that as between an army without food and an army without gunpowder he preferred the army without gunpowder; that the army without gunpowder might win, but the army without food could not win. On that distinguished evidence we are supplying here, through the appropriation provided by this bill, the most essential and the most indispensable munition of war. It is more important than guns, tanks, planes, and ships, because without it our armed forces cannot operate guns, tanks, planes, or ships. Already, Mr. Chairman, with funds appropriated for this purpose, we have cast a heavy weight into the scales of war in favor of the Allies. It is hardly to have been expected that Russia could have held, at least not so effectively, without the assistance which we have given and are giving through this efficient agency. Certainly the Allied Nations could not have cleared the continent of Africa, so promptly and so completely and at such comparatively small cost, without the cooperation of funds provided for this purpose. The valiant Chinese Army, fighting with its back to the wall, against incredible odds, could not have maintained so successfully and so admirably its morale and its position without the supplies and munitions furnished through lend-lease operations.

It is hardly necessary at this late date to go into the details of lend-lease activities. Its policies, its methods, and routine are familiar. Twice we have exhaustively debated the establishment of the policy in the consideration of bills reported by the legislative committee.

Three times before, because this is the fourth lend-lease appropriation bill, we have fully discussed, considered, and approved money for this purpose. And this bill differs from other appropriation bills in which we have supplied lend-lease funds in only one respect. Whereas we formerly included finished munitions, now that we have authorized the transfer of munitions by the Navy and War Departments from funds appropriated to them for that purpose, there is no longer need to include money for munitions in this bill. Otherwise the bill is in every respect, and especially in policy and purpose, identical legislatively with the lend-lease bills heretofore enacted. There is this possible further exception, that we are providing money in larger sums and spending it more rapidly and effectively. As the days go by and the theater of war widens and the number of men in the field increases, the amount of our lend-lease expenditures is mounting. The allocation and administration of lend-lease is now largely standardized. In order to estimate the amounts of money disbursed, the purposes for which expended, and the countries to which allocated, the Lend-Lease Administration invites the Allied Nations to submit estimates of character and amounts needed. When all estimates are received, the lend-lease authorities in consultation with other departments and officials of the Government who are in a position to give counsel and advice screen them with a view to eliminating in the light of all the relevant facts—priorities, supply, and the difficulties of assembly and transportation.

The approved estimates then go to the Bureau of the Budget, where all requisitions are again scrutinized. The revised estimates then come to the Congress, the court of last resort. Even here they are subject to revision and reduction, a prerogative exercised by the Committee on Appropriations in this instance, in the reduction of the final estimates by the comparatively small amount of $150,000,000.

So the bill comes to the floor today, carrying, as the committee believes, the irreducible minimum of $6,273,629,000. This is not, in our opinion, the full measure of the allied requirements. It is the considered conviction of the committee that if supplies were available and could be delivered, many times this amount would be money well invested. As it is, we heartily approve the amount reported and recommend the appropriation as provided by the bill. We fix the total amount needed for the 14-month period, commencing May 1, 1943, and ending June 30, 1944, at $8,331,125,000, but we still have on hand in the custody and under the jurisdiction of the Lend-Lease Administration, an unexpended balance of $2,057,496,000. So striking the funds on hand from the amount required, we recommend today the appropriation of $6,273,629,000.

One thing that impressed the committee particularly, one thing which, judging from newspaper and editorial and radio comments, has impressed the Nation, is the efficiency, the economy and the effectiveness with which the lend-lease funds have been administered. It is impossible to place too high a rating upon the services rendered by Mr. Stettinius in this difficult position, or to express too strongly the confidence of the committee and the American people in him and in his administration. This confidence is reflected in the fact that this is a unanimous report of the subcommittee, the unanimous report of the Committee on Appropriations, and I trust the bill will meet with the unanimous approval of the Congress.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Will the gentleman also recall the fact that under the law the lend-lease issues a quarterly report to the Congress and that that fully sets forth their operations, and in addition to that we have very full hearings lasting for a number of days, and we went into the whole matter in great detail. Much of it had to be off the record of course, on account of its very high military significance, but I believe that it is the unanimous opinion of the committee that they made a very fine showing, and gave a very fine account of their stewardship in the administration of this act.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman from Virginia calls attention to a striking feature of the hearings and the consideration and report by the subcommittee and committee of the entire record of the Lend-Lease Administration under the very capable management of Mr. Stettinius.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. Everything has been so favorable in this matter that this appropriation is almost sacrosanct, but, after all, we do hear rumblings of discontent. I want to ask the gentleman if in the hearings there has been anything brought out about the activity of the Board of Economic Warfare in asserting authority over or influencing that fund, for purposes that the gentleman himself might criticize? If I might further illustrate, we are making several nations of the United Nations rather prosperous under this lend-lease. Sometimes we fear that their manpower is not fighting the war as a partner with us. We do not ask them to fight our war for us, but we do ask them to use their manpower in connection with us, as well to furnish strategic materials which this fund provides. I repeat, you must have noticed that there has been some fear or criticism of the activity of the B. E. W. in the use of these funds.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I am very glad to have the gentleman call attention to that phase of the matter, as it affords opportunity to say that the committee went thoroughly into the use of these funds. After most exhaustive and comprehensive investigation we determined that there was no foundation whatever for such charges. Of course it must be recognized that such rumors are inevitable and indispensable in any nation of 130,000,000 people, of many and diverse political convictions and opinions.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] speaks of the Board of Economic Warfare. They do not have any control whatsoever over lend-lease operations or their funds. They have no connection with it whatsoever.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentlewoman of Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It was brought out in our hearings before the Committee on Foreign Affairs that the Board of Economic Warfare acted in an advisory capacity in the matter of agreements under lend-lease, which the State Department handles. So I should think they do have quite a good deal to do with the funds.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The decisions on lend-lease, on what goods, commodities, and implements of war are to be ordered on lend-lease account for the nations who apply for them are made by the Lend-Lease Administration, under the advice and in consultation with other agencies including the Army and Navy. Of course, in reaching those conclusions they obviously consult with the Board of Economic Warfare and the War Production Board, and various other agencies, as to the ability to get certain materials and the quantities; but I wanted to point out, because of the observation of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] that the decisions, operations, and responsibilities for these lend-lease funds are on the Lend-Lease Administration, and I am sure there has been nothing there that would reflect on them. We yet have to have before us the Board of Economic Warfare, and certain inquiries and explorations we expect to make as we go along in connection with that agency.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The gentleman will get all that information then.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Will the gentleman permit me to read from an Executive order on the connection between the Board of Economic Warfare and Lend-Lease, because I think it is important to have it in? Executive Order 9128, dated April 13, 1942, provided—

(1) In addition to the responsibilities and duties heretofore conferred, the Board of Economic Warfare is authorized and directed to * * * (c) advise the State Department with respect to the terms and conditions to be included in the master agreement with each nation receiving lease-lend aid.

(d) Provide and arrange for the receipt by the United States of reciprocal aids and benefits, other than arms, munitions, or weapons of war, from the government of any country whose defense shall have been determined by the President of the United States as vital to the defense of the United States.

So B. E. W., by Executice order, does have rather important lend-lease functions.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. It has important functions, of course, and the War Production Board has important functions, because before lend-lease can process or promise delivery of any certain critical materials they have to go to the War Production Board to see whether or not those things are available and can be manufactured, and all of that. There are many agencies. But what I wanted to point out was that the Lend-Lease Administration, under Mr. Stettinius, is responsible for this appropriation, and we should not confuse that with anything that anyone may have in his mind for the Board of Economic Warfare, because we have yet to have offered their appropriation.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Great tribute has been paid and should be paid to Mr. Stettinius. A great deal of the favorable results under lease that have been accomplished have come from his fine work. Mr. Mack, Administrator of the Procurement Division, has done a fine piece of work. I notice in the hearings the interrogation of Mr. Mack and his replies. I would like also to ask if the committee considered the taking over of certain supplies that Procurement might have in storage under lease for use in this country. I notice Mr. Mack said they have quite large supplies of some materials that have not already been used. Did the gentleman take that up, because, for instance, we need steel and other supplies for use in the United States?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I am glad to have the lady from Massachusetts make this very well deserved commendation of Mr. Mack. I heartily agree with her in her approval of the excellent service he has rendered.

The committee took into consideration every criticism which might be suggested in connection with the procurement of supplies, every possibility of the exercise of undue influence or possibility of unauthorized expenditure of funds, some derelection of duty, and found no justification of the slightest criticism. The fact that both the subcommittee and the Committee on Appropriations are made up of some of the most alert and vigilant Members of the House, on both sides of the aisle, who worked on these estimates almost day and night, and then directed a unanimous report, is sufficient answer to all who entertain any misgivings whatever.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. The gentleman has made some remarks about China which sounded very good, but in reading the report of the proceedings it would appear that China is going to get only a very small part of the total funds to be appropriated for the furtherance of lend-lease; and it appears also that there was a question in the minds of the chairman as well as members of the committee about the possibility of more aid being sent to China. We all know, of course, that China is one of our most important allies. I am wondering if the chairman could not give us a little more information as to what we intend to do to help her?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I think that if we could take a plebiscite of the convictions of the American people it would show that while we are in heartiest accord, and entertain the warmest sympathy for all our allies, the average American citizen has in his heart a deeper admiration for the magnificent struggle under adverse conditions by the Chinese people than any other beleaguered nation. Of course there is no real distinction or difference in our regard for all our allies. Certainly public sentiment in this country favors rendering every possible help to China, but there are two conditions which must be taken into consideration in connection with the sending of supplies to China. There is, of course, the relative need. Russia, for example, with her battle line extending more than two thousand miles and opposed by a German army of 198 divisions of the best troops the world ever saw and 28 additional divisions of Axis allies, necessarily has greater needs than allies with shorter lines and less dependent.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. In just one moment if the gentleman will permit. Second, we cannot ignore the facilities for delivery. Since the Burma Road closed access to China has been by plane over the Himalayas rising to an all but prohibitive height for laden airplanes. But every effort is being made, and perhaps a greater and more sustained effort, to deliver to China such supplies as she requires and delivery facilities permit than to any other of our allies if there is any distinction at all.

I yield now to the gentleman from Texas, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary and my special political mentor.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I thank the gentleman. Do we understand—and I do understand—from the gentleman's statement in a sentence this: That the responsible agencies having to do with lend-lease do of course avail themselves of all the information and all the advice that they can get from other agencies of the Government having any conduct that is related to the tasks which they have to perform and, after all, the lend-lease organization, headed by Mr. Stettinius, has to arrive at the determination with reference to the distribution of these various things. On the contrary, as I understand the gentleman's statement, with reference to the quantity that goes to China or anywhere else the quantity must be determined by the General Staff, because Mr. Stettinius is not fighting this war; the General Staff is responsible for that. We understand that to be the gentleman's statement as to the situation.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Certainly. It is a matter of coordination and cooperation on the part of all branches of the service, both civil and military, each in its own particular field.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I wish to supplement and commend what the gentleman has just said about the efficient administration of lend-lease funds. The hearings lasted 2 weeks, or possibly longer, when we considered the resolution to extend the life of lend-lease. Mr. Stettinius, the Administrator, was present during the entire proceedings and testified on numerous occasions. He impressed the entire membership of our committee as being one of the ablest and best administrators in the entire Government, and I am sure he made that same impression upon the committee presided over by the distinguished gentleman from Missouri, because his record has been very outstanding.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman is in a particularly advantageous position to pass judgment following the long investigation which he and his committee made during consideration of the legislative bill.

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman from Missouri knows as much about the farm machinery shortage in this country as any Member could possibly know. Much of the money appropriated in this bill is for food and some of the money in the bill is for agricultural equipment for our allies. I note from the report that only 3 percent of our farm machinery production will go to our allies.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. That is true.

Mr. MAHON. I also note from reading the hearings and the report that our allies are doing pretty good in increasing food production. I should like to have the gentleman's comment on the advisability of our taking from our own supply of agricultural equipment this 3 percent and giving it to our associates in this war.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman renders a service in calling attention to the provision of agricultural machinery. One of the great problems of the war is the matter of transportation. If we could, from the doors of our factories and from the portals of our granaries, deliver available material to the front lines where it is needed, without interference, the war would be over in a short time. But we are separated by thousands of miles of inaccessible territory and boundless wastes of ocean, teeming with submarines and with every obstacle which the enemy can put in our path. Delivery and transportation is the bottleneck.

Africa has been termed the bread basket of Europe. North Africa can produce supplies of food to feed Allied armies and civilians. That is the source from which a large part of Europe's food has come for many centuries. Even in England, where a comparatively small proportion of agricultural lands have been devoted to the production of food, cultivation by modern machinery can produce large quantities of food. If we can send them the machinery to produce it there instead of growing it here and shipping it across we have solved one of the pressing problems of the war. With American machinery they are already producing food which otherwise would monopolize invaluable shipping space and the program for which we are providing machinery in this bill contemplates increasing and expanding production to care for both our allies and our own armies. It stands to reason, and no one can raise an issue on the question, that the economical thing, the sensible thing, the logical thing to do, is to help these people produce their own food at the point of consumption. That is what we are endeavoring to do in this bill. As the gentleman from Texas very well says, we are delivering only 3 percent of our entire national production, an infinitesimal amount in its effect on production in our own country but of far-reaching importance in the European economy.

The same is true of industrial equipment which we are providing.

One of the imperative needs in Russia is oil. The German Army swept across the Donets Basin and took those great oil fields, destroying all oil-producing and refining facilities. When they retreated they left nothing but wreckage. Russia must have machinery with which to recondition her wells and plants, with which to provide her own oil, to supply gasoline and lubricants, not only for her own vast fleet of airplanes and motorized war equipment but for American planes and equipment. Russia has also suffered as no other nation has suffered in the destruction of electrical machinery. The damage recently wrought upon German power dams in the Ruhr is nothing as compared with the complete obliteration of similar facilities in Russia. The Russian industrial organization built in the last 10 or 15 years was motorized entirely by electrical energy. She must have electricity to operate her plants. The hydraulic electric generators have been destroyed. We are trying to supplement that deficiency in this bill.

Again, one of the great needs of the war is coal. There is not sufficient coal in England, in North Africa, in any allied country in Europe. We are here providing the machinery to supplement England's production of coal in order to permit her to supply her own needs, for the needs of the Allies.

In China, which has been dependent upon us up to this time almost entirely for facilities for the manufacture of small arms and munitions, we must provide replacement machinery and spare parts. It has just been said that we were fattening our allies. That is certainly a sad misconception. If the gentleman had gone through, as we have gone through, this list of materials he will find nothing in there that is not for use during this war. We are providing some electrical equipment for Russia, including mobile units, which follow the Russian armies as they move forward and without which they cannot effectively continue the fight. But we have provided no facilities for the use of any of our allies which are not to be used until after the war.

Just one more point and I will yield to the gentleman. Lend-lease is not a one-way street. We are not giving everything and receiving nothing. I want to say frankly and am certain everybody will agree, that we do not expect repayment at the rate of 100 cents on the dollar, or anything like it. We are getting value received if we do not get back a penny. But our allies are not asking gratuities. They are paying when and where they can. It is impossible to repay in full, sometimes even in part. They do not have it. They never will have it. But if we can help them win the war, and preserve themselves, and a free world, it will be worth every cent we can spend.

But our allies are doing their part. In every country and on every front they are contributing in return everything they have to give, everything that the military situation permits. You will be surprised when you go into it at the amounts and at the source of some of it.

In Australia and in New Zealand, where the length of lines of supply is all but incalulable, practically all of the food of the American forces is supplied as reverse lend-lease. The same thing is true in England. Out of her scanty larders, her own people under rigid rationing, England is furnishing food to our men today; the English are providing for our men every morsel of food they can supply. Let me urge every Member of the House to take the hearings and turn to page 30. No Members of the House should permit the consideration of this bill to pass without reading carefully the statements beginning on page 30 of the hearings.

Mr. Chairman, you will find there some surprising things. They surprised the committee. You will find that even India, in the desperate straits in which she finds herself, even India is contributing to the American forces such as she has. It is reminiscent of a very ancient day on which the widow dropped her mite into the treasury and the Great Teacher reminded that it was not the amount contributed, but the spirit in which it was given.

All of these nations are giving to us in return such as they have, and we are receiving it likewise in a spirit of deep appreciation.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Reverting back to the farm machinery item, I notice this language:

> This about represents only approximately 3 percent of the estimated United States production for the appropriation period on the basis of presently anticipated production schedules, which may be increased.

Under that provision, that is, in view of that statement, do I understand that the Administrator of the lend-lease program may enlarge or increase the percentage of farm machinery to be shipped to the Allies?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. That refers to the increased production expected here in America. And in that connection, it was brought out in the hearings—

I do not know whether it was made a part of the record or not—but the fact is that our war facilities are producing more efficiently and voluminously than expected; even the most optimistic did not foresee the rate of production and the flood of war materials pouring out of American factories today. I believe I am not far wrong in saying we are producing today more airplanes in the United States than are being produced by all of the enemy Axis Powers. That is true of many other articles. We are producing so far ahead of schedule that it is now found we will be able to turn some of the production facilities to the manufacture of supplies needed by the civilian population. And among other civilian supplies on which production is to be resumed will be farm machinery.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the War Production Board, according to the best information offered to the committee, made an allotment of only six-tenths of 1 percent of steel for the production of new farm machinery this year, which, as the gentleman knows, is wholly insufficient, because that is one of the primary things today, so vital that it enters into an obstruction and interferes with the production of food for the year 1943.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. If the gentleman will permit, that is not a matter germane to the proposition before us; it does not touch lend-lease.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK. I wish to compliment the gentleman, chairman of the committee, on his splended opening statement on this appropriation. He has admirably stated the part which is ours in this global task by a division of labor in which America is the arsenal of democracy.

May I say that I have been one of the critics of the fact that only a small amount of our steel has been allotted to the production of farm machinery. I am glad to hear the chairman of the committee say that any lease-lend farm machinery we are sending abroad is not for the purpose of fattening or building up a foreign country but for the purpose of furthering the war effort by producing food abroad wherever it can be best produced.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The contribution of machinery is a measure of economy. We will save money in transportation, in cost of purchase, in processing, and will provide a larger and more timely supply than otherwise.

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. O'HARA. I agree with the gentleman that the most important items we have to furnish anybody are the transportation and the food items, the agricultural items. May I ask the gentleman who determines what shall be allocated to lease-lend, or does the Lease-Lend Administration determine what it shall request from our transportation, our shipping, and our food supplies? Does the Lease-Lend Administration determine what that amount shall be, or who does determine it?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. As has been explained, the Allies are invited to submit estimates of their most urgent needs. All the estimates are assembled and analyzed by the Lease-Lend Administration, which, in consultation with all who may be in a position to advise, agrees upon the amount, the volume, and the destination of the supplies. Judging the future by the past, I do not believe we could submit it to a more competent authority than the Lease-Lend Administration.

Mr. O'HARA. Who represents the needs of the Army and Navy as to shipping and food, and who represents the civilian population as to their needs of food in this consideration?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Those best qualified to pass upon the subject, the highest-ranking officials of the Army and the Navy, the Department of Agriculture, the Food Administration, and all others are in a position to contribute authoritatively to the solution of the problems involved.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman will find on page 15 of the report this statement:

> Food requirements are determined by the War Food Administration of the Department of Agriculture after consultation with the Food Advisory Committee on which the Army, Navy, and Lend-Lease are among the agencies represented.

The Secretary of Agriculture, of course, is on that Advisory Committee, and he is the civilian representative.

Mr. O'HARA. Under subparagraph (a) of this appropriation appears the rather broad, general language that the amount of $4,452,623,000 is to be appropriated for agricultural, industrial, and other commodities and articles. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the item of farm machinery alone. We know when Lend-Lease started they took a lot of farm machinery and sent it across the water for our allies. I happen to know that in my district there are farmers who cannot get implements with which to produce the food or harvest it.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. If they could get the machinery, if they could plant the food, and if they could harvest it, it would not serve the purpose of this war as well as that produced in England and Africa. We are adopting a plan which, in the considered judgment of those best qualified to decide, and in whom this Congress and the American people have confidence, is best calculated to serve the Nation. I know there are men who have never been out of their own townships who can tell you how this war ought to be fought.

There are those who say we should send this kind of food and that kind of food, this kind of machinery and that kind of machinery, or that we should not send any at all; but the American people would not be willing to place the destiny of the Nation in the hands of such critics. They prefer to leave it to those who are in a position, through training and ability and tried experience, to direct the war, to decide these questions and who up to this time have registered 100-percent scores in their decisions. The Lend-Lease Administration has made that record up to date.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman will also find on pages 8 and 9 of the report filed by the committee the statement that only $16,000,000 in dollar-value of machinery is contemplated to be included in this program. That is 3 percent of our production of farm machinery from the standpoint of implements, and 25 percent of that 3 percent is spare parts.

It was shown in the hearings that a very urgent request was sent to the Lease-Lend Administration by General Eisenhower that everything possible be done to send farm machinery and spare parts for the farm machinery we have had over there, because they had the labor there and they had the land there, and they could raise the food there so much more easily and in so much vaster quantities, thus avoiding the bottleneck of shipping. So the committee felt, and the Lend-Lease Administration felt, naturally, that the intelligent thing to do was to send what we could send and still not cripple American industry.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Exactly.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. This is regarding food, but not farm-produced food. I notice that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. O'NEAL] asked Mr. Stettinius a question relating to assistance to the fishing industry both in this country and abroad, and Mr. Stettinius replied that the Navy Department is releasing certain ships in order to aid the fishing industry, that we may have more fish. That is a very constructive thing, I feel, because we need it very much in New England as well as in other parts of the country.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Our fisheries are one of our great national assets in time of peace, and doubly so in time of war. They are especially important as a source of food at this time when meat is at a premium. The Government through the Navy is cooperating in every way possible to supply facilities for this purpose even at the risk of neglecting other demands for shipping.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am very glad to get that information.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman has persuaded me that it is well for us to furnish farm machinery to our allies for their production of food. If the gentleman will permit, I should like to accompany that statement by saying that I should like to see the prisoners taken in this war employed and put to work at the place they are now located in the production of food which is needed.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Such a plan would possibly render a service to prisoners who would prefer healthful, active, outdoor life, and at the same time contribute to the national economy. But, of course, the care and disposition of prisoners of war is under the strict interpretation of international law.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will pardon me, but I still have some questions to ask in respect to China, which I hope can be answered. First, however, I want the gentleman to know that I have nothing but the greatest respect for Mr. Stettinius and his staff, and that as far as aid to England and Russia is concerned, I think it is both necessary and advisable. However, I think the Pacific area is just as important as the other areas in this war, and out there China is our most important ally. What are we going to do—send them one-half of 1 percent of our lend-lease goods again, with a lot of sympathy? You cannot fight a war with sympathy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri may have permission to conclude his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Let me ask the gentleman from Montana what he would suggest, and wherein he thinks the Lend-Lease Administration has been deficient.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. I think it has been doing a good job, but I am a little bit disappointed at some of the remarks included in the report. For example, we were told at the beginning that if it required doing the impossible to send aid to China, it would be attempted, and now the words are that "we want to do for China as much as could be done" and that "we are going to send to China as much as could be sent her," and that we are requesting only so many dollars for China. Certainly there must be some way in which we can get to China by means of transport planes, caravan routes, or otherwise.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. If the gentleman will supply that information to those in charge of the Allied campaign, he will become world famous overnight. Our contributions to China are limited only by our opportunities. We are sending to China everything we can get to her and whatever can be done is being done despite the incredible difficulties to be surmounted. There is only one line of access to China, and that is over the highest range of mountains in the world, at an altitude which it is difficult for planes to reach with unladen, much less with an appreciable cargo. We must be able to control both air and sea, and not until we can control the Indian Ocean as well as the Burma Road can we hope to supply the heroic armies of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek with even a modicum of the supplies they need. In the meantime, we shall deliver to China every dollar's worth of material and every ounce of supplies we can get through, and we will continue to increase it as rapidly as the military situation permits.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Will the gentleman also point out that the amount of money allowed here for allocation of munitions and commodities and food to China, of course, is not limited in respect to what lend-lease can use, because under their present form of operation, they can divert anything anywhere.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. They have a reserve fund?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Not only lend-lease, but the military authorities, out of military funds, realize the urgent need of doing everything possible for China, and the only limitation is the matter of transportation, which, of course, is terrific. The only way we can get in there now is by transport planes. All of us will be happy when we are able to do more for China.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion may I call attention to the fact that the end of this war is not in sight. It is true we have won for the time being a victory in north Africa, but that victory has been after months more than we originally calculated it would take. It has been a victory over an enemy far removed from its source of supplies, and with total manpower of only 15 divisions. We must now attack the Continent, where there are 226 divisions of crack Axis troops on the Russian line alone. We now enter upon the real campaign, against hundreds of divisions securely entrenched adjacent to bases of supplies, and on the defensive on their own hearth stone. A long war is ahead of us, a very expensive war. It will require men and money, and will involve staggering losses. The smallest thing we can do is to provide food and supplies for our allies when they are giving their lives. If their troops were not there our troops would have to be there; if their boys were not dying our boys would be dying; and I know I speak for every father and mother in America when I say they are welcome to all we can give if it means sending back our boys. If by providing these supplies for our allies at the front we can shorten the war a single month, a single week, a single day, it will be worth all its costs. I trust this bill to that end will have the unanimous approval of the House.

Mr. Chairman, I now yield 1 minute to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE].

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I am very proud of the record of my home county, Gaston, in North Carolina, whose quota for the Second War Loan was $1,891,200. The people of the county subscribed for $4,059,426.25, and I shall read the letter of Mr. Allen H. Sims, county chairman for the War Loan Committee, giving full facts in regard to the sales in the county:

> The reason I have not written you sooner regarding the Second War Loan campaign in Gaston County was that the final figures have just come in.
> On a quota of $1,891,200, our total sales were $4,059,426.25. Total sales were 214 percent of the county quota.
> While the campaign was going on and after we had raised our original quota, the ladies of the county put on a special campaign to sell $350,000 of Series E bonds to purchase a bomber and name it Miss Gaston County. Total E bonds sales amounted to $573,506.25, which was more than one and one-half times the amount necessary to purchase the bomber. These E bond sales are included in the total given you above.
>
> From these figures, I know you will get a just pride in the way your home county went over the top in this campaign. The remarkable thing about it is that there was practically no solicitation other than by the ladies on E bond sales. People just came in voluntarily.
> With kindest regards, I am
>
> Cordially yours,

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 minutes.

Mr. KEARNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. KEARNEY. Circumstances over which I have no control will prevent me from being in this Chamber when this bill is voted on. If I were present, I certainly would vote for the bill.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, this bill calls for an appropriation of $6,273,629,000. This bill, with the funds that we have heretofore been providing for the military authorities, and for lend-lease, and one way and another, makes a grand total of appropriations and contract authorizations of about $33,000,000,000. The expenditures for this fiscal year for war purposes are going to be just a little over $70,000,000,000. The public debt, as of this date, is approximately $135,000,000,000. This bill marks a new departure in handling lend-lease appropriations. Down to the 30th of April there were certain expenditures entered into for munitions, ammunition, airplanes, tanks, trucks, and other implements of war provided by both the Army and the Navy for those who are fighting with us.

Beginning with the 1st day of May those things will all be supplied out of the regular appropriations made direct to the Army and the Navy, and there will be nothing to show whether or not those things are to be chargeable to lease-lend in the long run, until actual delivery of the article. In other words, the Army and the Navy will contract for the articles of war and will get delivery of them, and there will be nothing whatever upon their books which will absolutely commit their purchase to lease-lend, until delivery is actually made. Of course, that same rule applies to anything that is purchased under lease-lend appropriations. If our soldiers or our war activities require the use of any of the things that are purchased with lease-lend funds, those things can be diverted by the Government to our own forces.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. TABER. Yes; I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I notice in Mr. Stettinius' report to the committee, at page 159, a statement regarding the use of money for China. I gather it is an added statement after the hearing. He speaks of a contingent fund of $377,000,000 and that some of that could be used for goods going to China. I think the response that Mr. Churchill received from the Congress the other day shows the intense and interested approval of any measure of aid for China and the great delight that England, through Mr. Churchill, has promised to go along with us in aid to China.

Mr. TABER. I can only say this, that down through the 11th of March only $158,000,000 of merchandise was shipped to China, lease-lend. Shipments since that date have been on a smaller scale than they were before the Burma Road was closed. According to my understanding, there is every disposition on the part of both the Army and the Navy and the Lease-Lend Administrator to provide anything that we can possibly get to China. There is a very general realization on the part of everyone connected with the war effort, including the Congress, of the absolute necessity of providing the Chinese with everything we can to permit them to carry on the war.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am delighted to have the gentleman's statement.

Mr. TABER. I am sure before things go too far we will be able in some way to get a lot more goods and articles of war into China than we have been in the last year. Of course, in the first place, it probably means a breaking down of the Burma Road obstacles. Ultimately it means that perhaps we will have to find some way of breaking up, as soon as we can, the Japanese means of communication with their own homeland.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Of course, planes can be sent from some other area.

Mr. TABER. Planes may be sent in other ways, but not in every way, because the difficulties are quite severe.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Flying over the Himalayas, for instance?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Is it not true that Russia is paying England for everything she gets from England—paying cash at the moment? I have been told that many times.

Mr. TABER. I have not heard that. It may be so.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think the gentleman will find that is correct.

Mr. TABER. I did not know that; but it may be so. I will find out and put it in the RECORD at this point. I find that England has an arrangement with Russia similar to lend-lease.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. That figure of $158,000,000 which you gave as the total amount of lend-lease aid to China represents, I believe, an increase of only $2,000,000 since the lend-lease report ending on the last day of December last year, according to the newspapers. It was my impression that lend-lease aid was being stepped up all over the world. That would show, I believe, in comparison, that aid to China has been going down instead of going up.

Mr. TABER. Except for this, that planes might be sent out of the Army appropriation. That is where they will be sent, together with all munitions and guns that it is possible to send them from this time forward, except for a very few minor deliveries, of such things that have not yet been delivered to lease-lend.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. In the gentleman's opinion, then, these figures would not necessarily give the true story?

Mr. TABER. Not the complete story. On the other hand, there is no question but that the volume is nothing like what we wish it was.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. One further question. A number of remarks have been made today about there being only one route into China by means of which supplies could be sent and that is by planes over the Himalayas. I should like to call to the gentleman's attention that there is another route from Russia via the Turk-Sib Railway into the western Province of Sinkiang, and from there by caravan down to Chungking itself. Furthermore, it is my impression that all Allied planes being used over the Himalaya Mountain route have been the larger transport planes, and consequently should be able to carry more in the way of supplies, which, of course, would include gasoline.

Mr. TABER. Of course, it takes a lot of gasoline to operate these planes. They do not have as much pay load as they have going to some other places.

Mr. ANGELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. ANGELL. Can the gentleman give us the figures on the total amount that has been appropriated and expended or used by lease-lend up to this time?

Mr. TABER. Down to the 11th of March there had been something like $9,300,000,000 actually delivered.

At the time we held our hearings there had been approximately $11,000,000,000. This, of course, does not mean that that much goods has been delivered; it means that we have spent that much out of the appropriation. For instance, of this appropriation, $6,273,000,000, $1,500,000,000 is for the transportation of goods on the high seas and $270,000,000, or approximately that, is for the repairs to ships, either transport ships or warships of other nations that are repaired in our shipyards.

The amount of expenditures in 1941 was $1,366,000,000; in 1942, $6,993,000,000; in 1943 through March, $1,261,000,000; a total of approximately $9,000,000,000; and then there is the month of April. So these expenditures added together would amount to something more than probably $10,000,000,000 right now.

Mr. ANGELL. May I ask what are the over-all figures of authorizations and appropriations for lend-lease?

Mr. TABER. The total lend-lease appropriations to date are $18,400,000,000. This might not be the right number of millions, but it is approximately correct.

Authority to the Army and the Navy to transfer goods runs into approximately $36,000,000,000 and to the Maritime Commission to lease ships to quite a considerable item, perhaps five or six billions. The Navy has the right in addition to that to transfer ships that have a cost or book value not exceeding $3,900,000,000; so probably there are forty-six or forty-eight billion dollars on top of the $18,000,000,000 that might be used.

Mr. ANGELL. One further question: If I remember the figures when we had this matter up before it was around $63,000,000,000.

Mr. TABER. It is not far from that. I think it is a little above that which might be used.

Mr. ANGELL. And would not include the amount carried in this bill.

Mr. TABER. No; that would make a total of $70,000,000,000.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. I should like to call the gentleman's attention to page 139 of the hearings if he has them handy.

Mr. TABER. Yes; I have them open here.

Mr. KNUTSON. I call the gentleman's attention to the fourth column of the table: India, China, Australia, New Zealand, with a grand total of $1,155,000,000 in round figures. Can the gentleman state for the information of the House just what part of the $1,155,000,000 went to China?

Mr. TABER. I have not the exact figures in mind, but they are in the hearings somewhere. As of the 11th day of March I have figures which I can give. They are these: China $158,000,000; India $595,000,000, Australia $452,000,000, and New Zealand $139,000,000.

Mr. KNUTSON. Does that seem to the gentleman to be an equitable distribution? China of all the countries that the gentleman has named, China is the only one that might be termed a battleground; Australia is not, India is not, New Zealand is not. Would the gentleman refresh my memory by reading the figures again?

Mr. TABER. Certainly; China $158,000,000, India $595,000,000, Australia $452,000,000, and New Zealand $139,000,000.

Mr. KNUTSON. China has had less than 10 percent of the amount that has gone into that territory.

Mr. TABER. Not less, but not much more.

Mr. KNUTSON. It is no wonder that she is just on the verge of giving up. We ought to have a better distribution of war material over in the Orient.

Mr. TABER. It is perfectly apparent that the British and the United States forces underestimated the power of the Japanese. I do not know as they are blameworthy for it, but it is perfectly apparent; and the Japanese at the present time have gone so far into the approaches to China both by sea and by land that it is absolutely impossible at the present time for us to get any more to them.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has consumed 30 minutes.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

Mr. KNUTSON. I should like to pursue this just a little further if the gentleman has the time.

Mr. TABER. I will take the time. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KNUTSON. It is possible at least to fly planes into China even though the Burma Road is closed.

Mr. TABER. Yes; and it is being done just as much as possible with what facilities we have available. Large transport planes are being flown in there from India; large quantities of materials are being carried into India and we are trying the very best we can to get equipment to China; but until we can break the Japanese control of the Burma Road or make an approach by sea, which probably will be more difficult, we cannot get a lot more material into China.

Mr. KNUTSON. How in the world are we ever going to open the Burma Road as long as we withhold supplies from China?

Mr. TABER. We have got to open up the Burma Road in order to get in there.

Mr. KNUTSON. You can fly some of it in, at least.

Mr. TABER. Well, we are; just as much as the transport planes will permit.

Mr. BREHM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BREHM. Is it not true that 2,000,000 English are now being held at bay by 60,000 Japs which prevents the opening of the Burma Road? If that is true we are never going to get into China.

Mr. TABER. I do not believe the situation is quite on that scale.

Mr. BREHM. According to the papers it is.

Mr. TABER. I doubt if that is the picture.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Referring back to the amount that has been heretofore appropriated and carried in this bill for lend-lease purposes, I would like to be clear upon that point. Did I understand the gentleman to say that heretofore we have appropriated in excess of $11,000,000,000? Then I see this bill carries $6,200,000,000 more.

Mr. TABER. We have heretofore appropriated $18,400,000,000, or a little more than that, but not much, and this bill carries $6,273,000,000.

Mr. O'CONNOR. A total appropriation of approximately $24,000,000,000?

Mr. TABER. Twenty-five billion dollars.

Mr. O'CONNOR. We will have available when this bill is passed in the neighborhood of $8,000,000,000 out of that fund to carry on this program, according to the report?

Mr. TABER. Operating from the 1st of May. The allotments for obligations are set up at about $750,000,000 a month right through to the end of 14 months, or the 30th of June 1944.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Carrying that through, we then have used in the neighborhood of $16,000,000,000 for this purpose?

Mr. TABER. No; $25,000,000,000.

Mr. O'CONNOR. As I understand, we have already appropriated $18,000,000,000?

Mr. TABER. Yes; and this makes $6,000,000,000 more.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Which total $24,000,000,000.

Mr. TABER. Yes; eighteen and one-half billion dollars and six and one-half billion dollars.

Mr. O'CONNOR. According to the report, we will have available after we pass this bill $8,000,000,000.

Mr. TABER. Which will carry us through to the 30th of June next year.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Showing that we have used between sixteen and seventeen billion dollars.

Mr. TABER. We have not used it yet, but we will have to as the goods are delivered which have already been ordered.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Here is what I am getting at: Can the gentleman give me these figures—and I have a lot of faith in the gentleman, because I know he watches the Treasury—can the gentleman give me the figures as to the value in money of the imports on lease-lend account that we have received from these various countries to whom we have been shipping these lease-lend goods?

Mr. TABER. I have not those figures in my head. I do know that there are a lot of things that I did not know about when I started these hearings. For instance, when we started to operate on our appropriations 2 years ago Great Britain was raising approximately 40 percent of her foodstuff. Today, as the result of the opening up of a lot of her land, she is raising 60 percent. On top of that she is supplying such things as potatoes and fresh vegetables to our troops that are quartered over there.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Maybe we could get some potatoes from her after the soldiers are fed.

Mr. TABER. We used to get lots of them from Ireland in the old days.

Mr. O'CONNOR. We ought to get some from Ireland. We cannot get them at home.

Mr. TABER. They seem to have tightened up. I do not know what is the matter with them.

Mr. O'HARA. Can we get a little gas, too?

Mr. TABER. Australia at the present time is providing all the meat to feed our troops that are quartered over there. New Zealand is providing for those that are in her territory. It is absolutely impossible, the way the thing is run, to say very much about the dollar value. Probably the dollar value of the meat that we are getting out of Australia will run in this fiscal year to somewhere around four or five hundred million dollars, almost as much as our lease-lend contribution in that direction.

Mr. O'HARA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. O'HARA. May I say to the distinguished gentleman from New York that I appreciate the splendid work he does on the Appropriations Committee. He has given us some very worth-while information as to the amount of money which has been appropriated for national defense purposes and for lease-lend purposes, which I understand is around $330,000,000,000. I wonder if the gentleman can give us any information as to what the future policy or expenditures are going to be as to national defense with reference to lease-lend, as to the length of the war, and so forth? What I am getting at, as the gentleman realizes, is this: Just how far can we go?

Mr. TABER. When we stop going, now that we are all wound up, we have enlisted in Mr. Hitler's slave army. I am not ready to get to that point yet. I am going to keep going just as long as I can. I will be perfectly frank with the gentleman. I cannot figure how we are going to bear the debt. On the other hand, we have done a lot of things that could not be figured out in days gone by and I am not enough of a pessimist to believe it is time to quit.

Mr. O'HARA. The gentleman does not mean to infer I am willing to yield or to give up?

Mr. TABER. Oh, no; not for a minute.

Mr. O'HARA. What I am getting at is the debt situation.

Mr. TABER. Oh, the debt situation is terrible and I will be perfectly frank with the gentleman, it staggers me. We are not going to have any more than $30,000,000,000 of taxable income in the Treasury. How about that, Mr. KNUTSON?

Mr. KNUTSON. We are raising now about $25,000,000,000. They want $16,000,000,000 more. That means we will have to get a priority on some printing presses.

Mr. TABER. That may be.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will there be enough money left in the Treasury when this thing is over with which to build a monument to the author of our misfortunes?

Mr. TABER. I do not believe anybody would become excited about building monuments, because after all, after the war is over, we will be busy taking care of our own recovery to meet our future needs.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. CURLEY. We seem to be laying tremendous stress on the importance of opening up the Burma Road. I have been informed by very competent Chinese authorities who are familiar with the terrain of that part of the country, and have been for years, that it is possible to bring in more by planes in a single day than has ever been brought in over the Burma Road in an entire month.

Do you find any particular group that is hostile to an all-out program for China?

Mr. TABER. No.

Mr. CURLEY. Under lend-lease, or under any other Allied program?

Mr. TABER. No. Mr. Stettinius, when he was before our committee, expressed great interest in doing our part toward getting things to China.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TABER. I yield myself 8 additional minutes.

Mr. CURLEY. I might add, with the gentleman's permission, I have been informed by one of the Chinese generals who has been in the war all the time, from the beginning, that if they had 500 bombers and fighting planes they could drive the Japanese out of China.

Mr. TABER. That would be a great accomplishment.

Mr. CURLEY. And they could do it in 6 weeks, and we could move in through the back door and save the lives of hundreds of thousands of American boys; and I wonder if you could tell us the position of those having something to do with providing aid, whether aid is being given to China in the proportion that should be given because of the importance of that great country and of its manpower in winning the war.

Mr. TABER. I could not answer that.

Mr. CURLEY. I would like to know.

Mr. TABER. I wish I could, but I am afraid I cannot.

Mr. Chairman, I have one or two more items I would like to cover.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. Several days ago the newspapers published a table showing that the United States is spending more money in the war than all the other belligerents combined. Did your committee look into that phase of it?

Mr. TABER. I did not look into that phase. I did look into the question as to how much other nations were spending and how much we were spending, and this is the information as I have it.

The United States, $70,000,000,000; the British, approximately $19,600,000,000; Australia, $5,258,000,000; Canada, $4,900,000,000; Germany, is about $30,000,000,000.

That is as far as I went into it.

Mr. KNUTSON. What period does that cover?

Mr. TABER. It is for the annual expenditures for the fiscal year 1943, similar to our fiscal year.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. DONDERO. That does not include Russia?

Mr. TABER. No.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. How does that total up?

Mr. TABER. It totals up to about six-sevenths of ours. These United Nations total up, without Russia, to about half of ours. Germany and the other United Nations, exclusive of Russia, would total up to just about half of what ours is.

Mr. KNUTSON. Then it may be proper to say that we are spending fully as much as the belligerents combined?

Mr. TABER. Oh, no; no; I do not think so, because when you come to figure in Germany and Russia, it would probably be some 50 per cent more than ours, figuring the total figure, over-all.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is that exclusive of the lend-lease money?

Mr. TABER. No; lend-lease money is figured in ours.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is it figured in there?

Mr. TABER. No, not as an expenditure by them.

Mr. KNUTSON. How do they carry lend-lease in these countries if they do not carry it as an expenditure?

Mr. TABER. As a receipt.

Mr. KNUTSON. A receipt.

Mr. TABER. I have one more thing I must say. In checking up on something appearing in the paper with reference to the lend-lease, in the last few days, I have contacted Mr. Stettinius about those things. I have found this, that the radios that were referred to in that article in the newspaper, that were sent to India, were sent to India, and they are now being sold there for the account of this Government, and that that was done as soon as it was brought to Mr. Stettinius' attention. The other items where India was referred to in the article, went to India for military purposes. Mr. Stettinius advises me that he is prepared to furnish any information to any Member of Congress at any time he can do so. He told me that when he was unable to furnish information, it was because he was required to be before the Committee on Appropriations on the hearings, and that he could not do two things at once.

Of course, there are some of these figures that have to be given to the committee in confidence. It would not do to tell our enemies just exactly what we intend to do, but any Member of Congress is entitled to have the books opened for his benefit, with the understanding that it will be kept confidential. I am sure that no one would have a right to find fault with the attitude which Mr. Stettinius has expressed to me, and my hope is that when any Member of the House who feels that he has any question which should be asked of Mr. Stettinius, that he will approach him with that in mind.

I might add that I have been over with Mr. Stettinius the questions which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JONES] asked of Mr. Stettinius in a letter—68 questions—and that I have here the answers insofar as they are available. Some are of confidential information and some cannot be answered, but I am sure that Mr. Stettinius has no desire to keep any of us in the dark as to the actual operations of lease-lend.

Of these figures brought here, approximately $2,800,000,000 are for food, $7,200,000,000 for industrial products; $1,500,000,000 for transportation by sea, and about $250,000,000 for repairs and outfitting the vessels that have to be made as the result of wear and tear that comes to them.

I have tried to yield as I have gone along and cover the ground as thoroughly as possible, and to answer any questions that might be asked. Personally, I do not see how we can avoid meeting our responsibility to provide for those things which will keep our allies fighting—Russia, Great Britain, China, India, Australia, and all the rest of our allies. I hope that this bill will receive the approval of the House.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH].

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, as has been pointed out, this bill carries a total of $6,273,000,000, or $150,000,000 less than recommended by the Bureau of the Budget. Added to $2,057,000,000 unobligated funds from prior appropriations, the bill will make available for a 14-month period commencing with May 1 of this year the sum of $8,331,000,000.

As the Members will note from the report, there have heretofore been made direct lend-lease appropriations amounting to $18,410,000,000. Of this total $16,300,000,000 has been obligated or committed, leaving an uncommitted balance for reappropriation amounting to $2,057,000,000.

The record indicates that to date there has been actually exported under Lend-Lease $9,800,000,000 from direct appropriations and an additional $1,200,000,000 under the authorizations accorded the Army, the Navy, and the Maritime Commission in previous acts, or a total of $11,000,000,000.

This total is roughly divided between commodities, $9,100,000,000, and services, $1,900,000,000.

Speaking very roughly, distribution has been made to the United Kingdom to the extent of about 40 percent, to Russia to the extent of about 30 percent, and to our other allies to the extent of 30 percent. It is very encouraging and heartening, I think, to note the statement by Mr. Stettinius to the effect that to date less than 5 percent of lease-lend shipments have been lost by sinkings.

The committee will find a brief statement as to reciprocal lend-lease in the committee report and a more detailed statement in the committee hearings, pages 30 to 35, inclusive. You will note among other things that the United Kingdom has provided something over 1,362,000 tons of articles and equipment exclusive of construction materials, and something over 2,177,000 tons of construction materials in addition to airfields, barracks, hospitals, and various other items specified in the hearings.

You will note that Australia and New Zealand are said to have provided more food per capita under reciprocal lend-lease than we have provided per capita under lend-lease proper; also that Australia and New Zealand are said to have provided more beef, veal, lamb, and mutton than we have provided to all lease-lend countries. The contributions of Russia and India are also referred to briefly at this point in the hearings.

The request before us represents a slash by the Lend-Lease Administration equivalent to 19 percent in dollars and 30 percent in tonnage. That is to say, the original Allied requests upon the Lend-Lease Administration amounted to something over $10,000,000,000 and called for about 26,000,000 tons of dry cargo. The requests were reduced by the Lend-Lease Administration to $8,481,000,000 or thereabouts and to about 19,400,000 tons of dry cargo. A further reduction has been made by your committee as already stated amounting to $150,000,000.

Under leave to extend my remarks, I insert at this point two or three tables from the hearings, one a brief summary entitled "Why We Are Asking for Additional Funds," prepared by the Lend-Lease Administration; the second, "A Statement of New Funds Requested," by categories; and the third, a statement entitled "Budget Details by Fiscal Code," which goes into somewhat more detail:

WHY WE ARE ASKING FOR ADDITIONAL FUNDS

	In billions of dollars
1. Since March 1941 there has been appropriated to the President specifically for lend-lease purposes, a total of	18.4
2. By Apr. 30, 1943, we had placed contracts totaling 14.5 billion and an additional 1.8 billion had been committed for projects in process. Thus we had used a total of	16.3
3. This left us with "free funds" amounting to	2.1
4. For the next 14 months, from Apr. 30, 1943, through June 30, 1944, we estimate that our requirements will be	8.5
5. We are therefore requesting new funds amounting to	6.4

6. We are going to use this money to buy food, industrial materials, and other essential items and services, for lend-lease countries. The amounts going to each will depend upon the strategical conditions when the goods are ready for delivery. The tentative break-down is as follows:

	Millions of dollars	Long tons
		Dry cargo	Wet cargo
Russia	2,500	5,000,000	200,000
United Kingdom	4,213	8,800,000	14,200,000
Australia and New Zealand	328	700,000	2,500,000
Other British	167	700,000	100,000
India and China	252	800,000	300,000
Other countries	637	2,800,000	500,000
Total	8,097	19,400,000	17,800,000

7. The money will be used in about the following proportions:

	In millions of dollars
Shipping and other services	$2,345
Agricultural products	2,860
Industrial materials:
Petroleum products	752
Iron and steel	713
Nonferrous metals	392
Machinery and equipment	504
All other commodities	915
Total	3,276
Grand total	8,481

Tonnage of agricultural products and industrial materials is as follows:

	Dry cargo Long tons	Wet cargo
Agricultural products	9,000,000
Industrial materials:
Iron and steel	6,500,000
Nonferrous metals	500,000
Other (exclusive of petroleum products)	3,400,000
	19,400,000
Petroleum products (22,100,000 ship tons)		17,800,000

The Committee will note that no funds are to be expended under this appropriation in respect to category 1, ordnance; category 2, aircraft; or category 5, miscellaneous military equipment, as these items will be provided out of War and Navy Department appropriations; or category 6, production facilities in the United States.

Funds are to be expended for administrative expenses, under category 10, about $9,000,000; for trucks to be shipped to China, under category 3, $58,162,000; for what is really a reserve against contingencies, under category 9, $377,473,000; for repairs and charter hire, under categories 4 and 8, $1,900,000,000, or thereabouts; and for food, agricultural implements, and industrial commodities, under category 7, $6,077,530,000.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Did the gentleman take up with Mr. Stettinius the fact that it is possible for the British to use some of the money and supplies that are going to India to construct more airfields for sending planes to China and some of the war equipment, planes, and so forth; also that every month at the present time some 2,500 tons of freight are carried over the Himalaya Mountains, and almost every day without exception a plane or planes flies into China and from China back to India? It seems to me that it is a matter of plain arithmetic. If we send more airplanes and if the British would help build more landing fields in India, we could send more planes to China. It has been pointed out by a very reliable authority, it is true, that 2,500 tons of freight a month are flown from India to China. If the planes go in daily and come out daily, I can see no reason why we cannot give the Chinese more planes and get more supplies in there. The C. N. A. C. and our Ferry Command fly planes constantly from India to China over the mountains and during the monsoon.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I may say to my colleague that I am in entire sympathy with her desire and with the desire of the Congress as a whole to do everything humanly possible to help China as much as possible. I do not think I can add anything specifically in answer to her question that has not already been covered in the course of this debate.

Generally speaking, the record indicates that the principal demands of China are for heavy fighting equipment, that provision of that type of help depends largely on transportation facilities, and that the Lend-Lease Administration and all others in the picture are prepared to do everything within their power consistent with available facilities.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman have available figures as to the amount of money that is going to India or as to the type of supplies?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I do not have those figures.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman have any objection to my putting them in at this point if I can secure them?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. No; I have no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I thank the gentleman.

(Figures not supplied.)

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. In connection with the money for charter hire under the Maritime Commission, I should like to call attention in passing to the testimony of Admiral Land at page 63 of the hearings referring to the Red Sea charters and the enormous profits made under them which have been discussed previously in this House. It will be noted that the admiral expresses his chagrin in this connection and indicates that some readjustment has been made and that further readjustments are likely to be made with a view to improving the picture.

Members of the committee will note that the food item, category 7, is divided into three parts; first, for food itself, $2,694,000,000 plus; second, for agricultural implements, $16,642,000 plus; third, for industrial commodities $3,275,000,000 plus.

The record indicates that the total food furnished under lend-lease for the current fiscal year amounted to something like 6 percent of our total production, and that it is hoped to increase this percentage to 10 percent in the coming fiscal year.

Under leave to extend my remarks, I insert at this point in the RECORD a table showing lend-lease shipments of principal food items in relation to our national supply in 1942 and in the first 3 months of 1943:

Lend-lease shipments of principal food items in relation to supply for 1942 and the first 3 months of 1943 are shown by percentages in the following table:

	1942	First 3 months, 1943
All meats (dressed-weight basis)	5.0	7.7
Beef	.2	1.0
Veal	0	0
Lamb and mutton	.4	18.2

To me it was amazing to be told that despite lend-lease shipments the people in America as a whole had more food in 1942 than in any year in our history. Apparent shortages are explained by Secretary Wickard, as the result of increased consumption by those in the armed forces, and by those in the lower-income brackets, who have been earning increased compensation. I include at this point a table furnished by the Secretary in this connection:

United States: Civilian consumption of food products, per capita, in 1941 and 1942 compared to 1935–39 average

Mr. Chairman, this bill is a difficult bill to present on the floor of the House. It is difficult to present because of the fact that only part of the evidence appears in the hearings of the commmittee. A large part of the evidence is necessarily off the record, necessarily confidential, and available only through the confidential files of the Committee on Appropriations.

I can say, however, as far as the past is concerned, that the committee has been furnished with a detailed statement. There is a general summary in the eighth quarterly report to Congress on lend-lease operations dated March 11, 1943, but a statement in much greater detail was furnished your committee in confidence, showing by country, by commodity, and by dollar value lend-lease expenditures made heretofore. That statement and every item in that statement, we were advised, has supporting documents in the files of the Lend-Lease Administration.

As far as future expenditure is concerned, your committee was also furnished by the Lend-Lease Administration with a very complete and very detailed statement. It was 59 pages in length, showing by country, by commodity, by unit, and by dollar value just what is expected to be done with the appropriation now under consideration. The percentage of total production was shown for every item included in its statement. Of course the statement is not binding. It is an estimate, but it is a very careful and a very detailed estimate. That statement is contained in the confidential files of the committee.

Mr. CLASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Yes.

Mr. CLASON. The gentleman stated that some of the evidence given to the committee does not appear in the printed hearings. Can the gentleman tell us whether or not any petroleum products—gasoline or fuel oil—is to be shipped out of this country under the lend-lease program for use of civilian populations in other countries?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. The gentleman from Massachusetts will find in the concluding pages of the hearings, commencing at page 183, a statement by Mr. Duce, Foreign Division, Petroleum Administrator for War, in this connection. The answer is that a certain amount of petroleum products is to be shipped out for military purposes, but Mr. Duce testified that in his opinion, whatever these shipments might amount to, there would be available in addition enough for essential minimum domestic needs.

Mr. CLASON. Does the whole testimony before the committee satisfy the gentleman that there is going to be sufficient fuel oil and gasoline for the people of New England during the coming year and the next winter?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I do not suppose the gentleman or I or anyone else can predict with accuracy what the demands of the Army and Navy are going to be, but I think this is an authoritative statement, which came in answer to the question which I asked Mr. Duce specifically. His answer indicates, in the light of foreseeable Army and Navy demands, sufficient oil for essential minimum domestic needs, including the east coast.

Mr. CLASON. But insofar as petroleum products going abroad for civilian consumption, it seems to me that before any of it comes under this lend-lease program, consideration should be given to the needs of our own people, and at the present time our share of all kinds of petroleum products.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I think that all the petroleum products contemplated here are for the war effort.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Yes.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. The gentleman described the elaborate confidential statements filed with the committee, but the gentleman did not say whether the committee had gone over those statements and had given consideration and study to the flow of lend-lease materials all over the world. In the hearings before the Foreign Affairs Committee, when extension of lend-lease was under consideration, although the Administrator offered to give us detailed statements and descriptions of lend-lease, country by country, the committee never saw fit to avail itself of the offer, so that the extension of lend-lease was made without any detailed study by any committee of the House. Of course, we must place great reliance on the administration of lend-lease and the Army and the Navy Combined Staff.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 minutes more.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Of course, we must rely on the Lend-Lease Administration in large measure, but what concerns me is that no one in the Congress may be actually reviewing the records that they are willing to submit in confidence. Those of us on the floor—I myself—must take the record on faith because the record is not available to me here. When it was available my committee did not avail itself of it. Can the gentleman give us any assurance as to the analysis and study that the gentleman and his colleagues on the Appropriations Committee and subcommittee have given to the flow of lend-lease materials, war materials, and other kinds to various countries?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Answering the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS], I may say that Mr. Stettinius furnished the committee with a statement, to which I have referred; a statement only recently completed; a statement almost as large as the table from which I am speaking, 59 pages in length, with every item in detail as I have described, according to the estimates for the next 14 months. He also furnished the committee with various charts, exhibits, and statistics in addition to this statement. Your committee spent several days going over this secret document, page by page and item by item, obtaining the best possible picture they could obtain under the conditions by which we are confronted to which the gentleman from Ohio has already referred.

I want to supplement this statement by saying, as I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has already stated, that Mr. Stettinius has stated to me personally that he will be happy to furnish any Member of Congress with any information concerning lend-lease that he may desire, just so long as the request falls outside the limits necessarily prescribed by military and naval secrecy. I regret it is impossible to bring the details to the Members of the House, but we are necessarily in that position, as we have been heretofore.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield.

Mr. RIZLEY. As I understand, there has heretofore been appropriated directly for lend-lease purposes $18,400,000,000. Is that correct?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Eighteen billion four hundred and ten million dollars.

Mr. RIZLEY. How much of that has been actually expended?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Of that, $9,800,000,000 has been actually exported, as I understand it. That is, spent and turned over to the Allies. Of the total, $16,300,000,000 has been obligated or committed. So of the total there remains a balance of $2,057,000,000 which are free.

Mr. RIZLEY. In addition to the direct appropriation of $18,410,000,000, we have also indirectly appropriated, earmarked for lend-lease, about $45,000,000,000, have we not?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. It depends a little on how you look at it. The gentleman will find at page 47 of the last lend-lease quarterly report, dated March 11, a break-down of all categories.

Mr. RIZLEY. I have studied that report, but I was unable to ascertain from the report just what it is.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. The report shows $18,410,000,000 of direct appropriations. It shows $35,970,000,000 of authorizations to the War Department or Navy Department for transfer purposes.

Mr. RIZLEY. Is that $35,000,000,000 earmarked for lend-lease purposes?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. It is not earmarked for lend-lease purposes, but the two Departments are authorized to use up to that figure, should they see fit to do so. As a matter of fact, the total transfer against that authorization to date amounts to $1,200,000,000.

Mr. RIZLEY. That is the point I was trying to get at. Why do we have both the direct and indirect? Why is it necessary to have a direct appropriation of $18,000,000,000 and then this additional direct appropriation of $6,000,000,000 when we have the War Department authorized to expend for lend-lease out of the funds that we appropriate for the War Department?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. In a word, because the War Department and Navy Department could not provide the items that the direct appropriations are planned to provide.

Mr. RIZLEY. What item, for instance?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Food, for instance.

Mr. RIZLEY. That is what I am getting at. Does the War Department have authority from the funds earmarked for lend-lease in the appropriations that go to them, to spend any of that money for food, for instance?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I think the answer is no. What the War and Navy Departments may provide are items which we have specifically made available to them—arms and munitions, for instance. We have included in appropriations for the Army and the Navy authorizations to use up to a certain limitation arms or munitions and other articles procured from the appropriations for transfer to our allies.

Mr. RIZLEY. Can the gentleman give me any definite figure, whether by direct or indirect appropriation, the amount of money we have actually expended to date for lend-lease purposes?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Eleven billion dollars.

Mr. RIZLEY. How much in addition to that have we authorized for lend-lease purposes?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. There are three classes authorized—$18,410,000,000 in direct appropriations, $35,970,000,000 in authorized transfers, and over and above that, about $5,000,000,000 applicable to the leasing of ships by the Maritime Commission and an unlimited authority applicable to the leasing of ships by the Navy.

Mr. RIZLEY. How much have our allies, on reverse lend-lease, in dollars and cents, contributed up to date to the lend-lease fund?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I do not think anybody knows the answer to that question. If they do, it has never been made public.

Mr. RIZLEY. If we are going to make our figures public so that the world may know how much we are contributing to lend-lease, why is it that we are unable to get the amount that other nations, in dollars and cents, are contributing to lend-lease?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. If the gentleman will read the recent hearings on the extension of the lend-lease law he will see a very detailed discussion on that question. As I understand it, insofar as possible, every item of reverse lend-lease is recorded in terms of pounds, tons, or other units. There is not in existence, however, as I understand it, any over-all statement which converts those pounds or tons or other units into dollars and cents.

Mr. RIZLEY. I understand that.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. The reason advanced is that the items are so numerous and so complicated that it would take an unwarranted amount of manpower at this time. In fact, in the hearings referred to I think an expert from the lend-lease administration testified it would take the equivalent of half a division of men for a certain period of time to bring all the material together. Mr. Stettinius assures us, however, that there is a record in one form or another, that is in tons or pounds or other units, so that if in the future it is desired to make the computation and convert into dollars and cents it can be done after the war is over.

Mr. RIZLEY. I can understand that; but, on the other hand, I assume that the things we are supplying under lease-lend also are broken down into pounds, tons, or what not; then we carry it out and show it in dollars and cents. What I cannot understand is why it should require so much more manpower for other countries to give us the same kind of accounting, the same kind of statement we give to them; I just cannot understand it.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I confess to the gentleman the difficulty involved has never been made clear to me, but I do think it is a good deal more complicated matter than we might think it is, because of the very varied nature of the items of lend-lease in reverse that are being furnished, and because of the fact that they are being furnished all over the face of the globe.

Mr. RIZLEY. Am I correct in saying that the Commodity Credit Corporation is one of our purchasing agencies for lend-lease?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I do not think so. I think that lend-lease purchasing is done by the Army, the Navy, the Maritime Commission, the Department of Agriculture, and the Treasury Procurement Division; there are five procurement agencies.

Mr. RIZLEY. I am under the impression that I read a statement in the hearings that in addition to the agencies the gentleman has mentioned, the Commodity Credit Corporation was also one of the purchasing agencies employed by lend-lease, and that they purchased, not only in this country but abroad, for lend-lease purposes. Am I wrong about that? If I am, I wish the gentleman would correct me.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. It is conceivable that the Commodity Credit Corporation is employed by the Department of Agriculture to aid in its purchasing; I cannot answer the gentleman definitely.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, in conclusion let me say that the request before us, as I have already pointed out, represents a slash of 19 percent by the Lend-Lease Administration and a little more by your committee. Every dollar requested we are advised will be obligated before July 1, 1944; every dollar requested we are advised will be expended within a very few weeks of that date. The rate of spending during the last few months which has run around $600,000,000 a month tends to substantiate the request that is made.

The Department of Agriculture, the War Production Board, and the other agencies of the Government which are responsible for the allocation of our production in the light of the needs of the Army, the Navy, and our civilian economy have all approved the request that is before us. The War Shipping Administration has advised us that in the light of the foreseeable, shipping will be available for the request that is before us. We are advised that the combined chiefs of staffs have had an opportunity of passing upon every item that is contemplated under this bill.

Under these circumstances I do not see how the House can do anything but support the appropriation that is before us as vital to the war effort. I shall vote for the bill on final passage.

In making this statement, however, Mr. Chairman, I cannot refrain from a final word emphasizing the tremendous responsibility of the Lend-Lease Administration. I feel that the country and the Congress are very fortunate in having Mr. Stettinius as our Lend-Lease Administrator. He commands the confidence of the Congress by reason of his fine capacity and high character. I am sure that he fully appreciates the responsibility which is his.

Maximum lend-lease aid to our allies is absolutely vital. Proper control over lend-lease expenditures is also absolutely vital. We must do everything in our power to contribute to the war effort, but what we do, Mr. Chairman, must be done in the light of the economic and financial capacity of the Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS].

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, food is probably the most challenging problem in America today. Food will win the war and it will also win the peace. Our producers, the farmers, broke all records in food production last year. However, this year the food outlook does not appear so good. The things that may cause a food shortage are lack of experienced farm help, too much regulation from Washington, misunderstanding of farm problems in Washington, need for profit insuring prices, lack of farm machinery, early frosts, and lack of proper transportation facilities. Of course, weather conditions will have a great bearing upon the final results of the 1943 crop.

We have a real food problem facing us in feeding our armed forces, our civilian population, our allies, and the small democracies. There are about 5,000,000 children in Belgium, Holland, and Norway who need food at the present time. There are also destitute and unemployed men and women who need food. In Belgium the available daily ration is about 950 calories as against the minimum need of 2,200 calories to maintain health. More than 50 percent of the children are tubercular and have no resistance to disease. If these countries are to survive this food must be imported. They will need 30,000 to 40,000 tons of food monthly. In order to feed ourselves and help these countries we will have to produce more than we did in 1942. This is a real problem facing America and the world.

In the past there has been too much confusion between the Agriculture Department, the W. L. B., and the O. P. A. There has been too much red tape and delay. I understand the O. P. A. is using about 90,000 employees to administer the act, while it was handled by Mr. Hoover in the First World War with 3,000 employees. The chief objections to the present O. P. A. set-up are: The O. P. A.'s lack of confidence in American business, a poor fundamental policy, complexity of the program, and a personnel with little or no experience about the practical problems involved in agricultural production and distribution. What America needs is a food administrator with complete authority to handle the food program from the farmer to the consumer. He should have authority on production, distribution, rationing, and price fixing of food products. Unless the present system is changed immediately we will have a critical shortage in vegetables, canned goods, protein feeds and meat in 1944.

PRICE CEILINGS

The O. P. A. has been too slow in determining price ceilings. Many acres have not been planted in vegetables, due to this delay. Some price ceilings that have been set are too low to cover the cost of production. The ceiling prices which have been applied to certain fruit and vegetables have caused a tremendous amount of confusion and actual chaos both at the shipping point and in the receiving markets. In the case of certain commodities, such as potatoes, this has resulted in the development and operation of the worst black market in history. It is common knowledge among the wholesalers and retailers in most of the larger cities that the consumers are finding it necessary to purchase their supplies of potatoes and certain other commodities from these black markets at almost prohibitive prices from which the producer benefits very little, if any. Unless something is done immediately the production of food is going to be jeopardized and business which has been built up over a great many years is going to be in bankruptcy.

In discussing price ceilings with a number of processors and distributors I have learned the following facts: The O. P. A. has announced ceiling prices for the 1943 pack of corn, peas, tomatoes, and green beans. These prices have been specified at a specific dollar-and-cents price for each size can of each grade of each of these products for each area. The areas are divisions of the country intended to conform with the variations in announced support prices by the Department of Agriculture for raw products involved.

These ceilings have been determined by assuming that a subsidy was going to be paid to the canners by the Commodity Credit Corporation in an amount equal to the increase in raw product cost for 1943 over the cost in 1942. These ceilings do not reflect any increased labor costs in view of the freeze on wages directed by the President. The O. P. A. insist that the ceiling prices, thus announced, reflect their idea of the cost plus 10 percent on the basis of last year's raw material cost and wage rate. These prices are not high enough to reflect a fair return above the cost to a great number of the canners of these products. In fact they are amounts which will be definitely less than cost for many canners.

The O. P. A. has been furnished many statements of costs by canners which show that the 1943 ceilings are lower than the 1942 costs for many items. In some instances this discrepancy is so large that the 1942 ceiling is less than the 1942 cost would have been if the canner had not paid anything in 1942 for direct labor, boxes, labels, sugar, or salt.

There will be many increases in cost in 1943 as compared to 1942 other than wage rates and raw material. A reduction in volume necessarily will increase per unit overhead and administrative costs. This reduction is bound to result from the reduction in the amount of permitted containers, the reluctance of farmers to oblige themselves to as large an acreage of canning crops as in 1942, the discouragement of canners by the lack of good faith upon the part of the O. P. A., and the decrease in acreage yield of canning crops which is to be anticipated this year in comparison with last year. Also that the O. P. A.'s insistence that the canners use A. M. A. grading methods, which will increase costs by requiring increased factory and warehouse labor, loss of an increased number of samples used in grading, factory slow-up to await Government grading, and the charges for Government grading. Minimum wages will be increased and factories will be running on machinery which will be 1 year older. The Army will buy more canned goods which will force the canner to give free storage and insurance on the goods until shipped. Fuel, cases, and label costs are higher than last year. Local taxes have increased. The result will be decreased efficiency with a resultant increased cost. Therefore, if canners lose substantial sums in 1943, their resultant reduction in canned food packs in 1944 may be critical.

The personnel in the O. P. A. has not been up to par. This agency needs competent officials who have faith and confidence in private enterprise. I believe that the O. P. A. is on its way out unless it gives immediate relief to the producers, processors, and distributors. If the bungling, red tape, and delay of this department continues it will cause a food shortage in 1944.

Mr. Chairman, I have just introduced a bill to amend the Emergency Price Control Act which shall provide that the President may thereafter, notwithstanding any other provision of this act, provide for making adjustments with respect to prices of perishable agricultural commodities, or perishable commodities processed or manufactured in whole or substantial part from any agricultural commodity, to the extent necessary to avoid waste or spoilage of such commodities.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I have not had the opportunity of preparing for this debate on this particular bill that I should like to have had. I attended this morning the meeting of the full committee wherein the subcommittee reported to the full committee the Budget request for this item. I must state, however, that I did have an opportunity to get hold of the hearings last night; and over night and until this hour, taking time out to listen to other Members in the debate, I have not had the opportunity of covering the entire hearings and giving them the attention I should like on this bill which appropriates $6,000,000,000. Heretofore we have always reported out from the full committee a bill and have taken it to the floor a day after the full committee acted upon it. I must confess I tried my best this morning to have the full Committee on Appropriations follow that procedure. I was of course ridden down by the multitude. I doubt if there would be any change at all in the results of the consideration of the bill if we had considered it Monday instead of today, but in fairness to anyone who is trying to present accurately a different point of view from the majority it seems to me that the House of Representatives should vouchsafe to any minority in the House a fair and equal opportunity to prepare to present their views for the consideration of the House. Freedom of expression carries with it equal opportunity to debate the issues. I am debating with a subcommittee that has heard testimony off the record and on the record for several days. Our boys are fighting on sixty-odd battle fronts for the freedom of expression and I am therefore encouraged to give my views as a contribution to winning the war.

I hope I may depend upon my opponents accepting criticism of this bill as Winston Churchill would were he here today. Mr. Churchill said on the floor of the House of Commons January 22, 1941:

> I think I have said before that to try to carry on a war, a tremendous war, without the aid and guidance of the House of Commons would be a superhuman task. I have never taken the view that the debates and criticisms of this house are a drag and a burden. Far from it. I may not agree at all with the criticism—I may be stunned by it, and I may resent it; I may even retort—but at any rate debates on these large issues are of the very greatest value to the life trust of the nation, and they are of the very greatest assistance to His Majesty's Government.

I have no rancor in my heart because we are considering this bill within 3 hours of the time that the full Appropriations Committee considered it. I shall do my very level best to discuss the issues as I see them, from the standpoint of winning the war, for the benefit of the House. I hope that you will grant to me that my difference of opinion with the majority of the committee is from a patriotic and a sincere standpoint.

In the first place, this bill does not carry any funds in it for finished munitions, guns, planes, tanks, and matériel. Mixing finished munitions with food and secondary items misleads the membership in the lend-lease quarterly reports and in previous requests for funds. Finished munitions that will win the war will be in the appropriations spent by the Army, Navy, and Maritime Commission. It seems to me that from a good business standpoint, from a fair standpoint, and to keep the country advised, and to keep the Congress advised, when Mr. Stettinius is presenting his request for funds he should not request funds for food and argue that these funds will save boys' lives and discuss it in terms of munitions and finished munitions products. The whole presentation should be segregated for clarification so that the membership may know that they are voting upon items such as food and machine tools, which I hope the membership will distinguish as I go along with my argument.

Mr. RABAUT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. RABAUT. Am I to understand from the gentleman's remarks on this that the country is more interested in material things than it is in the lives of our boys?

Mr. JONES. I will answer the question if the gentleman will yield me more time.

Mr. RABAUT. It will not take much of an answer. The gentleman just made a statement.

Mr. JONES. I decline to yield. I am sorry. I have for my beloved chairman the greatest admiration and respect.

Mr. RABAUT. I do not want any compliments. I just want an answer.

Mr. JONES. I am coming to an answer to his question, and I will answer it fully, have no fear of that. There is an answer.

The American people are interested in winning this war and they think that lend-lease by the publicity that has been given to it means planes, guns, tanks, machinery, and equipment. This bill today has other items in it such as food. I think there should be possibly a consideration of whether or not other countries are riding a willing horse to death. I do not know, but I have asked Mr. Stettinius in several letters which I have sent to him for basic facts upon which to make a logical argument today and upon which we could narrow down the issues for a satisfactory conclusion, and I have been refused. It is all very well for gentlemen on the subcommittee to say: "If you ask Mr. Stettinius anything he will tell you." Well, try it some time. Ask him. He gave me 3 excuses for denial of the answers to 68 questions and I am very glad to have this opportunity to talk to him in public.

Mr. McCORMACK. How many questions?

Mr. JONES. Sixty-eight questions.

Mr. McCORMACK. How long do you think it would take to answer the 68 questions?

Mr. JONES. I may say to the majority leader that if he cannot answer those 68 questions, then, certainly, he is not capable of programing, buying, and of handling the job of Lend-Lease Administrator. Certainly if he has the administrative personnel to do the job of reporting what he claims is factual in the Lend-Lease report to Congress and in the hearings, he certainly has the material, the personnel, and the equipment, to answer my humble 68 questions.

Mr. KLEBERG. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JONES. I am sorry. Let me emphasize that some of the 68 questions related to a speech I made on March 10. I used the December 30 report of lease-lend allocation of supplies to the United Nations. I asked Mr. Stettinius for factual information and he told me in my office that he would get it. I relied upon his promise. Then he sends me a reply full of more speeches and I wrote him back, as a part of my 68 questions: "Mr. Stettinius, give me the basic facts." If it is argued that Members of Congress cannot have confidential information, my distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT] knows we have had many, many days of confidential testimony and I have in my files many letters marked "Confidential" that I have never given to anybody. I challenge anyone in this House, the majority or the minority leader or anybody on this subcommittee on the majority or minority side to show one instance where I have exposed anything that was confidential. If the membership of this House is asked is vote "yes" or "no" on a provision of this kind it certainly should have the basic facts in the hands of Mr. Stettinius in order to come to a conclusion based upon reason.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman challenged the majority leader. Will the gentleman state how long it took him to frame those 68 questions?

Mr. JONES. It took me about two and a half hours.

Mr. McCORMACK. Then the gentleman is a wonder. If it took him only 2½ hours to frame those 68 questions he is possessed of an ability that is extraordinary and amazing.

Mr. JONES. I thank the gentleman very much for the compliment. If he would care to see the stenographic notes on the questions I think the gentleman will see it could easily be done in a couple of hours.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I cannot yield any further.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Is the gentleman going to put the questions in the RECORD?

Mr. JONES. I would like to point out the difference in conception of aid given to other countries by Great Britain as compared with the United States. I will refer to a photostatic copy of the Soviet War News of July 1, 1942, prepared by the Soviet Embassy in London, and I hope the majority leader will remain here and listen to this because I am talking about basic facts now. They report:

> On June 27, 1942, an agreement was signed in Moscow between the Governments of the U. S. S. R. and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland on financing deliveries of war materials and other military aid accorded by the British Government to the Soviet Government.
> On behalf of the Soviet Union the agreement was signed by A. I. Mikoyan, People's Commissar for Foreign Trade, and on behalf of Great Britain by Sir Archibald Clark Kerr, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of Great Britain.
>
> Under this agreement the British Government agrees to insure to the Soviet Government deliveries of war material and other military aid, the deliveries to the Soviet Union of armaments manufactured in Great Britain or in the British Dominions and Colonies being effected without payment. Provision is thus made for further improvement of British deliveries of war materials to the Soviet Union.
> The agreement points out that the Soviet Government desires that all aid made by one party to the other should be on a basis of reciprocity. The agreement is retrospective and will be considered as having come into force from June 22, 1941.
> This agreement does not affect the financing of British deliveries of raw materials and equipment of a general character regulated by the agreement concluded on August 16, 1941.

To the best of my knowledge today, the agreement referred to in the last paragraph above is one that I quoted October 10, 1941, from the Department of Commerce publication entitled "Foreign Commerce Weekly" as follows:

> A payments agreement between the United Kingdom and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics was signed and became effective on August 16. It provides that the two governments agree to deliver goods to one another at world prices with contracts in sterling. All payments will be made through an account in the Bank of England in the name of the State Bank of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. * * * The account shall be balanced quarterly.

Any debit balance shall be discharged as follows: (a) 40 percent by sterling received by the State Bank of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics by the sale to the Bank of England of United States dollars or gold or by the delivery of platinum up to specified amounts; sales of United States dollars shall be made at the official middle rate of exchange for United States dollars in London on the day of sale.

I attempted to verify this information in detail through Mr. Stettinius' office and I have not received information desired from him. I now place in the RECORD a letter from Mr. Stettinius on this subject.

Hon. ROBERT F. JONES,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. JONES: Thank you for your letter of April 23.

You are completely right about our failure to confirm our telegram of November 11, 1941. Good business practice as well as courtesy to you should have made such a confirmation automatic on our part.

I have reviewed with interest the references in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD which you cited. (Incidentally, we do not have a librarian on our pay roll.) I shall write to you further on this whole subject as soon as I receive the current report which I have asked the Harriman Mission in London to prepare after investigating the present situation thoroughly on the other side.

With best wishes,
Sincerely yours,
E. R. STETTINIUS, JR.

These are facts that Mr. Stettinius' office should know and I should have had the complete data by the time this bill is on the floor for consideration.

Great Britain sells for cash, payable quarterly, to Russia, the same material, according to my understanding for which we are appropriating today.

Now, let me say to the gentleman from Michigan, I voted, since Pearl Harbor, for every item of so-called lend-lease made direct to the Army, the Navy, and the Maritime Commission and expect to continue so to do. I am willing and anxious to give to the Army, the Navy, and the Maritime Commission every bit of material that they need or think they need. I would deny no boy on the fighting front, fighting by the side of the British, the Dutch, or the Chinese, who are fighting by the side of our boys, the planes, the guns, the tanks, and matériel necessary to save their lives and win victory over our enemies. Let us assume that there is an American dump of ammunition right close to where British, Australian, Chinese, or New Zealand troops are fighting. Through military maneuvers the British troops are near that ammunition dump, do you think I would say they would have to wait until Mr. Stettinius gets an authorization through before they could make use of that ammunition, or from General Marshall, or Admiral King? Certainly not. Why, I would not even put it down on the books. I do not think you or anyone would question the use of appropriations by our Army, Navy, and marines for all on the common battle fronts. You do not need a device with the name of lend-lease on it to get cooperation between United Nations fighting forces, and I think that is the practical point of view we should use in approaching a vote on this bill.

I think the items in this bill are things that might well be paid for, as far as possible, with obligations of the several United Nations governments if they have credit available.

With further reference to the 68 questions, let me call them to your attention and let us see if they are hard to answer. In one of the questions I pointed out there was lend-lease material and certain products going to one of the richest concerns in India. I said to Mr. Stettinius:

Give me the full details of that transaction; let me know to whom it is sent; what kind of arrangement we have, whether it is charged to the British Government, the United Kingdom, or India. If the equipment is finally installed in this company's plant that has a capitalization of 104,000,000 rupees, whom does the corporation pay?

Now, it is treasonable to ask direct questions from these lend-lease officials concerning the value of this lend-lease equipment that expands the productive capacity of these private companies? Is that kind of information a military secret? In this country Treasury, Army, and Navy officials are renegotiating the contracts with the corporations of this country who have been expanding their war plants with Defense Plant Corporation funds. I insist it is a fair and timely inquiry. Domestic corporations must agree to pay Jesse Jones, of R. F. C., or to the Treasury of the United States, for the value of the equipment they receive. Is it treasonable to ask whether or not foreign companies receiving lend-lease goods sign obligations for them? Are lend-lease funds reimbursed for any funds paid by foreign corporations to United Nations? I would like to have answers to those questions. Would it take much manpower to answer that kind of a question in detail? We certainly should not conclude so in view of the fact that we are harassing every corporation in this country building various war machines for our troops to renegotiate their contracts. Who considers manpower in Washington when we are renegotiating war contracts? Certainly no Washington official. The people of the United States will be vitally interested in this inquiry, and I am sure, Mr. Administrator, that they will be vitally interested in more details in the days to follow.

Yes, you can get the answer to anything you want if you do not ask the questions. Now, the gentleman from New York, and the gentleman from Michigan, my colleague on the other side, said Mr. Stettinius was willing to answer my questions, but he was tied up with these committee meetings. He did not so advise me.

I am anxious that the United States bear its fair share of the burden of winning this war. I notice in one of the reports of lend-lease there is this general statement:

If each country devotes roughly the same fraction of its national production to the war, then the financial burden of war is distributed equally among the United Nations in accordance with their ability to pay.

There is not any mathematical formula to guide the Members of the House as to how much each shall bear.

Another question that I took up with Mr. Stettinius when he was in my office, was the question of whether or not good will, as a result of the present policy of lend-lease giving, or of lend-lease aid, from the Administrator, will result under the present set-up. Is Mr. Stettinius building up American good will, for this kind of materials for which we are appropriating? That is what I am trying to find out.

As of December 31, in the report of the Lend-Lease Administrator to Congress, there is on pages 36 and 37 a category in the table of the December 31, 1942, report, which covers the countries of Australia, New Zealand, India, "other British territories," and Egypt.

I called the lend-lease office, Mr. Stettinius was out, his office referred me to other lend-lease officials. I asked "who are 'other British territories' in this table." I was given the following list:

Aden, Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, Arab Shiekdoms, Bahamas, Barbados, Bermuda, British Guiana, British Honduras, British Solomons, British Somaliland, Canada, Ceylon, Cirenaica, Cyprus, Ethiopia, Falkland Islands, Fiji Islands, French Somaliland, United Kingdom, Gambia, Gibraltar, Gilbert and Ellis Islands, Gold Coast, Iran, Iraq, Jamaica, Kenya, Leeward Islands, Malaya, Malta and Gozo, Mauritius and dependencies, Newfoundland, New Guinea, New Hebrides, Nigeria, Northern Borneo, Northern Rhodesia, Union of South Africa, Nyasaland, Palestine, Sarawak, Saudi Arabia, Seychelles and dependencies, Sierra Leone, Southern Rhodesia, St. Helena and dependencies, Syria, Tanganyika, Tonga, Transjordan, Trinidad and Tobago, Tripolitania, Uganda, Windward Islands, Yemen, Zanzibar.

These 56 territories, countries, or possessions entitled "other British possessions" do not present their own requisitions. The British Purchasing Commission, I am informed, present the requisitions and I think earn their good will during this war with our lend-lease aid. I presented this thought to Mr. Stettinius when he was in my office on April 14 and he agreed with me that this was causing us some trouble.

These 56 governments are in contradistinction to the 44 countries in the report at page 8 which are supposed to be eligible for lend-lease aid.

I wish to point out to the members of the committee that lend-lease requisitions should be made by the countries for and in their own behalf.

Briefly, here is the main criticism, on which I think the Administrator will agree with me, that is, losing the good will through British presentation of requests. I think there has been some improvement along this line, but it has not come fast enough and certainly the present arrangements should not continue another day.

Let me say again that I am interested in winning this war and giving to the Army and the Navy and the Maritime Commission anything that they think they want for the use of the other countries of the United Nations that will help to save boys' lives. I will vote for all the guns, planes, and tanks the Army and Navy think they or the United Nations need, as I have done in the past.

I think, as I said on March 10, 1943, that the lend-lease transfers are in inverse proportion to the victories won. I think MacArthur, the New Zealanders, and the Aussies have held the line in the southwest Pacific in spite of the fact that they are the forgotten men of lend-lease. The long-suffering Chinese hold on and on, well knowing that lend-lease officials had a one-track mind centered in Europe before the Burma Road was closed. Now that the Burma Road is closed they must surely apologize to the American people with the disclosure that $158,000,000 is the cumulative total of lend-lease supplies for China. Bear in mind that the December 31 report showed China receiving $126,260,000. The differential of $31,740,000 is lend-lease to China so far in 1943. That ought to be comforting to the Japs.

Suppose the membership of the committee and the Lend-Lease Administrator put a table in the next lend-lease report of the Chinese, Australians, New Zealand, and American lives they saved in the southwest Pacific and the Far East.

It might be significant to point out here the testimony on page 5 of the hearings:

> About $1,200,000,000 of additional lend-lease aid has been provided from appropriations made directly to the War and Navy Departments and the Maritime Commission for finished munitions and ships.

The Army, Navy, and Maritime Commission still have approximately $43,000,000,000 for guns, planes, tanks, and matériel for the fighting fronts of the world.

Lend-Lease Administration is a pre-war agency. The type of materials they propose to buy with these appropriations are the type of materials that Great Britain sells to the United Nations, according to my best information and belief. Most of the countries can pay for these items. The committee has not had an adequate, specific explanation, country by country, for which these funds are to be allocated. Under the broad grant of power of the lend-lease law there are no restraints on the use of the funds. The Lend-Lease Administrator, on page 29 of the hearings, says:

> Well, sir, that is military strategy, on which I am an amateur.

He is sincere and well-thought-of, but by virtue of this admission I think ill-equipped for the kind of a job that ought to be done.

All aid that our generals and admirals say the United Nations need to save lives and win victory that contribute directly to the war, I am for. I intend to vote against this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, not for the purpose of entering into a controversy with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JONES], but to correct his remarks in the RECORD in some respects, the gentleman admits that he asked 68 questions and he referred to 2 questions on the floor. I heard only 2 of the 68, but I could see that it might take several days to make a pretty good answer to one of those questions.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? I yielded to him.

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. JONES. I should have been glad to have more time, but the limitation of time to 20 minutes kept me from continuing with those questions. I hope the gentleman will be fair to me. I should be glad to put the 68 questions in the RECORD.

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, the gentleman can get that permission in the House. I would be very much interested in reading the questions myself. However, I do not desire to enter into a controversy. I think it is a good idea for all of us to get off our chests some of the things that bother us. My friend from Ohio probably got a little chip on his shoulder several days ago against Eddie Stettinius. It is good for him to get it off his chest now. I know that he and Ed Stettinius will meet each other in the lobby shortly after this and will be shaking each other's hands, and that they will be most pleasant in the future.

Mr. JONES. I have the greatest respect for the gentleman.

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, the gentleman has.

Mr. JONES. I always have had; but I think he is autocratic in denying the answer to a question. I shall still be friends with him.

Mr. McCORMACK. Does the gentleman stand by that statement that he is autocratic?

Mr. JONES. I think so. I do not have the answer yet.

Mr. McCORMACK. I shall not even discuss that. All I want to say is that I have received assurances from Mr. Stettinius and he has given me a pledge to give to any Member of Congress any information of any kind that he can on lend-lease at any time, that is not limited by military secrecy.

The gentleman from Ohio talked about his being autocratic. The members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House, Republicans and Democrats both, unanimously felt that he made one of the finest witnesses that ever appeared before them when he testified before that committee in the early part of the year. Mr. Stettinius is a man who has made great sacrifices to come down here to serve and to assist in preserving our country in this crisis. He is a man who was chairman of the board of directors of the United States Steel Corporation, receiving $100,000 a year. He resigned that job. He is not continuing to receive $100,000 a year from the United States Steel Co. and working down here at a dollar a year. He terminated his connections with the United States Steel Co. in June of 1940. He is in the complete service of the Federal Government. I think the RECORD should show these facts.

I am not going to discuss this matter further, because the gentleman from Ohio is wrong in stating that Mr. Stettinius would not give the information. He will give it to any Member of Congress. I do want to state further that there is no man in this country who has evidenced a finer spirit of patriotism in this crisis than Edward R. Stettinius.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE. Mr. Chairman, the pending lend-lease appropriation bill deals with the prosecution of the war by all the United Nations. I am a great admirer of military strategy. I have confidence in the weapons we are using. I respect our military and naval leadership. I cannot forget, however, a weapon of World War I that was worth great armies. It was the moral persuasion in Woodrow Wilson's 14 points. He spoke to the common people in the lands of the enemy. He spoke their hopes and their dreams so plainly that he wedged the German people from their leaders, and when all the people of the world were put on one side, fighting for the common ideals of humanity itself; the war ended sooner than it would have otherwise.

The fact that some of those peoples felt let down later makes our task more difficult today. That does not lessen, however, the value of that kind of a weapon. Indeed it makes even more necessary that the idealism of the "four freedoms" and the Atlantic Charter should be given a clear and unmistakable application in the policies of the United Nations.

We can bludgeon our way through to victory solely by relying upon the blood of our boys and the cold steel of our machines—but if we can shorten the road to, and the cost of, victory we should do it.

Now, we probably can count upon revolutionary assistance in Europe whenever we give the signal with an invading army. In Asia, however, Japan preaches the doctrine of liberation from the white man's rule. We like to believe that the Japanese are so clumsy and so cruel that in time the peoples of the lands she occupies will rise up against her. We hope she is making a bad job of civil and military administration. We cannot count upon that, however; and we must do more than wait. Nothing in the situation gives us any reason to think that Japan will collapse. Nothing in the picture gives us any reason to think that the Philippines and the Americans in the Philippines will ever be free again unless we free them.

Everywhere men speak of the great population of China and India, of the manpower that is there. Everyone knows that China needs guns and ammunition, and tanks, and perhaps above all, air power, air power in that overwhelming degree of superiority which paved the way for the success in Tunisia.

We are told that there are 2,000,000 soldiers of the British Empire in India and we are also told that only fifty or sixty thousand Japanese hold the Burma Road. It is no wonder that a distinguished Member of the United States Senate has called for action to throw those Japanese out of Burma and reopen a way to take the supplies into China, where we would have the land bases necessary for successful operations against Japan.

Now, then, why do fifty or sixty thousand Japanese soldiers stand off an army of 2,000,000, or even 1,000,000, in India?

Most of those Empire soldiers in India are men of India. They wrote a notable chapter in the victories of World War I. Why are they inactive today?

No man can be sure of an answer under the limited and censored conditions of communication and information today. But I, for one, cannot escape the thought that the probable reason is that the people of India do not feel that this is their war. Indeed, I cannot escape the feeling that too many people of India feel that the promises made them during World War I have not been fulfilled, and that they simply are not going to fight for the perpetuity of an empire in which they are not accorded the voice and the freedom which they believe is rightfully theirs.

The bill before us proposes to make available more than $6,000,000,000 worth of additional lend-lease goods. It is a mighty amount of money to throw into the conflict. But it seems to me that if there could be put into the conflict at this time the complete productive capacity of India, our efforts in this bill would be insignificant in comparison.

Indeed, if, through the efforts of that portion of the British Empire which is India, the Burma routes to China could be reopened, the effectiveness of all of our lend-lease efforts would be multiplied many times over.

I recognize that I am speaking on a subject which has a good deal of official taboo. What I say has been prompted by nobody. It comes only out of my earnest conviction that if the people of India could feel that the high idealism of the "four freedoms" and the Atlantic Charter were real for them, they would put all of their energies and efforts behind the war as they would in a war for freedom itself. In fact, it would become the great cause by which the people of India would come to a place of sovereignty and domain status within the British Empire alongside of other great parts of that great Commonwealth.

I know that men say, "Oh, those things must be put off until the war is over." That kind of counsel was the counsel which Lincoln spurned in the Civil War. You will recall that when Lincoln proposed to issue the Emancipation Proclamation, many of his advisers counselled against it. Lincoln saw, however, that nothing would write the human purposes of the war into reality as much as the issuance of that proclamation—yes, while the war was on.

Some of you must have been impressed as I was impressed by that statement which appeared on the back page of the Washington Post, May 19, under the caption "India." I quote:

> Now the eyes of the world are on India because India is the key to victory over Japan.
>
> To defeat Japan we need China—a China that is not simply resisting heroically but is fighting offensively.
>
> To sustain China we need Burma.
>
> To regain Burma we need India.
>
> To mobilize India fully we need to free the imprisoned democratic leaders of the Indian people who alone can arouse them to action for victory.
>
> India's millions want the opportunity to fight for freedom. If only a fraction of India's vast manpower and resources are in action today, it is because Indians—like other men—can fight for freedom only if they are themselves free.
>
> We—the United Nations—must break the political deadlock in India which is a repudiation of all we are fighting for.
> Now—while President and Prime Minister are talking face to face—is the time to set in motion the machinery that will mediate the problem, translate freedom from a word to an act, and give all Asiatic peoples the essential motivation they lack today; faith in our profession of the "four freedoms" of all people.

Not one person of the many names signed to the declaration has spoken to me about this subject. I know nothing about the Indian League of America save what was given in that page advertisement.

But, I too believe that now is the time to face this problem. To defeat Japan we need China. To sustain China we need Burma. To regain Burma we need India—India with the full strength of that great country freely enlisted in a battle for the freedom of the world; enlisted in a cause where the "four freedoms" and the Atlantic Charter are not words, but indeed the very weapons of victory.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG].

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, I was quite surprised a moment ago to hear my distinguished friend from Ohio say some things that were completely wrong, in my conception and knowledge.

Mr. JONES rose.

Mr. KLEBERG. The gentleman refused to yield to me, and I cannot yield in the 3 minutes I have.

The remarks were made directly at the administration of Lend-Lease and its Administrator. I have known Ed Stettinius a long time. He has never failed to answer any inquiry I have addressed to him. It is true I have never asked him to divulge a military secret. I repeat that my surprise has occasioned in me a desire to say just one or two things about Lend-Lease and its Administrator. My opinion is that in the entire Government set-up, and it is of a pretty good size, probably the Lend-Lease Administration is run more on the American way than any other agency of the Government. I have had occasion to deal with most of them, and I am sure the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JONES] if he will recall the many inquiries that he must have made of the Lend-Lease Administration and the courteous answers that he received, will find that probably the Administrator, with reference to the questions that he has in mind, has not had opportunity to reply, or at least can give some really definite and good and sufficient reason for not having done so. I think it only fair that the gentleman from Ohio should permit the Administrator to furnish him with these reasons, and then I think that he would be very glad to retract some of the rather unfortunate inferences in the statement that he made.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BREHM].

Mr. BREHM. Mr. Chairman, I am in no way apologizing for my vote against the extension of lend-lease in its present form some 3 months ago.

I felt then and I still feel today that any measure which in my opinion will have such a far-reaching effect upon our social and economic life as this measure undoubtedly will have should have been then, and even now, taken out of politics before this Congress was called upon to vote.

The vote asking for extension of lend-lease was brought up, by those who are responsible for our legislative program, 4 months before the present act would have expired, and while there was still sufficient funds available to guarantee its continuation during those 4 months.

There is no doubt in my mind but what this was a smart political move on the part of those who feared that if the extension was asked for at the same time an additional eight or ten billion for its existence was requested—and that is the amount Mr. Stettinius has said he would request—that the vote for its extension might not have been as overwhelming as desired.

No one objects to the basic principle of aiding our fighting allies, but I for one do object with all my energy to scattering our resources among some thirty-odd nations at the expense of some of our own American soldiers, as well as our own citizens here in America.

I have never refused to feed a panhandler who has called at my house, but I have never felt so magnanimous as to give him all of the white meat and give my own family the part which goes over the fence last, just because I feared that it might offend him and that he might not come back for more.

I also feel that when the sordid details and the ramifications of this huge spending program are some day brought into the light of day that the Teapot Dome scandal will resemble a Sunday-school picnic in comparison.

Now, in spite of my own personal feelings in the matter, I intend to go along with this additional appropriation. I attempted by my vote to stay its extension until it had been amended, but I failed. Therefore, since by an act of this Congress it will be in operation for another 12 months, far be it from me to be accused of putting even one stone in the road to impede any tentacle which might contribute even remotely to the war effort.

I only pray that more supplies will reach our own boys so that I will not hear from the lips of wounded soldiers, who have returned from Africa and the south Pacific, the condemnation of their Government which I have heard because they were bypassed in favor of some of those who would take our Government over tomorrow if the opportunity presented itself.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL].

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Chairman, I hope my patriotism will not be questioned when I make the statement on the floor that I feel the welfare of our men in the armed services is fully as important as any lend-lease appropriation that we are making here today. Yet when I stopped to count the number on the floor a little while ago, during the most serious debate that should be devoted to this great question, there were only 40 Members here. That is quite a contrast, I say, compared with the number that the administration rushed in to vote against the Hall amendment a year or so ago when I proposed to give free transportation to the men in the service, so that they would be able to enjoy visiting home at least once a year and see the people they love, their fathers and mothers, their wives and children. I hope this House, before many more months, will begin to realize that we owe a great deal to the men in the armed services, and that legislation which I propose from time to time will not be referred to as "mushy" legislation, as my distinguished friend from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] referred to the Hall amendment, to give the boys furlough transportation. Before very long I am going to propose the doubling of the allotment to dependent children of men in the armed services. I am going to make a number of other proposals for the dependents of our boys at the front. I sincerely hope that the membership of this House will give serious consideration to what I believe to be one of the most important angles that the Government of the United States must face from now on. I refer to the treatment of the greatest armed force that ever fought an aggressor, the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps of the United States. I hope that everything will be done to see to it that their welfare is looked after, and I am sure that I am not talking out of order at this time, even though we are considering a $7,000,000,000 appropriation bill, which I expect to support, when I advocate that everything in the world be done for the boys who are giving their all for this great Nation and for freedom and liberty throughout the world.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MANSFIELD].

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. Mr. Chairman, at this time I join with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] in backing up their sentiments in regard to the Administrator of Lend-Lease, Mr. Stettinius. As a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee I can state that he was honest and courteous to us at all times, and furthermore I can recall one occasion when the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS] submitted a number of questions to the Administrator on the night before the final meeting of our lend-lease hearings, and Mr. Stettinius and his staff stayed up until 3 o'clock in the morning to get the answers to the committee the next day.

However, I did not intend to speak on that in the short time allotted to me. I do want to say a few words about China. I have nothing but the greatest respect for the way that lend-lease has been administered today, but I think that something more should be done to aid our gallant Chinese allies. I wonder how many people who are so sympathetic with China actually realize the desperate plight in which the Chinese find themselves today. They have what is known as an infantry army. They fight mostly with rifles and machine guns. They have very few tanks, almost nothing in the way of airplanes except what General Chennault has, and nothing in the way of heavy artillery. They have been fighting for almost 6 years against one of the most highly organized military machines in the world, and while the Chinese have been defeated on numerous occasions, they have not and will not be conquered. However, Mr. Chairman, there is a limit to human endurance, and you cannot expect this unequal struggle to continue unless we can give to these gallant allies of ours the aid they should and must have.

Some remarks have been made about the difficulty of getting supplies into China. That is true, but there are more routes than over the Himalayas into China, because we do know that an average of 2,000 tons a month of supplies are coming into China from Russia. We do know also that since the fall of the Burma Road the Chines have been building by hand, mind you, a road from Sadiya in northeastern India to connect with Chungking, the Chinese capital. That road is far more difficult to build than was the Burma Road, but the Chinese are showing determination, courage, and tenacity. They are willing to do all they can, but because of the lack of resources they have to have help from the outside. The Chinese have munition factories, but they do not have much in the way of machinery. The Chinese have gasoline, but not a great deal because of lack of developed oil areas. What gasoline they have they must develop from vegetable oil. The Chinese have also developed a means by which they can protect themselves against bombings, which used to come quite regularly against Chungking. But those people, despite their fine leadership, despite the inflationary trend which has been taking place in that country in the past 4 years, despite the magnificent resistance of the Chinese armies, must have outside help. It is up to us to do all we possibly can to get just as much aid to China just as quickly as we possibly can, because China is one of our major allies, and China is going to figure very strongly in our final activities against the Japanese Empire.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I agree with what the gentleman has said with reference to giving greater assistance to China, and I am sure other Members appreciate the very interesting and informative speech he has made. If the gentleman will permit, let me say that although China is still desperately in need of supplies and materials, information has come to the Committee on Appropriations that China is actually getting additional supplies and will soon be getting much more. The gentleman knows, I am sure, that all supplies that go to China now, because of transportation difficulties, must go by air, and that is an extremely difficult problem to overcome.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. I thank the gentleman from Oklahoma. I repeat, I have every confidence in the administration of lend-lease.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT].

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Chairman, ever since the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JONES] discussed his parable of the 68 unanswered questions we have had men from the majority side rising to the defense of Mr. Stettinius. I do not think that that should be an exclusive Democratic privilege. I want to join in the testimonials which have been paid to Mr. Stettinius concerning his highly cooperative spirit in dealing with Members of Congress. I do not know whether I am paying tribute to a Democrat, a New Dealer, or a Republican, because I have never inquired into the politics of the Administrator of lend-lease.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can give the gentleman some information about that some day.

Mr. MUNDT. I will be glad to have it. He looks like a Republican. He acts like a Republican, and I would be willing to wager a compressed-food sandwich against a horse-meat steak, which the more-abundant life of the New Deal has made abundant in Washington, that he has some Republican antecedents. But, be that as it may, and it is unimportant, I feel sure that if the gentleman from Ohio would break up those 68 questions into homeopathic doses he would have better success in getting satisfactory answers from the Administrator of lend-lease. I do know that when Mr. Stettinius was before the House Committee on Foreign Affairs he was extremely gracious, courteous, and informative in replying to the questions directed to him.

I might add that in the work I have been doing on the compressed-food program I have probably asked Mr. Stettinius 68 questions in the aggregate and have had answers to all of them, and I am proud of the way in which the lend-lease Administrator has gone into this new food-development program which today is rendering tremendous benefits in ship savings to America.

I hope the Members have read on page 8 the paragraph of the committee report dedicated to the concrete savings in ship space already accruing from the compression and dehydration program, and I am hopeful that when the quarterly lend-lease report comes out next week additional information will be made available along that line. I think we should give credit where credit is due. It is eminently due to the type of administration being given the colossal and difficult problems of lend-lease under the able and alert direction of Edward R. Stettinius, Jr.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in opening the debate referred to this bill as "a bill to bring this war to a more speedy and victorious conclusion." I perhaps have not inquired as much as I should have into the operation of lend-lease. I think most of our people approve of the program that was adopted by Congress to provide our allies, the United Nations, with not only war materials but foodstuffs and other supplies that they will need to bring this war to a speedy end. I am willing to accept the recommendation of the subcommitee both on the majority and minority side, and will follow their recommendation that this appropriation be passed.

If we are going to provide the United Nations with the foodstuffs they need, it makes it doubly important that we make the best possible disposition of every ounce of food remaining in the United States not needed by our own armed forces. I say with all sincerity that I wish we were making as wise a disposition of foodstuffs to our own civilians as is being made under the lend-lease program. I am compelled to say that our distribution system under O. P. A. is breaking down, if it has not already broken down.

I have before me a few letters and telegrams—not that I am accumulating them, because every one of them came to my office within the last 24 hours—typical of many letters and telegrams that I am receiving from men in the retail grocery trade. One of them that I will quote from is from the owner of one of the largest department stores in the State of Connecticut.

Another comes from the owner and operator of a very successful grocery store and meat market. These men are wiring to me, as I know others are wiring to other Members of the House, simply telling us their story of what they are up against; and all of them are reaching the same conclusion.

It has been said many times that it is impossible today under O. P. A. regulations for a grocer or a handler of foodstuffs to stay in business, keep honest, and respect and abide by the O. P. A. regulations. If we are going to have any food to send abroad under lease-lend we have got to take better care of such supplies we have on hand here in the United States.

I have this wire from the Hartford County Retail Grocers' Association:

HARTFORD, CONN., May 20, 1943.

Representative WILLIAM J. MILLER,
House of Representatives.

HONORABLE SIR: Retail grocers of this county condemn the action of the Office of Price Administration in reducing mark-ups to a point where you can only operate in the "red." "Recent action reducing mark-up to 1.19 on baby foods, canned or bottled fruits and juices, canned or bottled vegetables or vegetable juices."

Urgently request you to fight it out to get some sane, reasonable regulations, which all honest merchants can abide by. Ask the Office of Price Administration who promulgated these regulations, and what experience they have had in the food field. Seriously doubt if Congress in passing original act intended to grant such broad powers to anyone to tear to pieces the greatest industry of the world—the feeding of the American people.

Very truly yours,

THE HARTFORD COUNTY RETAIL GROCERS' AND MARKETMEN'S ASSOCIATION, GEORGE GROSSO, President.

Along that same line, I want to read a letter from a very successful distributor of foodstuffs in Connecticut:

I don't know that I should bother you again, but I do want to say that the condition which you mention in your letter of May 7 distresses us here at home terribly. I cannot for the life of me understand why this man, John L. Lewis, apparently has such a tremendous influence. When it comes to the point where one man is more important than our Government, it certainly is time that something was done about it.

As I interpret the situation, it was John L. Lewis that upset the carefully worked-out mark-up plan, and now they are coming through with a mark-up that we simply cannot abide by and meet expenses * * * some of them so ridiculous that they are almost funny.

One illustration: We now have to sell 2 bars of large Ivory soap for 19 cents. This soap costs us $9.20 a box of 100 cakes, and we buy it direct at that. This gives us six-tenths of 1 cent profit on a 19-cent sale.

Crisco costs us a fraction over 23 cents a jar, and we have to sell it for 24 cents; butter on an 8-percent mark-up; flour and flour mixes, 15-percent mark-up.

All of these percentages are based on the cost, and every merchant that I know of figures his expenses on his total sales, which, in our case, with social-security tax, unemployment insurance, and everything else, runs about 20 percent or approximately 24 percent or better on the cost.

I do not know if there is anything that can be done about it at this time. I am surprised that none of our merchants has written you, but that is one point where we are weak. It is so blamed hard to get the grocerymen together. We do have our National Grocers' Association, and they are working hard. In fact, I have a copy of a telegram that they have recently sent to the President, which may or may not help.

"There are one or two points that I would like to have cleared up. In the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, title I, section 2, paragraph H—

"* * * The powers granted in this section shall not be used, or made to operate, to control * * * changes in the business practices, or methods, or means, or aids to distribution established in any industry; except to prevent circumvention or evasion of any regulation, order, price schedule, or requirement under this act.'

"My question is, Are the regulations now being put into force legal or not?

"Another question—we hear a great deal about the Sherman antitrust law—in fact, many merchants have been fined under this law, which has to do, of course, with price fixing; and yet we are told that a certain class must sell at one price and another class at another, which certainly is fixing prices for each class.

"The third question: Isn't it discriminatory as well, fixing various prices for various classes?

"If some time you have a few leisure moments to advise me, I shall greatly appreciate it. On the other hand, if I am asking too much, just forget it."

I have submitted the questions asked by the writer of this letter to the O. P. A., but I rather doubt if they will admit that they are ignoring the intent of Congress. We do not have to know much about the operation of the grocery business to know that under these regulations it is impossible to stay in business. Certainly this Congress has a responsibility. We created the Office of Price Administration and if the O. P. A. cannot be administered fairly and the law we wrote fairly interpreted so that men who have been successful merchants over a period of years can stay in business, then it seems to me that this Congress should review, and possibly revise, the Price Control Act of 1942. Certainly we do not want to drive successful merchants out of business.

I also have a letter from the owner of one of the largest department stores in Connecticut that I would like to read at this time:

Despite the country-wide protest of reputable merchants and manufacturers, the Office of Price Administration has evidently insisted on the enforcement of their hosiery order. The modifications which they have granted are too trivial to pay heed to. The principles involved are definitely wrong and contrary to the intent of the Congress insofar as they attempt to change established methods of doing business.

Dr. Galbraith, in his radio speech of last night, asserts that a considerable saving to the American public will ensue. Definitely, this is contrary to the facts and is purely wishful thinking. Dr. Galbraith's background and inexperience in trade and mercantile practices unfit him for his present position. The hosiery order not only will not save the consumer money, but will definitely increase the price of the general run of rayon hosiery to the consumer.

The Congress should curb all visionary reform propositions of the Office of Price Administration, and, furthermore, should insist that the Office of Price Administration perform its functions along the lines laid out by the Congress, without attempting to reform business or change established business practices.

It might be well to remember that history shows that the German defeat in the first World War was due to the crack-up of the morale on the home front.

Mr. ROWE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Briefly.

Mr. ROWE. And the most of these people who are being put out of business are fathers of soldiers, just like myself. Would there not be a great deal more food produced if the American people were respected instead of inspected?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I have said I do not know the answer. I know that we have a very serious situation before us, and I think the Congress should deal with it. I am not using this discussion of lease-lend as a subterfuge to bring the question before the Congress, but I think it ties into lease-lend, because, after all, it is simply dealing with the balance of the commodities we have on hand.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman know that under this bill there is $40,000,000 worth of tobacco for the Allies?

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I have no objection to that, for I full well realize the value of tobacco to those under stress in either our own military forces or those of our allies. If we can send some tobacco to those people, and they get solace from it, whatever solace they can get, I am satisfied.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The gentleman has a very gallant record.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I use my share of tobacco, unfortunately.

I also have a letter from a farmer in my district who has successfully operated a poultry farm for several years. This letter speaks for itself and I quote it herewith:

I don't spend my time writing to Congressmen, but when they start to put me out of business it is time something was said. I grow poultry, supposed to be a war industry.

Had 2,400 birds last fall. Government wanted big egg production. This spring came a slap in the face, no feed for 3 weeks, just wasn't any. Finally came through, but the chickens had gone into a molt and production dropped. Had to sell half the flock. Feed prices went up anywhere to a dime a hundred each week and are still going.

Contents of the feed changed. Much more bran and cheap ingredients. Couldn't get oystershells and eggs were smashed by the hundreds for weeks. Oystershell boats being used for essential purposes, they said. Chickens are essential, but poor grade of feed was furnished.

The Office of Price Administration came along and set a ceiling price on poultry. Decided the price was too high. Price of feed didn't seem too high or the increased labor costs, equipment costs—take a look at the increases for yourself—disgusting, no ceilings there.

Chick orders this spring are only a couple of months off schedule on delivery and some are being canceled. Feed deliveries are all off. Read the enclosed letter from our cooperative. The present price ceilings in view of increased costs make a fellow sick.

Can you blame the fellows for quitting and going into defense jobs? I have had to take such a job to keep going. The situation is more serious than political chair dusters realize. We have had offers of 50 to 75 cents a pound black market and everyone knows the price ceiling has made this situation. Note the enclosed cooperative letter on poultry sales, 362 crates in 1942 and 104 in 1943. A few weeks ago only 10 percent was not being sold on the black market.

No one was kicking when we were allowed a reasonable price for our chickens and eggs and there was no black market. We would not kick if a reasonable ceiling price had been set. Premium wages are paid in defense industries, but in the billion-dollar poultry industry we are being played for a bunch of suckers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there are hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the President, through such departments or agencies of the Government as he may designate, further to carry out the provisions of an act to promote the defense of the United States, approved March 11, 1941 as amended, and for each and every purpose incident to or necessary therefor, the following sum for the following respective purposes:

(a) For the procurement, by manufacture or otherwise, of defense articles, information, and services, for the government of any country whose defense the President deems vital to the defense of the United States, and the disposition thereof, including all necessary expenses in connection therewith as follows:

Vessels, ships, boats, and other watercraft, including the hire or other temporary use thereof, and equipage, supplies, materials, spare parts, and accessories, $1,552,659,000.

Agricultural, industrial, and other commodities and articles, $4,452,623,000.

(b) For testing, inspecting, proving, repairing, outfitting, reconditioning, or otherwise placing in good working order any defense articles for the government of any country whose defense the President deems vital to the defense of the United States, including services and expenses in connection therewith, $259,348,000.

(c) For administrative expenses, $8,999,000: Provided, That transfers may be made from this appropriation to the consolidated appropriation for "Necessary services and expenses" to the extent necessary to reimburse such appropriation for transfers made pursuant to the Urgent Deficiency Appropriation Act, 1943.

(d) In all, $6,273,629,000, to be available until June 30, 1944.

(e) Each of the foregoing appropriations shall be additional to, and consolidated with, the appropriations for the same purposes, contained in the same respective categories of appropriation in the Defense Aid Supplemental Appropriation Act, 1941, the Defense Aid Supplemental Appropriation Act, 1942, and the Second Defense Aid Supplemental Appropriations Act, 1942, and the appropriations contained in the foregoing acts, are hereby continued and shall be available until June 30, 1944: Provided, That with the exception of the appropriation for "Administrative expenses," not to exceed 20 percent of any of such consolidated appropriations may be transferred by the President to any other of such consolidated appropriations, but no such appropriation shall be increased more than 30 percent thereby: Provided further, That notwithstanding the foregoing proviso (1) balances, unobligated as of April 30, 1943, and balances subsequently released from obligation, of appropriations contained in the foregoing acts for "Ordnance and ordnance stores, supplies, spare parts, and materials, including armor and ammunition and components thereof," may be transferred by the President to and consolidated with the appropriation provided above for "Agricultural, industrial, and other commodities and articles," and (2) balances, unobligated as of April 30, 1943, and balances subsequently released from obligation, of appropriations contained in the foregoing acts for "Necessary services and expenses" may be transferred by the President to and consolidated with any of the appropriations provided above, except the appropriation for "Administrative expenses."

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I take this time in order to pay my tribute to the manner in which the lease-lend fund has been administered. Lease-lend has been one of our most potent weapons in waging a fight for existence as a free people. First, the emphasis of lease-lend was upon arms, munitions, tanks, planes, ships, guns, and so forth. Now that a portion of the industrial life of Britain and Russia are again able to function and to take part of this load off of our shoulders, the emphasis has been placed on food. Certainly food is a vital weapon of war. At long last some of the members of this administration have learned that food is a vital and essential weapon in war. It feeds and sustains the armies and the civilian populations of the countries involved. Without it we would not be able to wage a war successfully.

Mr. Chairman, my main purpose in taking this time is to pay tribute to an honest, efficient, capable, and courageous Administrator, Edward Stettinius, who administers the lease-lend. We see in this man a shining example of what good, decent, clean, honest, and efficient administration can do in order to make a legislative program effective and in order to win the confidence and the support of the people of the United States. Mr. Stettinius has administered lend-lease for the purpose of winning a war as quickly as possible, not to further some social reform nor to harbor a group of self-anointed liberals and self-confessed distinguished intellectuals.

Mr. CASE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I will be delighted to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CASE. My friend from Alabama would not suggest that those other purposes have dictated the course of administration in any other agencies, would he?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I am not making any suggestions at all. I am merely paying a tribute to honest, decent, efficient, capable administration, to a man who administers the affairs of his office in keeping with congressional intent, to a man who does it with no purpose in mind except to save and to serve his own country, to a man who believes in and has devoted his life to preserving a government of the people and by the people such as was conceived by our founding fathers and which has been brought down to the present decade along those concepts.

Mr. CASE. I am certainly glad to have the distinguished gentleman from Alabama place emphasis upon those virtues which are too often forgotten these days and to place them where they are deserved.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I thank the gentleman. May I say further that we have found that a businessman, an honest, sincere, progressive businessman, can administer efficiently and capably the affairs of a governmental agency, and that he can do it with credit and distinction and without any ground for just criticism. This man deserves the praise of every man who believes in free competitive business enterprise under a capitalistic system, a profit-motive and a constitutional representative democracy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 2 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. DWORSHAK]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Chairman, I shall not dwell at length on the original basis upon which lend-lease was predicated. We are far removed from the day assurances were given that if America provided the tools—if it became the arsenal of democracy—our present allies would provide the men and do the job. The future will pass a dispassionate judgment on the circumstances which permitted these assurances, as well as upon the information available to our national leadership for the endorsement of these inducements. Suffice it to say that the memory of these assurances lingers with many of our people and that the memory will be the more haunting as we contemplate the comparative contribution in dollars and cents of our own people with those of Great Britain.

I am aware that in the actual theaters of war—in the field of actual operations—a joint venture, such as we are presently engaged in, requires a mutual give and take by our forces and those of our allies. Obviously this is necessary. However, it occurs to me that an entirely different condition prevails where aid is rendered by us in places far removed from the actual theaters of war. Great Britain has wealth, the Empire has resources. And yet the war budget of Great Britain is insignificant when compared with ours. Recent reports indicate that the annual British war budget is approximately $20,000,000,000 while our own war requirements are in excess of $100,000,000,000 for 1 year.

Why, I ask, would it not be possible to have Great Britain pay directly for repairs to her merchantmen and to the units of her fighting fleet which are provided in American shipyards? Why, I ask, would it be unreasonable to require Great Britain to pay directly for the sustenance, housing, and care of her men quartered here in America? Why, I ask, would it be unfair to expect Great Britain to pay directly for the services and assistance rendered by us which are not involved in any immediate contact with military operations, such as the millions of ounces of silver being made available for coinage purposes?

Prime Minister Churchill, and rightly so, has contended for the interests of his Empire. Can it be said that we are lacking in devotion to our common cause if we, with similar fervor and with equal enthusiasm, contend for the interests of our Republic. I yield to no man in my desire to win the war. I yield to no man in the prayer which I voice for a speedy victory. But I sense a duty to the country in urging that a comparative contribution be made by all those who will share in the benefits of the victory which will be ours.

The Prime Minister eloquently declared in this Chamber that during the past 17 months—

> We have toiled and suffered and dared shoulder to shoulder against the cruel and mighty enemy. We have acted in close combination or concert in many parts of the world—on land, on sea, and in the air. I am proud that you should have found us good allies, striving forward in comradeship to the accomplishment of our task without grudging or stinting either life or treasure or indeed anything we have to give.

The great British statesman might appropriately have referred to the contributions which are being made on the economic and financial battle fronts. We must not jeopardize our military cooperation or in any way impair our united effort against the Axis Powers. However, this should not mean that we must be unmindful of the hardships and sacrifices of our civilian populations. The Prime Minister has won the admiration and esteem of Americans because insistently and unremittingly he upholds and advances policies which are most beneficial to his Empire. Surely, the exemplification of these same characteristics by our own leaders would inevitably command the respect and admiration of our allies. And certainly such courage and loyalty would have a psychological effect on our own people and would be implied as a pledge that American interests are being given every consideration to which they are entitled in the whole United Nations' war program.

The distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, in his remarks this afternoon, declared that we want our boys to return after the war and that lend-lease operations provide greater assurances of this likelihood. American boys are willing to fight and to die, if necessary, to win this war, but when they return we must be sure that they do not discover we have lost at home the things for which they are crusading abroad. This Congress is obligated so to direct the financial affairs of our Nation that our Government will remain solvent. Our sons will not be content to return to a demoralized and financially bankrupt country.

During wartime it is not too difficult for allies to cooperate in the attainment of mutual objectives. But there will ultimately come an armistice and peace, and then it will be just as essential to have complete understanding and good will among the United Nations to insure a victory at the peace conference. Now is the time to clarify financial aspects of the lend-lease program and to forestall embarrassing developments which may have a devastating effect on the peace negotiations.

If lend-lease is designed to win the war, we must not permit it to lose the peace. This is something over which the Congress still has some control, if it has the courage and foresight to discharge its duties and to direct the fiscal policies of our Government.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I listened with a great deal of interest to the eloquent address just delivered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES]. As the son of an Italian immigrant boy who reached these shores nearly 90 years ago, I join with him and other Members of Congress in exerting every effort possible to preserve in the United States a government of justice, freedom, hope, opportunity, and free enterprise which the founding fathers established here more than a century and a half ago.

My primary purpose, however, in taking the floor is to ask the chairman of the committee a question. It has come to my attention recently, from a source which I consider dependable and trustworthy, some information as to the method by which the United States Government is extending lend-lease aid to our allies and accepting in return certain goods and services. I believe that information warrants the question I now desire to ask. I have been informed that the method used in lend-lease purchases is this: That when we extend aid to any of our allies, whether it be munitions, tanks, guns, or food, it is charged upon the ledger with a dollars-and-cents price, but when we receive goods in return from our allies, whether it be food, services, or materials, such aid is marked on the ledger as a credit, but without any price being attached thereto.

This leaves the matter in an uncertain condition. I do not know whether it is true or not, but I would like to ask the distinguished chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], what is the system being employed of extending lend-lease aid to our allies, so far as keeping records is concerned?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. If the gentleman will turn to the hearings he will find a full discussion of the matter. As will be noted there, the system referred to has been adopted and followed whenever lend-lease goods are delivered to an ally. On delivery a charge is made on the ledger, and whenever goods or services are received by us from our allies, a credit is entered on the ledger.

We are not always able to determine, at the time of delivery, the exact dollars-and-cents value to be credited. Many things that enter into it have to be determined. Unexpected deliveries must sometimes be made on short notice. Often the theater of action shifts so rapidly that accompanying inventories and other documentary material are delayed, misplaced, or incomplete, and it is impossible to say immediately what the exact value is.

Mr. DONDERO. Does that system work both ways?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. It does; and in either event, an acknowledgment of receipt is entered upon the ledger, and a tracer is set in motion immediately with the view to determining as soon as possible the value of the services or goods, and when authoritatively adjudicated, the ledger entry is completed.

Mr. DONDERO. In dollars and cents?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. No; that is impracticable. It was testified before the committee that the force of accountants required to make such transition in England alone would be prohibitive; but a full and complete and detailed record is kept in terms of commodities and services, so that at the close of the war they will offset goods and services in kind, and where that is inconvenient, they can and will be reduced to terms of dollars and credited to account.

Mr. DONDERO. I think that is the answer to the question I asked and should be a part of the record.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I am glad the gentleman has afforded an opportunity to place it in the record.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. Any defense article, information, or service procured from funds appropriated by this act or prior acts appropriating funds to the President for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of said act of March 11, 1941, as amended, shall be retained by or transferred to and for the use of such department or agency of the United States as the President may determine, in lieu of being disposed of to a foreign government, whenever in the judgment of the President the defense of the United States will be best served thereby.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: On page 6, line 16, change the period to a colon and insert: "Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated in this act shall be used for the payment of any subsidy on agricultural products."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, the question was raised here this afternoon by someone who came to the table where I was sitting, whether the funds contained in this bill could be used for the payment of subsidies on agricultural products. In order that I might make no mistake I referred the question to Mr. Stettinius and asked him if that could be done. I was advised that he understood that it was intended that it should be done.

If we are going to make any appropriation or to provide any authority in any way for subsidies on agricultural products, it should be done directly and not indirectly; it should be done where we specify in the legislation that we pass that is to be the case.

For my own part I feel that these subsidies are highly inflationary and in the long run create a debt which is going to be much more dangerous to the people than any temporary benefit that is handed to them as a result of lower prices resulting from a subsidy. I think that we should take every precaution to see that there is nothing passed surreptitiously that will in any way provide for subsidies.

The Committee on Banking and Currency is now holding hearings, and I understand that the hearings so far have not resulted in any intelligent statement on how the thing could possibly work out to the benefit of the country.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. RIZLEY. I have heard it estimated at various times by responsible persons that the incentive payments, or subsidy payments, that would be required really to roll back the prices and put into effect the program that is contemplated might run anywhere from $2,000,000,000 to $5,000,000,000. When Mr. Stettinius told the gentleman this afternoon that he understood it was intended to use part of this appropriation for that purpose, did he give the gentleman any idea as to the amount?

Mr. TABER. He did not. For that reason, I feel we should adopt an amendment prohibiting it. If any legislation is going to be adopted that provides for any such thing as that, the administration should come to the Congress and give an intelligent reason why it should be done, and we should have it in a straight-forward piece of legislation.

Mr. RIZLEY. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. If the gentleman's amendment is not adopted, it would simply mean that this bill would be usurping the powers of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. TABER. And the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. FISH. You might just as well abolish both committees, because this involves a huge sum of money.

Mr. TABER. I agree with the gentleman. I do not want to be mixed up in that kind of a deal.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I am in complete agreement with the position of the gentleman in opposition to subsidies, and I am in thorough accord with his opinion as to the futility of subsidies under such circumstances. But, Mr. Chairman, I fail to see where there is any possible application in this connection. This is an appropriation for the procurement by manufacture or otherwise of defense articles. This money cannot be used for any other purpose. It is not appropriated to pay subsidies, and if there is any question as to what are defense articles, it is stated in section 2, subsection (a) of the Lend-Lease Act that the term "defense article" means—and I refer to the only meaning applicable in the present case—"any agricultural, industrial, or other commodity or article for defense." That is all that can be secured with this money. That is the only purpose for which this appropriation can be expended. So there is no occasion to impose the limitation proposed by the amendment.

Then, to make it a little more emphatic, it is stated that the President may, when he deems it in the interest of national defense, authorize the Secretary of War or the head of any other department or agency of government—which would include Mr. Stettinius—to manufacture in arsenals, factories, and shipyards under their jurisdiction, or otherwise procure to the extent to which funds are made available therefor, or contracts are authorized from time to time by the Congress, or both, any defense article.

I think it is very clear that none of this money could be legally used to pay subsidies. However, I may say that in view of what seems to be the prevailing opinion of the Congress as repeatedly expressed in record votes in opposition to subsidies, the committee has no objection to the amendment.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. O'NEAL. I did not hear the reading of the amendment, but would that amendment go so far as to say that this Government could not subsidize some agricultural development in north Africa where food might be grown close to the base of operations of the American troops? I should like to know if the amendment would go that far. If so, I think it would be a most serious mistake to have any such amendment. If it is only for the purpose of prohibiting a subsidy in this country of the type we have discussed heretofore, I can see very well why it would be an excellent amendment, but if it goes so far as to prohibit any development of agriculture in other countries where our troops are located, where it might save millions of dollars in shipping and in food costs, it would be a most fatal blunder to agree to such an amendment.

Mr. TABER. It would not be a subsidy if there was a direct contract for goods with people in foreign countries.

Mr. O'NEAL. The soil we have just conquered is some of the most fertile soil in the world. Certainly it would be a tremendous mistake if this country did not go in there and do what it could to increase food production. I did not hear the amendment read, and I am not sure whether it does or does not prohibit that.

Mr. TABER. It simply prohibits the use of any funds provided in this bill for the payment of any subsidy on agricultural products.

Mr. O'NEAL. If that is what it states, in my opinion that would make it impossible to go into north Africa and start the development of agricultural work there through the support of the United States.

Mr. TABER. No; it would not prohibit them from going into north Africa and contracting for the production of goods in a straightforward way. It would prevent the payment of funds as subsidies, that is true, but it would not prevent the purchase of goods in a straightforward manner.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LUDLOW. It is obvious to me that the entire House is in sympathy with the purpose of the amendment. May I ask the gentleman from New York if he could not draft a phrase or two that would clarify the matter so as to make the amendment specifically applicable only to subsidies paid in the United States? I think he would then have an amendment that would be agreeable to the House. Would not the gentleman agree to that?

Mr. TABER. I would not object to that particular situation, but I do not see how there would be a requirement that there should be a subsidy.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes in order to yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE. Two questions arise in connection with this. The method of paying subsidies out of the lend-lease funds might very well be, in fact, I have no doubt it would be, about this: The Lend-Lease authorities would make purchases of the Commodity Credit Corporation. The Commodity Credit Corporation in purchasing the desired goods would guarantee to canners or others from whom the goods were purchased prices above those set by the O. P. A. to take care of the prices the producers may have paid. And in the operations of the Commodity Credit Corporation it has frequently been suggested that the subsidy program would be accomplished, so that it seems to me it is in order to put in this kind of a restriction without definitely curtailing the operations of lend-lease. I am entirely in sympathy with the suggestion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] that this issue ought to be clearly in the open when the House passes upon it, but it is not going to be, understandingly, if passed under the present situation. If it be true that it is intended that some of these funds are to be used for the purpose of paying subsidies either directly or by the purchase of Commodity Credit Corporation goods, then we ought to know the amount of that, and, to make the amendment effective, that amount should be deducted from the bill. It seems to me that we have reached a situation here that would make it difficult to legislate understandingly unless we have further information.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield with pleasure to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. My understanding is that the Government through its appropriate agencies, I think the Commodity Credit Corporation, has agreed to take over from the canners of the country the entire pack of certain types of vegetables, peas, and sweet corn, for example, at a certain fixed price, and then to turn over to the retail trade a sufficient amount for civilian consumption. The ceiling price, however, fixed on the retail trade is lower than can be met by the canners if they so contract. So, some agency of the Government is to step in and pay the canners the difference. In other words, it is a subsidy, and all the canned goods that are to be purchased in this country of these categories are to be purchased by the Government under some sort of subsidy.

Mr. CASE. I think the gentleman is absolutely correct.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Lend-Lease is helpless in the matter. Lend-Lease does not do the purchasing, does not fix the price, does not distribute the subsidy, but this appropriation must be used of course in helping the Government to buy canned goods for Lend-Lease, and under the policies of other branches of the Government Lend-Lease would be the only agency of the Government whose money could not be used in this subsidy business, with which I entirely disagree, while all other agencies of the Government would be free to do so. We are getting into a difficult situation. I am in sympathy with the objective, but I wonder if it will work in this case.

Mr. FORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Chairman, the situation the gentleman outlined is correct in some degree, but Lend-Lease takes the product at a price. If that price is lower than what the producer can put it on the market for, then the Commodity Credit Corporation steps in and makes up the difference. You might call it a subsidy, you might call it anything you want, but it is a fact that the Commodity Credit Corporation is attempting at this time to enable Lend-Lease to buy these products at a price they feel they can pay, and take care of the difference. We had this matter up before our committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, this question did not arise in the hearings or in the committee. Mr. Stettinius at no time made any statement on it, or any reference to it, and the information which the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has and his statement are the first intimation that the matter was under consideration. As I have said before, under the provisions of the bill, the amendment is apparently inapplicable, but the committee, out of an abundance of caution, is willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. BREHM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BREHM. I wonder what the effect of this amendment will be so far as section 5b of the original Lend-Lease Act is concerned, which provides as follows:

> The terms and conditions upon which any such foreign government receives any aid authorized under subsection (a) shall be those which the President deems satisfactory, and the benefit to the United States may be payment or repayment in kind or property or any other direct or indirect benefit which the President deems satisfactory.

Is it not in direct conflict with that, regardless of any amendment?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I appreciate the suggestion of the gentleman, but in view of the circumstance that particular provision is not applicable to the present situation. As a matter of fact, it seems entirely unlikely that the pending amendment is applicable. Under language of the bill no money carried by the bill can be used for subsidies. However, to expedite consideration we are willing to agree to the amendment.

Mr. McCORMACK. In other words, the gentleman from Missouri takes the responsibility for agreeing to the amendment?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I do so only——

Mr. McCORMACK. I want the RECORD to show that.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I do so only after consultation with and by direction of a majority of the members of the subcommittee reporting the bill.

Mr. McCORMACK. In other words, the gentleman from Missouri after collaborating and consulting with other members of the subcommittee, takes the responsibility of accepting this amendment. I want the RECORD to show that fact.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. May I say that the committee takes, and has always taken, all responsibility for the bills it reports to the House and for every amendment which it accepts on the floor. In this instance, I have conferred with a majority of the members of the subcommittee reporting the bill on this side of the aisle—all but one of whom are sitting within reach of the table here and I am directed by them to accept the amendment.

Mr. O'NEAL. Not unless it is limited, as I have indicated.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman from Kentucky agrees conditionally, a condition which I understand the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] will meet.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to amend the amendment by inserting the word "domestic" before the word "subsidy."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. CASE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, it seems to me that that raises the issue that the membership should know something about. If the amendment is to apply to all production, that is one thing; but if it is confined to prohibiting subsidies for domestic production, that is something else. The truth is that we do not nave enough information before us on the point that has been raised. It is evident that the program that is proposed to be operated through purchases by the Commodity Credit Corporation might be directly affected, and the purchase program of Lend-Lease might be crippled or otherwise affected. I question very much that the House has sufficient information to pass upon these questions intelligently. It seems to me we should have assurance from the chairman of the committee, who will be a member of the conference committee, that the whole question will be thoroughly gone into in conference. Today we do not have the information; we do not know what amount is proposed to be used for subsidies directly or through purchases from the Commodity Credit Corporation. If we did, and the House favors the amendment, then we should deduct that amount from the bill. But whatever we do, I do not think we should go on record as opposing subsidies for domestic production and inviting them for foreign production. I object to the modification of the amendment as requested.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] that the word "domestic" be inserted before the word "subsidy."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CANNON of Missouri to the amendment offered by Mr. TABER: Insert the word "domestic" before the word "subsidy" in the Taber amendment.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment to the amendment. I want to point out that the effect of that is to say it is all right to use this money to subsidize foreign production but you are not going to use any of this money to subsidize domestic production. It puts us in an impossible position.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I will say to the gentleman that if there was any intention whatever to use any of these lend-lease funds for the payment of subsidies on agricultural products, in the sense in which we have lately become accustomed to thinking of subsidies, and on which Congress has lately expressed its disapproval, we heard nothing of it in the committee hearings, although we had very careful and very detailed hearings. I am sure that Lend-Lease did not intentionally conceal anything, but if that was the purpose and the intention, certainly it did not develop. Personally I would be much opposed to such subsidies, and have voted against them. I do not think this matter is very clear, the way we have it here, but I think there will be ample opportunity at the later consideration of the bill for it to be easily worked out in the other body, where hearings could be had and the conferees on the part of the House could take it up. I would like to see the amendment go in.

Mr. CASE. I have no objection to the original amendment going in, for the purpose of raising the question in the other body and insuring that the issue will be before the conference with the Senate, but the adoption of the amendment to the amendment would put this House on record as saying it is all right to use this money for foreign subsidies, but we will not use it for subsidizing domestic production.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I would like to see the amendment adopted in its original form.

Mr. CASE. Yes. I have no objection to the amendment in its original form, so that the question will be raised and considered as I have stated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the majority members of the Deficiency Subcommittee which reported out this bill are sitting about me here. I have consulted them and believe I express the opinion of all when I say we are willing to accept this amendment.

Mr. RABAUT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. RABAUT. I do not like the idea at all of writing an amendment like this on the floor of the House. This is a far-reaching amendment, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] has said. I am sorry that we do things in this fashion. It is true, it never came up in the committee; but just because it did not come up in the committee is no reason that it may not be a dangerous amendment at this time. I really object to the amendment.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Then all approve except one.

Mr. TABER. The amendment has already been agreed to.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. It is merely a matter of approval by the subcommittee on this side of the aisle. The question has not been raised before, and this is the first opportunity to secure the views of the committee.

Mr. O'NEAL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. O'NEAL. The Senate might disappoint us and accept it, and then we would be in a fine condition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. This act may be cited as the "Defense Aid Supplemental Appropriation Act, 1943."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Speaker resumed the chair, and Mr. MILLS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2753) making supplemental appropriations to carry out the provisions of an act to promote the defense of the United States, approved March 11, 1941, as amended, and for other purposes, directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TARVER) there were—ayes 75, noes 41.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present, and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently no quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 214, nays 96, not voting 122, as follows:

Mr. CLEVENGER. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. SMITH, and I therefore withdraw my vote and vote "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who spoke on the bill may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their own remarks on the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON]?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

There was no objection.

DISTRIBUTION OF FARM PRODUCTS

Mr. NICHOLS, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution (Report No. 477) authorizing the Committee on Agriculture to make a study and investigation of the present system of marketing, transportation, and distribution of farm products, and so forth, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, is authorized and directed to make a study and investigation of the present system of marketing, transportation, and distribution of farm products from rural areas through the various marketing agencies to the ultimate consumer, as it affects farmers, the various types of middlemen, wholesalers, retailers, and consumers, with a view to ascertaining, among other things:

(a) The effectiveness of the present system of marketing, and the adequacy of present marketing facilities, with particular regard to the protection of farmers and consumers;

(b) The effect of transactions on the futures grain and cotton exchanges upon such system and upon farmers and consumers:

(c) The existence of any practices in connecting with the grading, storing, processing, transporting, distributing, or marketing of farm products, which adversely affect farmers and consumers;

(d) The present and prospective development of the types and methods of transportation for farm products, and the existence, if any, of discrimination in railway freight or in motor-carrier rates on farm products in the various areas; and

(e) The feasibility of establishing an up-to-date marketing and distributing system from the rural areas through local, State, and national marketing agencies under a farm cooperative program that would provide facilities for proper grading and distribution, necessary storage, and for other essential activities of an orderly marketing program.

The committee shall make a report to the House as soon as practicable after its study and investigation has been concluded, and in its report the committee shall make such recommendations as it may deem proper, including recommendations with respect to any legislative action necessary to effectuate its recommendations.

SEC. 2. For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to hold such hearings, to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States, whether the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned, to employ such experts and such clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents by subpena or otherwise, to take such testimony, to have such printing and binding done, and to make such expenditures as it deems necessary. Subpenas shall be issued over the signature of the chairman of the committee, and may be served by any person designated by the chairman. Oaths or affirmations may be administered by the chairman or any member of the commitee designated by him.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

(Mr. O'CONNOR asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY] may be permitted to extend his own remarks in the RECORD and also that my colleague from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS] may be allowed to extend his own remarks in the RECORD and to include a letter to himself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN]?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM FOR NEXT WEEK

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the reques of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to inquire of the majority leader if he can inform the House as to the program for next week.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, on Monday, as we all know, the anti-poll-tax bill comes up for consideration on motion to discharge the committee, with 20 minutes' debate. If that motion is adopted, immediately thereafter there will be a vote on adoption of the resolution. Then, of course, the bill goes over for 2 hours' general debate and for reading under the 5-minute rule until the next day, Tuesday.

After that matter is disposed of on Monday, it is the intention to call up a conference report on the civil functions appropriation bill. A complete report has been filed today and it is intended to call that up Monday afternoon.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman have any confidence that the poll-tax bill will be finished on Monday?

Mr. McCORMACK. There are two parts to the legislative consideration of the bill. There is discharge of the committee and adoption of the resolution. When that is done then the 2 hours' general debate comes up the next day under the rule.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It is obliged to go over a day?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes. On Tuesday there will be debate on the anti-poll-tax bill under the rules.

Wednesday will be taken up with memorial services.

On Thursday the House will consider House Resolution 38, authorizing the Committee on Agriculture to investigate the present system of marketing, transportation, and distribution of farm products. That has been reported out of the Rules Committee and it is intended to bring that up on Thursday. Also a bill from the Military Affairs Committee in relation to the WAAC will be brought up on that day. Unanimous consent was obtained a few weeks ago for the consideration of that bill.

If there is any time left on that day and on Friday, there are three bills reported by the Committee on Immigration to be considered: H. R. 1291, to amend the Nationality Act of 1940; H. R. 1295, to amend the Nationality Act of 1940 to preserve the residence for naturalization purposes of certain aliens serving in the armed forces of our allies; and also H. R. 1941, to permit naturalization of certain persons not citizens whose sons or daughters are serving in the armed forces of the United States.

Mr. GREEN. Do either of those bills pertain to the Chinese?

Mr. McCORMACK. No.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. May I ask the majority leader, is it the purpose of the leadership to be in session on Memorial Day, May 31?

Mr. McCORMACK. Before answering that, may I say that a conference is going on now on the tax bill. With the exception of Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, those days being definitely set aside for the consideration of certain bills, there would have to be taken into consideration the fact that action may have to be taken on the tax bill that is now pending in conference. I want it understood by the House that will have priority of consideration.

Mr. McCORMACK. I have not consulted with the Speaker or my distinguished friend from Massachusetts as to whether the House should meet on Memorial Day or not; I have no definite comment to make.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I think the Members of the House would like to know at the earliest possible moment whether the House is to meet on Memorial Day, ir order to enable them to arrange such speaking engagements as they may have.

Mr. McCORMACK. So far as I am personally concerned, I think that is such an important day in the life of our Nation, so intimately connected with honoring the dead who have served in our various wars, and of particular significance at this time with the war on, that it might be well for the Congress of the United States to honor the heroes of the various wars in which the country has engaged by not sitting on that date.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. I wonder if the majority leader can inform us concerning the antistrike bill which has been reported unanimously by the Committee on Military Affairs and on which a rule has been granted; when will it come up for consideration?

Mr. McCORMACK. As far as my program for next week is concerned, it is not on the program. After the rule is out for 7 legislative days any member of the Rules Committee can call it up.

Mr. SHORT. But it will not be brought up next week?

Mr. McCORMACK. I cannot answer that now. As far as the program I have announced is concerned, it is not on it. I understand quite a number of Members have made plans in connection with a trip for the information of the House relating to war activities, and that is one of the considerations which prompted making the program for next week as light as possible.

Mr. SHORT. That is just the reason I asked the question of the majority leader, but the measure is of such vast importance and is so timely that I think the sooner we can bring it up for consideration the better it will be for the country as a whole.

Mr. McCORMACK. I will not enter into the question of timeliness with my friend.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday, following the disposition of the legislative business on the Speaker's desk, and after other special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday, May 25, at the conclusion of the legislative business and following any special orders heretofore entered, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MONKIEWICZ] may address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend the remarks I made today and include therein certain tables.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

(Mr. O'KONSKI and Mr. SADOWSKI asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein a letter from Dr. Townsend.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROWAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article from the Chicago Sun.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SMITH] is recognized for 20 minutes.

A FUMBLED FOOD PROGRAM—QUACK GRASS AND BIND WEED IN WASHINGTON CHOKE FOOD PRODUCTION

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, now that the so-called abundant life has shed its sheep's clothing and come out in its true colors as the rationing of scarcity, it is high time for all of us—not only those who hail from farming areas, but also and indeed more especially, those who seldom set foot off the concrete wherein no Victory Garden ever has or ever can grow—it is high time, I say, for all of us to look face to face at some facts which are fundamental to food production in this country.

Let me remind you that no baby ever was successfully nursed from the corner of a ration card; nor was any starving child lulled to happy slumber by the reading of a directive, however plausible the phraseology in which it is couched, nor how soothing the voice whereby it may be promulgated.

Today we face the stark fact of scarcity and impending malnutrition, yet we live in what is normally the greatest food producing country in the world.

During the last recess, it was my privilege to meet and talk again with many of the farmers of southeast Wisconsin, one of the finest agricultural areas in the United States, and, for that matter, the world. In spite of lack of labor, lack of farm machinery, lack of fertilizer, and other obstacles to maximum production, they assured me of their best efforts to produce the necessary feed for livestock and food for human beings so essential to winning the war.

Their fields in many instances, they told me, were ready to plant, but they did not have needed new machines for planting and seeding. Many of them had permits to buy new farm machines but did not know when delivery would be made.

They could not understand why it was so difficult to obtain machinery, especially when they are so short of labor. At the last minute, many of them were forced to change their production plans because they knew not what to depend upon in the way of new equipment.

Some had to give up their hemp contracts, because they could not obtain necessary fertilizer grain drills; others had to reduce corn acreage because they were not certain of obtaining cultivators.

The information given me on lack of farm machinery was so surprising—in a few cases, so startling—that I have investigated further in other States as well as Wisconsin, also right here in Washington, in addition to a considerable study over the last 3 months of the farm-machinery situation.

To date, Mr. Speaker, the authorities in Washington have taken only a few halting steps to correct the mistakes made in L–170, the limitation order so drastically limiting the manufacture of new farm machines and of repair parts so important to satisfactory use of implements already on the farm.

While much has been said about the lack of farm machinery, not yet has sufficient emphasis been placed publicly on the almost unbelievable blunders made in rationing the pitifully small quantity of new machines to be manufactured for 1943. Again it is the old, old story—too little and too late.

Do you know that completed farm machinery, ready for use, has stood in the warehouses collecting dust for months, with farmers begging for new equipment?

Before discussing the failure of the U. S. D. A. in rationing farm machinery, I want to pay tribute to the farmers of this country—in Wisconsin and in all other States of the Union.

Farmers have lost much of their competent help. More is being lost. On tens of thousands of farms, farm machinery would alleviate the labor situation if farm machinery were available in sufficient quantity. Farmers are planting crops, which at this time they do not know how they can harvest. However, they are taking a chance, in the hope that somehow, someway, they will be able to save the crops when grown.

In this war, as in all wars this country has ever been engaged in, farmers' sons were among the first to volunteer. With skilled help largely gone to the armed services, to war plants, and to shipyards, farmers once retired are returning from village, town, and city, to active duty on the farm.

Farmers' wives, the young children, and in many instances, the aged grandfather and grandmother all help out as best they can in agricultural production.

The physical weaknesses of old age, and the inexperience of youth, will not hold them back. Too many, especially the older people, will overtax their strength. They will become war casualties in the fight for food, just as their sons and grandsons will be casualties on the field of battle.

This year, as last, farmers will be working 60, 70, and 80 hours a week. The farmers of this country do not indulge in slow-downs; cows will not wait nor will the crops. There is no pegged production on a farm. Farmers will produce food in quantity in spite of all obstacles. They would like to produce more, and could do so if we did our duty here in Washington.

Yes, the farmer, universally, works hours unknown in the cities. The farmer appreciates the importance of food, if Washington does not. His sons, brothers, nephews, cousins, and younger friends are offering their lives on land, sea, and in the air, that we might enjoy freedom at home.

Their boys are flying planes, operating tanks, and ships; firing rifles, machine guns, and cannon in North Africa, the Solomon Islands, New Guinea, Australia, Europe, and Asia, also on the seven seas. Their boys, as well as the people back home, and our allies to a large extent, must be fed by food grown on American farms. With the march on Berlin, Rome, and Toyko the responsibility of feeding the undernourished and already starving civilians of now-occupied countries will fall upon American farmers.

With all due credit to the A. E. F. in Europe a quarter of a century ago—and I was one of the boys who fought in the fields of France—hunger, more especially of the civilian population had much to do with bringing Germany to her knees.

The boys on Bataan were forced to surrender April 9, 1942, now a little over a year ago, because they lacked sufficient food. They were short of quinine, guns, ammunition, and especially planes. But the end came when it did from physical exhaustion resulting from lack of food.

Yes; I agree with you: History records that starved armies and hungry nations do not win battles or wars.

The farmer, gentlemen, is going to do his utmost to produce the food required by the people at home, the armed forces, and our allies, in spite of all obstacles, man-made or from natural causes.

The least we can do is to make certain that unnecessary difficulties, arising from ignorance, mental obsession, or willful disregard of the facts, are minimized here in Washington.

And what have we done about farm machinery? Before giving you some figures on the measure of our bungling in that connection I want to clear up one clouded concept of farm buying. Many people here in Washington, some of them unfortunately in positions of power, harbor the quaint and utterly false notion that farmers buy new machines because they can afford to. They think that tractors are bought from the same motive as Easter hats; that farmers get new manure spreaders for the same reasons that most folks, farm and city alike, get new-model cars.

The idea alone is enough to brand its possessor as utterly ignorant of farming and of farmers. Because farming is a way of life as well as industry, every item of farm equipment competes with a host of other things the farmer and all of his family want. If the farmer wants a new tractor, three others of the family would rather have a new car. If he thinks of buying a hay baler, they all vote to install a bathroom. Very often the farmer himself leans more to the lure of modern living than to the latest in modern farming—and who among us shall cast a stone at him for that? If Jesse Jones could see no need for a stock pile of rubber or of plants to produce synthetic substitutes, how could Bill Brown out in the hinterland have seen the need for a stock pile of plows and planters?

Until recently, one of the worst and most widespread enemies of food and feed production was the bindweed, also known as the wild morning-glory, or creeping jenny. Not only does the bindweed sap the substance of the soil and starve out the cultivated crop, it also entwines itself around the growing stalks, choking them and dragging them down. So far as farm machinery is concerned, the worst case of bindweed is right here in the District of Columbia. Some call it red tape, others call it bureaucracy.

This bureaucratic bindweed took its time to flourish, flower, and bear seed. It went to seed in that incredible document known as L–170, probably the most horrible example of too little and too late in the record of this or any other nation during the present war. The best that can be said for this, the second crop of Washington bindweed, is that it was not quite as late in the fall of 1942 as it was in 1941, although the results were far worse.

For those of us who live in the artificial climate and air-conditioned comforts of this city, it is hard to sense the importance of timing in agriculture. A week's delay in planting will curtail and a week's delay in harvesting may lose all or nearly all of the results of an entire year's use of land and labor. Nothing in all nature is so sensitive as the reaction of plants to temperature and moisture, and even the lengthening or shortening of the sunlight cycle from one day to the next.

Under the efficiency of private enterprise, machinery manufacturing begins in the spring, a year or so ahead of the season of use. After the production schedules are planned, materials are ordered in May or June for manufacturing operations which begin in July or August. Shipments start moving in September and October. Only by beginning in July or August and dovetailing together the production of varied types and sizes of machines can factory capacity be used to the full and labor be kept steadily employed.

Every interference with this orderly, highly evolved timing is a waste of productive capacity, which in these times comes close to treason. Now, let us see how our bungling bureaucracy has thus interfered.

In 1941, the farm machinery industry was deprived of private initiative, its wisdom thrown into the discard. Everything had to await issuance of an edict saying what machines might be built, who might build them, who should get the necessary materials. That edict did not come in April or May, in time for proper planning of schedules and placing of orders. It had not come on July 1, when materials should have been delivered and manufacture begun. Even on November 1, which the bureaucrats in their dubious discretion had designated to be the official beginning of the farm machinery year, the edict was not forthcoming. Not until December 31, the last day of the last month, did the industry learn what it would be permitted to do for American agriculture during the year of which 2 months already were gone.

Taking the industry and its products as a whole, that edict, known as L–26, allowed for 1942 new machines aggregating an average of 83 percent of 1940.

Just why it was based on 1940, instead of 1941, is something of a mystery, unless it was that the bureaucrats wanted to camouflage the fact that they were cutting down the supply of farm machinery to about one-half of what farmers bought in 1941.

Farmers did not feel the full impact of this reduction in 1942, as the number of machines manufactured was augmented by a considerable inventory of machines carried over from 1941 by manufacturers, branch houses, and dealers. But, by the fall of 1942, warehouses, with the exception of a few items which will be mentioned later, were swept clean and serious shortages of several machines had appeared. The stage was set for the blow which was to follow.

So disastrous were the difficulties due to delay in release of the 1942 program that it was determined that the 1943 program was to be decided and announced in the spring of 1942, in order that materials might be secured and manufacture begun by midsummer. But, Limitation Order L–170 was not issued until October 19, 1942. Southern farmers were already in the field planting crops for harvesting this summer.

By October 19, the shortages in new machines had become a famine, forecast of what was to come to consumers of the food produced with farm machines. So desperate was the need of farmers for equipment to harvest their crops, that they were and are paying for old machines much more than they cost when new. Here are some typical actual examples which have been brought to my attention:

A 3-year-old combine sold for a third more than it cost when new.

A 3-year-old tractor which had cost $1,200, sold for $1,725.

A corn picker, 2 years old, brought better than 40 percent more than its price when new.

In the face of this famine, what did L–170 allow the farm-machinery industry to do for American agriculture? With Secretary Wickard invoking all the persuasion of his oratory to spur farmers toward new and higher goals of food production in 1943, what did bureaucracy do about replenishment of the tools wherewith food is produced?

It may seem incredible, Mr. Speaker, but L–170 cut farm machinery manufacture down to 23 percent of the 1940 average.

Whose idea was this? Surely not the farmers. In a letter sent last June to Secretary Wickard and Mr. Nelson of the War Production Board, the four major farm organizations joined in advising that new machinery made available should be at least two-thirds of 1940. Nor was it the notion of the United States Department of Agriculture. Based on data drawn from its extensive and experienced field organization, it recommended the minimum, the very minimum, to be 50 percent.

And now, gentlemen, we come to a significant coincidence. Early last summer, the Farm Equipment Branch of the War Production Board, counseled by technical consultants, drafted from the farm machinery industry, men fitted by years of actual working experience to analyze and appraise the machinery needs of the American farmer, also recommended as an absolute minimum a figure of 50 percent.

But, did the War Production Board heed any of these recommendations? It did not. It ignored the advice from the three best informed sources and obeyed the behest of the Office of Civilian Supply, chairmaned at the time by Joseph L. Weiner. The O. C. S. has little or no knowledge of agriculture and, admittedly, made no field survey to find out what were the actual needs of farmers for machines to raise the foods we now find so scarce. I am told that few, if any, of its personnel ever drove a tractor or milked a cow. It is headed by a man whose agricultural experience was confined to the sidewalks of New York and Greenwich Village.

Just how and why the Office of Civilian Supply was able to overrule all the other recommendations appears to be something of a military secret, or maybe a political secret.

A report of the Truman Committee of the Senate, issued as of January 11, 1943, called the attention of Congress to some of the difficulties brought about by the mistakes of the Office of Civilian Supply.

> America faces the grave danger of not reaching its food production goals for 1943 and 1944, instead of obtaining the increases required by wartime demands. The effect of the farm labor shortage has been intensified by the drastic limitation on production of farm machinery in 1943. Responsibility for this limitation rests squarely on the Office of Civilian Supply of the War Production Board. The Office erroneously regarded farm machinery as semiessential. In fact, farm machines are the machine tools of agriculture. An adequate supply is vital to maintain an increased food production.
> The American farmer must overcome tremendous obstacles in attempting to meet the 1943 food goals set for him by our Government. One of the most serious of these is the farm labor shortage. If the farmer loses his labor and at the same time is deprived of the machine tools which he needs to produce his crops, his plight will be desperate.
> In rejecting the recommendations for production of needed farm machinery made by the Department of Agriculture and the Farm Machinery and Equipment Branch of the War Production Board, the Office of Civilian Supply has gambled dangerously and unwisely with our Nation's food supply.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this indictment comes from a coordinate branch of the Government and cannot be said to be a biased report.

Do you know that last July, at a meeting of the Farm Machinery Branch of the War Production Board for final consideration of L–170, that a member of the Labor Division of W. P. B. told the assembled group, as he banged the table with his fist—

> There'll be no farm machinery limitation order issued until it includes a provision for concentration.

And there you have it—concentration. Yes; concentration and control. So, L–170 was not issued until October 19, with disastrous results, as the country well knows at this time.

Do you know that one Oscar Meier, of of the Office of Civilian Supply prepared and circulated charts to indicate that farmers needed but little, if any, farm machinery, when as a matter of fact they were desperate for new machines, as shown by their eagerness to pay more for second-hand machines than they cost when new, if they could only get them?

Yes, I know about Joseph Weiner, and Oscar Meier, and their responsibility for L–170 being too little and too late, also for the so-called concentration plan.

Joseph Weiner and Oscar Meier, the farm machinery saboteurs, are still on the Government pay roll. I would like to ask you and other Members of this body, How does that happen and what are we going to do about it?

But too little and too late was not enough for the saboteurs of American agriculture. L–170 proposed to concentrate the manufacture of farm machines mainly in the hands of small companies, and force the large companies into the manufacture of munitions. The concentration idea was borrowed from our British brethren, despite repeated warnings by those same Britons that it might not work as well for us as it had for them, due to drastic difference in conditions between the two countries.

This so-called concentration of the farm machinery industry was not even plausible on paper, let alone in practice. It overlooks entirely three facts:

First. The smaller companies manufacture a short line.

Second. These concerns build for and sell in limited areas to meet the soil, topography and crop conditions existing in those areas.

Third. The smaller companies have neither dealer distribution nor repair stocks outside the limited areas in which they have been operating for years.

Concentration was and is unnecessary hardship on established, experienced dealers. Everybody who knows agriculture, whether in the Department of Agriculture, in the implement industry, out on the farms, or in the ranks of the dealers themselves, agrees that chaos would be the result should experienced service dealers fall by the wayside. Our only hope of getting anywhere near our food production goals with overage machinery, patched up to run another year, is to preserve intact the genius of these homespun wizards of plow and planter, binder and baler. The service dealer is every bit as essential to food production as the manufacturer of farm machinery.

That brings up the question of what provision our bureaucracy saw fit to make for the patching up or repairing process. Just as the cobbler puts on more half-soles when new shoes cannot be obtained, so must implement dealers sell and install more renewal parts than usual, when farm machines cannot be replaced at the end of their normal life.

But what did our bureaucracy, led by the Office of Civilian Supply, do about repair parts? They decreased the 150 percent of 1940 allowed in 1942 to 130 percent for 1943. This repair allowance was measured, not by items or by tonnage, but by dollar volume. In the fall of 1941, repair parts prices were raised by 10 percent, certainly a modest increase for the advance in manufacturing costs. But it had the effect of making the announced 130 percent of 1940–41 average, authorized for 1943, approximately 120 percent as many items or tons as were available to farmers in 1940, before there was any curtailment of new machines or any war demand for food.

On January 29th of this year, the 130 percent of the 1940–41 average was raised to 160 percent but, as previously pointed out, the shift from weight to price makes this approximately only 145 percent of 1940. Once more too little and too late.

One more comment on repair parts, so necessary to continued use of farm machines already in the hands of our farmers. Why should there be any restriction on the manufacture of repair parts? I do not know of one single reason to justify any limitation.

About the only public explanation given for this obviously weird concentration program was the excuse that under it the larger manufacturers could devote most of their facilities to war production.

Without exception the larger farm machinery manufacturers are engaged in making war goods, but at no time has the manufacture of farm machinery interfered with the production of munitions of war, and vice versa. Recently, furthermore, many of their war contracts have been reduced.

The claim that large farm machinery companies cannot built in quantity both war goods and farm machines is not true. The manufacturers of farm equipment must maintain facilities to manufacture parts for machines now in the hands of farmers. They have the necessary facilities to manufacture both complete machines and repair parts in any quantity needed by the farmers, but they have been prevented from using them, to the detriment of our future food supply. The real reason behind this so-called concentration program was to subject the manufacturers to control and regimentation, of which this country has already seen too much.

Too many people in positions of power throughout bureaucracy apparently regard the war not as a fight against autocracy abroad but as a delaying action while autocracy and regimentation entrench themselves at home.

Many of us, Mr. Speaker, have wondered about the New Deal's approach to the farmer and the farm problem. A few days ago my attention was called to a column in the May 1943 issue of Farm Journal and Farmer's Wife entitled "All of Us." It points out the attitude of a prominent New Dealer, Jay Franklin, columnist, and cites a passage in his book, What We Are About to Receive. Farmers who are puzzled over some of the treatment they are now getting will be much interested, I am sure. I quote:

> The farmer has arrogated to himself all virtue and all knowledge; he has voted against progress, against civilization, against the city, against science, against art. He has made and unmade Presidents in the image of Main Street, he has exhausted our soil as he will exhaust our treasury if given half a chance. He is the great obstacle to human progress, the great threat to political stability. Sooner or later we shall discover—as England discovered, as Soviet Russia discovered—that the pagan, the landed proprietor, the kulak, is simply so much mud on the path of progress and must be swept aside if society is to advance.
> These are harsh words but they are justified. The American farmer as a political institution is a danger to our civilization. Some day, some leader or some party will be compelled to rouse the people against the farmer and crush him as an obstacle to the national welfare, as he has been crushed in every nation and age, which has experienced his predominance. The fact that it is good politics now to help the farmer is going to make it better politics in the future to injure him. It is a shame that he cannot be changed by less drastic methods, but he has taken to politics, and the problem of farm relief will become, not how shall we relieve the farmer, but who shall relieve us of the farmers?

Here, Mr. Speaker, is the reason for the concentration and rationing of farm machinery.

Bad as all this Washington bindweed is, it is not all that Washington has done to discourage and frustrate the farmer in his harassed struggle to feed the United Nations. There was an early freeze, worse than the freeze last fall, which damaged so many soybeans in several of the principal soybean States. Early in the fall of 1942, there came an order "freezing" all stocks of complete farm machines, no matter whether in the factory, branch house, or on the dealer's floor.

As you may have surmised, this fall "freeze" was only a preamble to a form of rationing against which the rationing advocates to be found in the United States Department of Agriculture and elsewhere were repeatedly warned. With that superb egotism which assumes that a bureaucrat in Washington can dictate the details of a business more wisely than it can be managed by the men who have spent a lifetime creating it, an order came forth decreeing that all the experience of manufacturers, branch houses, and dealers should be thrown into the discard. All the "frozen" farm machines, plus the number to be manufactured, were to be available to farmers only after making application to a county rationing board and being granted a permit to buy.

In the effort to regiment industry, commerce, and agriculture, it was decided to allocate machines by Government decree among the 3,000 counties of the country. Not even in theory does this look good, but in practice it reminds us of the way Hitler picks out hostages to face the firing squad.

L–170 was issued on October 19, 1942. But it was not until the middle of January, 3 months later, that the first county allocation directives were received by the manufacturer.

From that time to the middle of April allocation directives dribbled out of Washington. Many of them did not reach the manufacturers until after the machines should have been delivered to users. It was late in February, for instance, before manufacturers could ship tractor mold-board plows and tractor disk plows. Even after they received a directive they had to make a further study of requirements in order to know how and where to ship.

One result of this Washington delay is the shipment by local freight over much longer distances of a vastly increased percentage of machines thereby delaying delivery and adding to the cost of farm machinery.

The hay harvest was on in Arizona before the hay tool directives were received by manufacturers.

Some time after the first of the year, the rationing board discovered that county rationing by Washington could not be final, so they then permitted the managers of implement branch houses to sit down with the State war board chairmen to rearrange county allocations, to make them more satisfactory. This of course, took time and manpower, both of which are increasingly scarce.

Rationing brought many queer as well as unfortunate results. In one State, a certain manufacturer was allotted 200 more plows than tractors, and another company 400 less plows than tractors. One company was allotted 18 plows in a certain county and only 1 plow in an adjoining county. Another plow manufacturer was allotted no plows in the first county mentioned, and 15 in the second.

Machines have been allocated to counties where there are no dealer distribution nor parts stocks, and consequently shipment has not been made. In too many instances, machines accumulated in the warehouses until a better pattern of distribution was granted from Washington.

On the very day Governor Hickenlooper, of Iowa, told the Conference of Midwest Governors, meeting March 15 in Des Moines, that several thousand combines were to be found unsold in the manufacturers' warehouses, thousands of acres of last year's soybeans were still unharvested. Farmers needing combines could not buy them. A distribution directive on combines was not issued by Washington until early last month.

It must be remembered that the manufacturers were denied the right to deliver machines to dealers for sale until after allocation directives were received. Many of these directives did not reach the manufacturers until late in March and early in April, long after the machines should have been in the hands of farmers and in use. For one important machine, at least, no directive had been issued as late as April 30. Furthermore, directives covering the additional output of farm machines as authorized early in March are yet to be made known by Washington.

There is a distressing shortage of meat and dairy products. Rationing of these and other items apparently has become necessary in what was once the greatest food-producing country in the world.

Yet, because of the utter ineffectiveness of farm machinery rationing, one small company was unable to deliver several hundred hammer mills last fall, when the cattle feeders and dairymen were begging for hammer mills with which to grind feed and roughage to fatten livestock faster, to make feedstuffs already alarmingly short go further, and to increase milk production.

Other companies, likewise, carried over hundreds of hammer mills from November to the latter part of March. Think of it—these machines, when properly used, would have added thousands of pounds of meat and milk to the production of the last few months. Instead, they have been collecting dust in warehouses—all because of rationing.

With the coming of spring and the growth of grass and pastures, grinding of feed decreases. Not until next fall will farmers again be using hammer mills in quantity. So a year's time has been lost in the use of several thousand of these machines.

Plows which were on hand last November 1 could not be moved until the latter part of March or early April—plows that might have been in use in many of the States before the allocation was ever issued.

The movement of corn and cotton planters already made up was delayed pending an allocation from Washington.

Fertilizer drills were allocated to plain drill territory. So the delivery of drills to farmers was postponed.

In this connection, I wish to read from an editorial appearing in the April 17 issue of the Farmer, of St. Paul, Minn., regarding a warehouse full of spike-tooth harrows on hand in Minneapolis, none of which could be shipped a Minnesota farmer needing such a harrow:

> And so because of Washington bullheadedness, stupidity, indifference, inefficiency, and red tape, farmers are unable to obtain desperately needed machinery which is lying unused in warehouses. This is no way to win a war. Knowing that such things are going on, it is hard to speak or write temperately. In Nazi Germany bungling officials who hinder the war effort are sent to concentration camps, and some are even shot. Thank heaven, we don't do things that way in this country, but at least those responsible in Washington should have the good sense to arrange for delegation of authority to State and regional officials so that they can handle emergency situations such as we have this spring with farm machinery lying unused in warehouses.

The editor should have concluded by pointing out that no one in Washington can ration farm machinery, and the manufacturers greatly prefer to ship what the farmer wants, not what someone else thinks he should have.

I have no criticism of the men here in Washington who have attempted to ration farm machinery. Undoubtedly they have done all they could at a perfectly impossible task. But somewhere in this city is a group or clique insistent upon farm-machinery rationing in the face of overwhelming proof that such rationing is a dismal failure and consequently less food will be produced in 1943 than would otherwise be available. They persist in rationing farm machinery when proof of its failure is overwhelming.

The rationing of farm machinery for many weeks has been in a state of collapse. They deny the farmers necessary new machines they should have. They bungle the rationing of equipment so that machines and implements already built collect dust instead of being in the hands of farmers who know how to use them to produce the food of which we so urgently want more, not less.

For further examples of the horrible mistakes which characterize the rationing of farm machinery, I recommend the reading of Tags and Rationing Red Tape in the April 24 issue of Implement and Tractor, of Kansas City, and Implement Rationing Proves Fiasco in the April issue of Farm Machinery and Hardware, of St. Louis.

When the final story is written on farm machinery and repair parts, so vital to 1943 farm production, we will find nothing but a story of delay—

Delay in issuing L–170.

Delay in supplying materials.

Delay in recognizing the need for more machines and repair parts.

Delay in rationing.

Delay in shipments.

Delay in delivery of implements and parts.

Delay in the proper use of needed farm machines.

In the meanwhile, our farmers from coast to coast, in spite of all man-made and natural obstacles, are planting to their utmost, not knowing how they can harvest the crops when grown.

The least we can do here in Washington is to make certain that nothing is done by administrative bodies to throw unnecessary obstacles in the paths of the farmers striving to do so much with so little help and inadequate supplies of machines.

Mr. Speaker, every Member of this House appreciates the great responsibility resting upon War Food Administrator Mr. Chester C. Davis and Deputy Food Administrator Mr. M. Lee Marshall, who is in charge of supplies, machinery, equipment, materials, and facilities. It is the sincere wish that these men will get something done with this vital and necessary program. Already there comes a confession from these men that lack of machinery is the main farm problem and that the outlook for 1943 is not "entirely satisfactory," but there comes a promise that for 1944 the farm machinery program will be doubled.

To Mr. Chester Davis, War Food Administrator, it is suggested that at the earliest possible moment he take the necessary steps to discontinue all rationing of farm machinery, except from dealer to farmer, this rationing to be based on the number of machines and implements to be received by the dealers from the manufacturers.

We might also suggest for next year, no limitation on the manufacture of repair parts; an adequate supply of new farm machines; and at the earliest possible moment, no rationing of farm machinery of any kind. This year's experience proves that rationing of farm machinery, except possibly at county levels, is a complete failure.

So-called concentration of the manufacture of farm machines should long since have been openly repudiated, but certainly for 1944 that mistake need not be repeated.

The farmers will do their part. They will work twice as many hours a week as most men in business and industry. The least we can do is to remove the quack grass and bindweed of too little, too late, concentration, and rationing of farm machinery, which are choking food production. We can see that farmers have the necessary equipment with which to produce the food we must have for our people at home, our boys abroad, and many of our allies.

Food we must have, in huge quantities, but it cannot be grown without sufficient supplies of farm machinery and repair parts, properly distributed by methods proven successful by a 100-year-old industry.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday, May 24, at the conclusion of the legislative business and following any special orders heretofore entered, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HERTER] may address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] is recognized for 15 minutes.

ELK HILL OIL RESERVE

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, one of the greatest dangers to true freedom in America is monopoly control of national resources. Monopoly control has increased, not decreased, as the result of the war. It will be with us after the war in aggravated form.

It is, therefore, nothing short of alarming to discover that last November an agreement was entered into between the United States Government generally and the Navy specifically with the Standard Oil Co whereby the Standard Oil Co. was given the exclusive right and privilege of developing the Elk Hills Navy oil reserve in California. This is the largest oil reserve in the world, except only the one in Arabia.

It is true that approximately one-third of the lands in the Elk Hills field belonged to the Standard Oil Co. prior to the signing of this contract and that those lands are deeded to the Government under its terms. In return for this, however, the Standard Oil Co. not only receives a monopoly of the right to develop and market all the oil in this whole great reserve but it receives other concessions of the most far-reaching nature.

Under the terms of this contract, the United States Navy and the Standard Oil Co. are to share both the expenses of operation and the oil derived therefrom on the basis of the oil-land value held by each. This would entitle the Navy to two-thirds of such oil and the Standard Oil Co. to one-third of it in the zone which has already been developed.

But the Standard Oil Co. is to receive for a period of 5 years the entire production, with no obligation to pay the Navy anything whatsoever during that period. Here are the words of the contract:

1. Primary period: That for the duration of the war emergency but for not less than a period of 5 years from date hereof, Standard may produce and take without current payment to Navy, but as hereinafter provided, Navy's percentage share of production from the shallow oil zone.

This will constitute giving to the Standard Oil Co. about 18,000,000 barrels of Navy oil, worth approximately $20,000,000 at present prices and will amount to providing the Standard Oil Co. with approximately $20,000,000 of capital at no interest whatsoever. Even after the 5-year period is up, repayment to the Navy for the 18,000,000 barrels of oil just referred to will be made in one of two ways. Either Standard will assign to Navy one-third of the one-third of production which, under the contract will belong to Standard or else, at the oil company's option, it can make payment in its own refined products at the going prices at that time.

In other words, the Navy is to advance to Standard oil belonging to the Navy worth approximately $20,000,000 for a 5-year period at no interest charge to the oil company, and is to give to the oil company the right to make repayment over an extended period of time in its own refined products, thus enabling the company to compute as a part of its repayment all the profit involved through its whole operation of producing and refining the oil. This $20,000,000 advance to be made by the Navy to the Standard Oil Co. is supposed to be for the purpose of financing exploration costs but it is doubtful that those costs will amount to more than a minor fraction of that figure. Furthermore, the Standard Oil Co. is to receive a royalty of 50 percent of the Navy's share of wet gas to pay for processing. This I am informed is several times the ordinary cost of processing in the industry.

Not only for 5 years but as to the future life of this oil field this contract provides as follows:

Disposal of products: That Standard will buy and Navy will sell Navy's share of production (except that taken by Standard under provisions of section 4 (b) hereof, and that taken in payments for Navy's share of actual cost) at the average posted market price offered and paid by the major oil-purchasing companies for crude oil and natural gasoline of similar grade and quality in Kern County, Calif., and at the highest price per thousand cubic feet (M. C. F.) for dry gas currently paid to Standard by gas-purchasing companies for dry gas in Kern County, Calif.

If I understand English—and I hope sincerely that I do not in this case—this provision means that the Navy itself can get no oil from its own reserve except by selling it to Standard and then repurchasing it. And this means, of course, that Standard will have complete control of the marketing and disposal of all this oil.

There is a ceiling on crude-oil prices, so the company is protected, but there is at present no ceiling price on gasoline fixed in the contract or elsewhere to protect the Navy or the Government, or the consumer, in spite of the fact that the Standard Oil Co., under this contract, can apparently develop and produce gasoline from this oil reserve just about as rapidly as it desires.

The all-important paragraph in this contract, however, is the following one:

Navy hereby grants to Standard the exclusive right and privilege, subject to the conditions hereinafter provided: (1) To drill for, mine, extract, remove, and dispose of the oil, gas, and other hydrocarbon deposits in or under said lands, together with the right to redrill and repair any wells thereon and to use all property thereon belonging to the Navy.

I am no oil expert and am therefore not in a position to judge the techincal details of this contract. But it is apparent on its face from the language just read that it gives to one of the largest of the major oil companies of America a monopoly of the largest reserve in America. It is those words "exclusive right" that are the meat of this whole bitter nut. Every independent, every small oil company, every competitor of Standard, is shut out from any opportunity of having a part in the development of this great field.

It is quite impossible for me to believe that we could not have obtained such production from this oil reserve as is required by the war without increasing the strangle hold of the oil monopoly upon the Nation. And I rise at this time to protest with all the force at my command against this contract.

I am informed that the naval subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee recently turned down an item for the implementation of this contract. That fact speaks more eloquently on this matter than my whole speech. I congratulate the subcommittee on its forthright action.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], be given permission to extend his remarks and to include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

(Mr. VOORHIS of California asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.)

JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. KLEIN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 122. Joint resolution to extend the provisions of the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937 for a period of 90 days.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 44 minutes p. m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until Monday, May 24, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

There will be a meeting of the subcommittee on investigation of restrictions on brand names and newsprint of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, at 10 a. m., Monday, May 24, 1943.

Business to be considered: Public hearings pursuant to House Resolution 98 by Mr. HALLECK.

COMMITTEE ON THE MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold a public hearing Thursday, May 27, 1943, at 10 o'clock a. m., on H. R. 2750, to amend section 353 (b) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, relating to experience of radio operators.

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold a public hearing on Thursday, June 10, 1943, at 10 o'clock a. m., on H. R. 2731, to facilitate the award and payment of just compensation for property requisitioned under the authority of section 902 (a) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, and for other purposes.

COMMITTEE ON FLOOD CONTROL

The Flood Control Committee will conduct hearings on flood-control reports submitted by the Chief of Engineers since the passage of the Flood Control Act of August 18, 1941, and on amendments to existing law. Flood-control projects for post-war construction will be among the most satisfactory public works, and the committee plans an adequate backlog of sound flood-control projects available for construction following the war.

1. Tuesday, June 1: Maj. Gen. Eugene Reybold, Chief of Engineers, will open the hearings with any statements and recommendations he desires to submit covering national flood control and the projects that should be included in the bill to be reported, especially as they are related to national defense and as they will be important following the existing war to provide sound flood-control projects and desirable public works. General Reybold is now on an airplane tour of inspection of the flood areas and will submit a first-hand report covering recent major floods along the Missouri, Arkansas, White, Mississippi, Illinois, Wabash, Ohio, and other rivers in the recent flood areas. He will be followed by Gen. Thomas M. Robins, Assistant Chief of Engineers, who has previously advised the Flood Control Committee during hearings and who will also appear before the committee and submit his views and discuss generally the projects that have been favorably reported since the hearings were conducted on H. R. 4911, Seventy-seventh Congress, first session, reported on June 19, 1941, which became the Flood Control Act of August 18, 1941. Col. George R. Goethals, Chief of the Flood Control Branch, Office of Chief of Engineers, will attend the hearings and will furnish to the members of the committee in detail any and all available information respecting the said projects on which favorable reports have been submitted by the Chief of Engineers.

The district engineers and the division engineers have furnished to the Chief of Engineers data and information respecting major floods since August 18, 1941, and particularly with respect to recent major floods in the various drainage basins of the country, which will be submitted to the committee.

2. Wednesday, June 2: General Reybold, General Robins, Colonel Goethals, other representatives of the Office of Chief of Engineers, and proponents on projects for the New England region including the Connecticut and Merrimac Rivers and the Middle Atlantic region including New York, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey.

3. Thursday, June 3: General Reybold, General Robins, Colonel Goethals, othe representatives of the Office of Chief of Engineers, and proponents on projects in the upper and lower Ohio River and tributaries, and on projects of the South Atlantic region including rivers flowing into the Atlantic Ocean and Gulf of Mexico east of the Mississippi River.

4. Friday, June 4: General Reybold, General Robins, Colonel Goethals, other representatives of the Office of Chief of Engineers, and proponents on projects along the Missouri River and tributaries and the upper Mississippi River and the Great Lakes region.

5. Tuesday, June 8: General Reybold, General Robins, Colonel Goethals, other representatives of the Office of Chief of Engineers, and proponents on projects in the lower Mississippi River and tributaries including the Arkansas and White Rivers, and on rivers flowing into the Gulf west of the Mississippi River, and in the Western Rocky Mountain region including Texas and Colorado, and in the Pacific Northwest region including the Willamette River and the Columbia River and tributaries.

6. Wednesday, June 9: General Reybold, General Robins, Colonel Goethals, other representatives of the Office of Chief of Engineers, and proponents on projects in the Los Angeles area and in the State of California, including the Sacramento, San Joaquin, and Kern River Valleys, and on projects in other regions and in other parts of the United States.

7. Thursday, June 10: Representatives of the Department of Agriculture and the Bureau of Reclamation, and other governmental agencies.

8. Friday, June 11: Senators and Representatives of Congress.

SENATE

MONDAY, MAY 24, 1943

The Reverend Jacob S. Payton, D. D., of Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, whose wisdom triumphs over all human follies and whose mercies are visited upon the erring generations of men, we bring to Thee our praise and adoration.

As citizens we acknowledge with thanksgiving our national heritage bearing the cost mark of the unbroken endurance of the brave. As believers we offer continual thanks for the faithful examples of all those who have made religion the bulwark of our liberties and the glory of our national character.

Hear our prayer, O Lord, for those who in this hour of trial direct our country's destiny. May they be strong in the Lord and in the power of His might. Attend those who are in their country's service through every peril and sacrifice, through all sufferings and hardships; and may they be victors not only over their mortal enemies but more than conquerors over the foes that beset the soul.

Hold in Thy sacred keeping the institutions of America. May her churches abound in true religion, and her schools extend their enlightenment. May her courts reflect the divine justice, and her legislative halls be known for the primacy given Thy statutes. And may the homes of America, with their family circles sundered by war and with their hearthsides thronged with anxieties, know the sustaining presence of the Great Comforter. May Members of this body fully dedicate their services toward making America a country worthy of Thy continued favor, and may their deliberations this day contribute thereto.

This prayer we offer in the name of Jesus Christ, our Redeemer. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. HILL, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, May 20, 1943, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting and withdrawing certain nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 2713. An act making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes;

H. R. 2719. An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 2753. An act making supplemental appropriations to carry out the provisions of an act to promote the defense of the United States, approved March 11, 1941, as amended, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 761. An act for the relief of Charles T. Dulin;

H. R. 1896. An act to amend sections 1 and 2 of the act approved June 11, 1940 (54 Stat. 262), relating to the establishment of the Cumberland Gap National Historical Park in Tennessee, Kentucky, and Virginia, and to grant the consent of Congress to such States to enter into a compact providing for the acquisition of property for such park;

H. R. 2159. An act to provide for special assessments for the laying of curbs and gutters;

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED DURING ADJOURNMENT

Under authority of the order of the 20th instant,

On May 21, 1943, the Vice President signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 122) to extend the provisions of the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937 for a period of 90 days, which had been signed previously by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

THE ABDICATION OF CONGRESSIONAL POWER—NOTICE OF ADDRESS TO BE DELIVERED BY SENATOR O'MAHONEY

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, on behalf of the distinguished senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], who is unavoidably detained today, I announce for the benefit of Senators who are interested that he is to deliver a radio address on Wednesday evening, May 26, at 10:35 p. m., on the National Forum of the Air, on the subject The Abdication of Congressional Power.

Let me add, Mr. President, that the Senator from Wyoming will speak at the invitation of the Washington Evening Star, and that his address will be a continuation of his long-time fight to preserve the right of legislative review of all trade agreements.

REQUEST FOR INFORMATION AS TO MEMBERS OF CONGRESSIONAL FAMILIES SERVING IN THE ARMED FORCES

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, the Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives have been circularized twice for information relative to members of their families in the armed services. If any Member has failed to furnish such information or has since become eligible for membership in the Congressional War Parents' Association, it is requested that such Member please notify immediately either Mrs. FRANCES P. BOLTON, Representative in Congress from Ohio, president, or Senator BRIDGES, secretary, of the Congressional War Parents' Association, and furnish them the desired information.

INSURANCE FOR MEMBERS OF CONGRESS

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I request permission to have inserted in the RECORD a letter I have received from the Navy Department, which contains information with respect to the manner and method of obtaining personal insurance for Members of the Senate and House who may, on official business, travel outside the country.

Civilians have been unable to buy personal accident insurance affording coverage for aviation and war risks, so the Navy Department has sought to develop a market for this insurance, and now two markets are available, which are set forth in the letter.

The Navy Department has suggested that I give the information contained in this letter to such persons in the Senate and House of Representatives who may be assigned to missions entailing travel by air outside the continental United States.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 22, 1943.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WALSH: I am sending the information hereinafter set out to you to be passed on to such persons in the Senate and the House of Representatives as should have this information available for any Members of the Senate or House who may travel outside the country on official business.

The Navy Department, upon finding that its civilian employees and employees of its contractors, assigned to missions entailing travel by air outside the continental United States, were unable to buy personal accident insurance affording coverage for aviation and war risks and giving the desired security as respects information vital to the war effort, sought to develop a market for this insurance.

There are now two markets available, both affording coverage in such manner as to reduce to a minimum the possibility of leakage of vital information.

1. Aviation Insurance Groups, Aero, Associated, and United States Aircraft now offer a policy affording coverage against hazards of air travel and war. The coverage may be written in a member company of any one of these groups but the risk will be shared by all the groups. United States Aviation Underwriters, Inc., 308 Investment Building, Washington, D. C. (Mrs. E. L. MacDonald, telephone, National 0709), will act as underwriters and issue policies and will be the sole office having knowledge of details of any mission. No information will leave that office excepting reports of premiums and losses.

2. The Peerless Casualty Co. (Mr. M. R. H. Garnett, of Marsh & McLennan, Inc., 1508 H Street NW., Washington, D. C., Executive 1825, special representative for this coverage) policy affords insurance against normal as well as war and air and surface travel risks.

Enclosed are copies of policies and application forms for each market, together with rate sheets and pertinent information concerning the securing and issuance of policies. You will note that in both markets a policy may be obtained on a world-wide coverage basis and upon completion of the trip and reporting to the insurer the details of the trip a return premium representing the difference between the trip basis and the world-wide basis will be allowed. This arrangement is made so that complete secrecy can be maintained concerning points of destination and departure.

Where the policy is to specify points of destination and departure it is recommended that the policy be held by the Government agency or contractor by whom the assured is employed and that his beneficiaries be advised that such coverage is in effect and the policy will be delivered to the assured or the beneficiary in event that a claim is to be made.

Very truly yours,

L. F. BECK,
Chief, Insurance Division.

INTERNATIONAL AVIATION ACCIDENT POLICY

Effective as of this date the United States Aviation Insurance Groups' Washington office is ready to issue international aviation accident policies in behalf of Aero, Associated, or United States Aviation Insurance Groups in designated companies of each such group. Inasmuch as many of the missions on which applicants for this coverage may be sent are secret or confidential and vital to the war effort, acting in accordance with instructions from the Navy Department, we are advising all concerned that the following secrecy restrictions are imposed:

1. Mrs. E. L. MacDonald, 308 Investment Building, Washington, D. C., telephone National 0709, has sole authority to quote rates other than as displayed in instructions for completing the application form, to process applications, to correspond in any way in connection with this coverage, or to issue policies for Aero, Associated, or United States Aviation Insurance Groups.

2. This coverage is available for civilians only.

3. Application forms will be placed in the hands of representatives of each of the three groups with instructions that a copy thereof may be given to any prospective purchaser of the coverage. The forms are not to be filled in by the agent, broker, or other representative. The prospective purchaser should be advised that the application is to be completed by him and forwarded directly to Mrs. MacDonald by the assured or his employer.

In emergencies not allowing for completion of coverage by mail prior to applicant's departure, upon telegraphic advice to Mrs. MacDonald, stating only

(a) Name of applicant;

(b) Amount, type, and period for which insurance required;

(c) Government agency for which applicant or his employer is performing services;

(d) That completed application with check in payment of premium will be forwarded direct and immediately by the applicant, telegraphic binder of world-wide coverage will be given. Such advices should not state points of departure or destination.

4. Checks in payment of premium should be drawn payable to that underwriting group of which the company in which the coverage is placed is a member.

5. Neither the home offices of the three groups nor any branch will have supplies, other than application forms, rate cards, or other details of the coverage.

6. Except as provided in paragraph 3 above, all inquiries concerning this coverage are to be referred directly to Mrs. MacDonald. Binders will not under any circumstances be issued from other than the United States Aviation Insurance Groups' Washington office.

Strict compliance with these instructions, which are issued in accordance with requirements of the Navy Department, will react in the long run favorably for the insurance industry and be of untold assistance in promotion of the war effort. These factors should overshadow any temporary competitive disadvantage or feeling on your part that this procedure is unusual and not commensurate with good service.

FEDERAL AID PLANNING FOR PUBLIC WORKS, ETC., IN POST-WAR PERIOD

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following communication from the President of the United States, which was read by the legislative clerk, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, May 22, 1943.

Hon. HENRY A. WALLACE,
President of the Senate.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: It has been more than 2 years since I first called the attention of the Congress to the need for preparing in advance plans for public works and improvement projects to be undertaken in the post-war period. During the war we are deferring the construction of every project not vitally needed for war purposes. By so doing we are storing up a reservoir of work that can be undertaken when the war is over and thus be useful in providing employment opportunities and demands for materials. But if such projects are to be ready for rapid inauguration in the post-war period, the plans and specifications must be prepared during the war.

I hope the Congress will approve the necessary legislation to make my recommendation in this matter effective. To aid it in its consideration of the matter I have asked the Federal departments and agencies concerned to submit to my Executive Office the necessary information upon which I can base a recommendation to send to the Congress at an early date covering a coordinated program of the appropriations and legislation that will be necessary to enable the Federal Government to be prepared for a rapid start on a Federal public works and improvement program. A copy of my memorandum to the Federal agencies concerning this matter is attached for your information.

In the meantime, I hope the Congress can give consideration to the enactment of legislation that will authorize the appropriation of funds that can be granted to the States and local governments in order to encourage and support them in their preparation of plans for their own post-war public works and improvement projects. I believe that a grant to support the more general planning activities of these governments along with reimbursable advances to cover the detailed planning for their individual projects would be an effective means to assure that plans will be ready when they are needed.

To this end, I am attaching hereto a suggested draft of a bill providing such Federal aids for planning. This suggested draft is a modified version of title II of H. R. 1898 now pending in the House of Representatives. Title I of H. R. 1898 pertaining to Federal agencies will, I believe, be necessary in view of the action that I propose to take as outlined above.

Sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following communications and letters, which were referred as indicated:

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATES, INTERIOR DEPARTMENT (S. DOC. NO. 50)

A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations for the Department of the Interior, fiscal year 1944, amounting to $5,906,975, in the form of amendments to the Budget for that fiscal year (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

ESTIMATE OF APPROPRIATION, DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE—CIVILIAN PILOT TRAINING (S. DOC. NO. 51)

A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting an estimate of appropriation for the Department of Commerce—Civilian Pilot Training, fiscal year 1944, amounting to $27,874,000 (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

EXTENSION OF AVAILABILITY OF AN EXISTING APPROPRIATION, DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE (S. DOC. NO. 52)

A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting draft of a proposed provision extending the availability of an existing appropriation for the Department of Commerce to June 30, 1944 (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE, DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE (S. DOC. NO. 53)

A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Department of Agriculture, fiscal year 1944, in the amount of $25,000,000, in the form of an amendment to the Budget for that fiscal year (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

DEFICIENCY AND SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATES, NAVY DEPARTMENT AND NAVAL SERVICE (S. DOC. NO. 55)

A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a deficiency estimate of appropriation, fiscal year 1942, amounting to $30,000,000 and supplemental estimates of appropriations for the fiscal year 1943, amounting to $143,539,000, for the Navy Department and naval service (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATES, FEDERAL SECURITY AGENCY (S. DOC. NO. 56)

A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriation for the Federal Security Agency, fiscal year 1943, amounting to $16,000, to cover the cost of additional compensation granted by law to certain Federal employees (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

ADDITIONAL ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to provide for the appointment of an additional Assistant Secretary of the Interior (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

PLACER MINING CLAIMS ON PUBLIC DOMAIN—PHOSPHATE, SODIUM, POTASSIUM, OIL, OIL SHALE, OR GAS

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation relating to placer mining claims for deposits of phosphate, sodium, potassium, oil, oil shale, or gas on the public domain (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

FEBRUARY 1943 REPORT OF RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

A letter from the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, transmitting, pursuant to law, a confidential report of the Corporation for the month of February 1943 (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, lists of papers and documents on the files of the Departments of the Navy and Agriculture (3), and The National Archives which are not needed in the conduct of business and have no permanent value or historical interests, and requesting action looking to their disposition (with accompanying papers); to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Papers in the Executive Departments.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. BREWSTER members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

ADDITIONAL REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON REDUCTION OF NONESSENTIAL FEDERAL EXPENDITURES — NATIONAL YOUTH ADMINISTRATION (S. DOC. NO. 54)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], chairman of the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures, transmitting an additional report of the joint committee relating to the National Youth Administration, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the report just laid before the Senate by the Vice President and referred to the Committee on Appropriations be printed as a document and also printed in the body of the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be entered.

The report above referred to is as follows:

REDUCTION OF NONESSENTIAL FEDERAL EXPENDITURES—REPORT ON THE NATIONAL YOUTH ADMINISTRATION

The Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures was established pursuant to title 6 of the Revenue Act of 1941 (Public Law 250, 77th Cong.), approved September 20, 1941, which directed it to "make a full and complete study and investigation of all expenditures of the Federal Government with a view to recommending the elimination or reduction of all such expenditures deemed by the committee to be nonessential, and to report to the President and to the Congress the results of its study, together with its recommendations."

Pursuant to this authority the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures has constantly sought facts which reveal the essential or nonessential character of Federal spending, and which have been the basis for numerous recommendations to Congress.

One such organization which has been scrutinized is the National Youth Administration. On the basis of studies and hearings, hereinafter described, the committee is able to make the following recommendations.

RECOMMENDATIONS

1. It is recommended that the National Youth Administration be abolished on June 30, 1943, and that its equipment and facilities be made available either to essential war agencies or through sale to private industry at the discretion of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget as provided for in Executive Order 9235.

2. It is recommended that the personnel be transferred to necessary war work.

3. It is recommended that the Department of Labor and the War Manpower Commission make every effort to assist the war industries to carry on their own industrial training programs.

ELIMINATION OF NATIONAL YOUTH ADMINISTRATION FROM 1944 BUDGET

Consequently the committee believes that no part of the $59,304,000 requested for the National Youth Administration as a part of the War Manpower Commission budget should be granted for the fiscal year 1944.

The basis for the foregoing recommendations is to be found in the following pages. From these it will be seen that the training program of the National Youth Administration is very similar to that of the Office of Education and of a number of other Federal bureaus. Moreover, it will be seen that in a comparison of cost, personnel, the number of trainees, and the number of training stations, the National Youth Administration does not compare favorably with similar groups; that waste in the National Youth Administration is evident in the use of funds, equipment, and manpower; and that duplication and overlapping of functions occur among the war-training programs of the National Youth Administration, the Office of Education, and other Government bureaus.

THREE-FOURTHS BILLION TO THE NATIONAL YOUTH ADMINISTRATION

The total amount allotted and appropriated to the National Youth Administration from 1935 through 1943 cannot be estimated to the penny, but it is possible to state that the following table reasonably approximates the appropriations and allocations made since its inception in 1935.

Total appropriations and allocations to the National Youth Administration

Emergency Relief Acts appropriations, 1935–38	$335,501,239
Administrative expenses paid from Works Progress Administration, 1935–38	9,847,358
Total	345,348,597
Less amount returned to master account	5,373,152
Total	339,975,445
Regular appropriations, 1939–43	431,439,000
Total	771,414,445

Thus, during its varied career under the Works Progress Administration, the Federal Security Administration, and the War Manpower Commission, the National Youth Administration has been appropriated $771,414,445. This sum includes $61,274,000 the appropriation for 1943. That there is no longer any need for such expenditures is apparent from the following discussion.

DUPLICATION OF PURPOSE

It may be stated unequivocally that the National Youth Administration does in effect duplicate, overlap, or perform functions similar to those of six other Government bureaus as well as conduct training for which the Federal Government is already paying large sums of money to private industry. By reason of this multiple duplication of effort, manpower, equipment, and money, if for no other reason, the National Youth Administration no longer seems to justify the appropriations it receives.

To prove that the National Youth Administration is duplicating other bureaus in its functions, it will be necessary to examine the programs of a number of agencies performing similar duties. The War Manpower Commission has published a bulletin revealing that the following groups under its control deal with war training:

"1. Training Within Industry Service advises on over-all on-the-job training problems and is specifically assigned to promote production training through specific training programs for supervisors, instructors, and training directors.

"2. Apprentice and Training Service advises on over-all training problems and is specifically assigned to promote production training through development of complete training programs which provide on-the-job training coordinated with the training services supplied by other agencies.

"3. Vocational Training for War Production Workers (formerly Vocation Education, National Defense), United States Office of Education, in cooperation with State and local vocational schools, is specifically assigned to give training of less than college grade to war production workers.

"4. Vocational Training for Rural War Production Workers, in cooperation with State boards for vocational education and local departments of vocational agriculture, is specifically assigned to give training of less than college grade in the production of farm commodities and in the repair, operation, and construction of farm machinery and equipment.

"5. Engineering, Science, and Management War Training, United States Office of Education, in cooperation with colleges and universities, is specifically assigned to offer training of college grade in engineering, chemistry, physics, and production supervision to train professional and technical workers for war industries.

"6. National Youth Administration is specifically assigned to provide training to unemployed, out-of-school youth between the ages of 16 and 25, in skills required in war industries.

"7. The United States Employment Service is specifically assigned to deal with labor supply, make recommendations regarding training needs and on the most effective use of personnel in terms of the prevailing and anticipated labor requirements. The Employment Service will direct industry to the service assigned to give the training assistance needed."

In addition, according to testimony presented before the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures by Mr. Aubrey Williams, Executive Director of the National Youth Administration, it is understood that industry itself is being paid in some instances as much as 2 percent on war contracts for the specific purpose of training apprentices or recruits in courses similar to, or supplementary to, those given by the National Youth Administration and the Office of Education. The Government apparently is paying industry to train youths and men for war jobs while it is at the same time carrying on similar training programs in its own organizations.

Specifically the program of the National Youth Administration duplicates that of the Office of Education in its defense training work as well as that of those other Government bureaus and industry itself. This is evident when one compares the functions of the National Youth Administration with those of that Office. The original purpose of the National Youth Administration—to provide work relief for persons no longer in regular attendance at school—has largely been supplanted by the purpose outlined in the provisions of the appropriation act for the National Youth Administration:

"To provide employment and work training for unemployed young persons of the ages of 16 to 24, inclusive, on resident and nonresident workshop and other projects approved by the Chairman of the War Manpower Commission as needed in the prosecution of the war in furnishing work experience and work training preparatory to employment in occupations in which there is a present or potential shortage of labor."

Similarly, the United States Office of Education assists the States in organizing and conducting vocational courses of less-than-college graduates through—

"(a) Courses supplementary to employment in occupations essential to national defense;

"(b) Preemployment courses; and

"(c) Refresher courses for workers with some previous occupational experience."

In addition to the foregoing, the Office of Education has within its scope the following:

"To assist the States in the organization and conduct of vocational courses and related or other necessary instruction for out-of-school, rural, and nonrural persons; cooperate with the States in determining the necessary equipment and supplies to be purchased from Federal funds. Appropriating Federal funds among the States for such programs. Approve or disapprove proposed expenditures for the purchase or rental of additional equipment and rental of additional space for such programs. Administer an appropriation of $5,000,000 to help, by loans, needy college students who can complete in 2 years their study of physics, engineering, medicine, dentistry, and pharmacy."

Obviously, then, there is a duplication of purpose in the stated objectives of the two organizations. This duplication becomes alarming when viewed from the standpoint of cost.

DUPLICATION IN 1944 BUDGET ESTIMATES

In addition, it must be noted that the 1944 appropriation estimate for the National Youth Administration contains the following provisions:

1. It entirely removes appropriations for school-work programs.

2. It provides that the Chairman of the War Manpower Commission may issue exemptions from the age provisions previously designated.

The first of these two provisions, in deleting the school-work appropriations, removes the principal purpose for which the National Youth Administration was originally established and places it entirely in a field of duplicating activity. The second provision, in providing for the removal of the age limitation, completes the duplication of purpose with other Government agencies which the National Youth Administration had previously avoided in part at least by limiting its training to youth between 16 and 24 years of age.

COSTS COMPARED

It is impossible to estimate the costs to the Government resulting from the training clauses written into war contracts with private industry. Much of the war-training program is in the hands of private industry and, with contracts running up to the multiple millions of dollars, it would not be surprising to find that relatively large sums of money are being paid by the Government to private industry for its training program. The total amount expended may be conjectured when it is remembered that, according to testimony presented before the committee, as much as 2 percent on some war contracts is paid for training purposes.

Compared to this the amounts appropriated to the National Youth Administration and to the Office of Education dwindle into insignificance. Indeed one may well wonder what benefit such amounts can possibly produce when compared to the large amount which the Government is evidently paying to industry for the same work.

Of the $61,274,000 appropriated to the National Youth Administration for the fiscal year 1943, $49,729,000 or 80 percent goes directly into the war-production training program. In addition, $8,000,000 is earmarked for student aid, while the remaining $3,545,000 goes for salaries, administrative expenses, and printing and binding.

The Office of Education was appropriated $141,240,000 for defense training during the fiscal year 1943. Of this sum, at least $109,000,000 duplicates the sums spent by the National Youth Administration in similar enterprises. In addition to this, other large sums of money have been directed into uses comparable to or complementary to those appropriated to the National Youth Administration and to the Office of Education. From a study of the following table it may be discerned that a large portion of $302,783,051 is allocated through Government bureaus to national defense training, and that this does not include such sums as are provided in defense contracts with private industry.

Division:	Appropriation
Training within industry	$1,145,000
Apprentice training	915,501
National Youth Administration	61,274,000
Vocational education	14,301,140
Office of Education, education and training:
1. Payments to States, etc., for national defense:
(a) Cost of vocational courses of less-than-college grade	94,000,000
(b) Short courses of college grade	30,000,000
(c) Vocational courses, rural	15,000,000
2. Visual aids for training, national defense	1,000,000
3. Salaries and expenses, national defense	1,240,000
Social Security Board: Selecting, testing, and placement of defense workers	2,467,670
Bureau of Employment Security: Salaries	1,816,740
Grants to States for unemployment-compensation administration appropriations necessary to operate U. S. Employment Office facilities, and appropriations for services essential to national defense program	79,650,000
Total	302,810,051

HOW THE MONEY IS SPENT

A comparison of the National Youth Administration expenditures with those of the Office of Education reflects the more excessive cost of the former. The table below, while it does not present the whole picture, does provide some basis for comparison.

Expenditures of the National Youth Administration and the Office of Education compared

	National Youth Administration	Office of Education
Youth work	$49,729,000
Short courses of less-than-college grade		$94,000,000
Rural training		15,000,000
Total defense training	49,729,000	109,000,000
Student aid	8,000,000
Courses of college grade		30,000,000
Visual aids training		1,000,000
Salaries and expenses	3,500,000	1,240,000
Printing and binding	45,000

Thus it will appear that although the National Youth Administration spends approximately only half as much on defense training as does the Office of Education, yet its salaries and expenses are three times as high. Judging from the Budget estimate for the coming year no substantial cut is anticipated. However, it must be borne in mind that the Office of Education does not meet all the expenses borne by the National Youth Administration. The cost of equipment, rent, and instruction is frequently taken care of by arrangement with school authorities. Nevertheless this adverse ratio of 6 to 1 must be considered in evaluating the relative training value of the National Youth Administration.

Moreover, the cost of training in the National Youth Administration program is much higher than similar costs in the Office of Education training program. This difference is found principally in the items of youth wages and subsistence and in administration and supervision costs. This the following tabulation makes clear:

Costs of the National Youth Administration training compared with cost of Office of Education training

	National Youth Administration	Office of Education
Salaries	$13.75	$16.60
Supervision and administration	13.23	3.74
Youth wages and subsistence	19.88–38.34
Other costs	12.48	8.78
Total	59.34–77.80	29.12

These figures, actually in a 2½-to-1 ratio, while perhaps not presenting an absolute comparison by which to judge the relative expenses of the National Youth Administration and the comparable training offered by the Office of Education, do reflect the excessive costs of the National Youth Administration in wages and subsistence and in supervision and administration. Because the Office of Education it not dependent upon creating its own establishment and its accompanying equipment, the costs of administration are not so high. The flexibility must not be overlooked in comparing the merits of the two programs.

Yet the relatively high cost of the National Youth Administration training must be still further increased if this agency is to augment its training program. According to testimony presented before the committee, there are two ways in which the number of National Youth Administration trainees may be increased. One is by removing the present enrollment restriction, but this would in effect place the National Youth Administration in a position of duplicating the training programs of the other Government agencies and those of private industry to an even greater extent than at present. The other method of increasing enrollment and thus bringing back into use the idle work stations is by an increased incentive to trainees—higher pay. The present rate of 16 cents per hour the National Youth Administration proposes to boost 150 percent to an average wage of 40 cents an hour for youth training. Such a high rate of pay for training will, of course, inevitably raise the cost of the National Youth Administration program tremendously and will make comparisons with the present Office of Education training costs much more unfavorable than they now are.

BUREAUCRATIC OVERSTAFFING

At least a partial explanation of the high cost of the National Youth Administration training is to be found in the excessive number of supervisory and administrative personnel. From a viewpoint of personnel there is revealed a disproportionate number of administrative employees which the number of trainees and the number of direct-shop supervisors do not justify.

Number of nonyouth personnel in pay status

Administrative personnel:
National offices	236
Regional offices	708
Project personnel:
Project management	3,143
Direct shop supervision	4,771
Subsistence activity supervision	2,094
Property, transportation, and maintenance supervision	854
Total	11,806

The above tabulation shows that on October 28, 1942, the National Youth Administration had 11,806 paid employees in its administrative personnel to train 53,000 youths. This is about 1 paid employee to every 4½ trainees. There were 7,035 persons engaged in administration, project management, and subsistence and property supervision while there were only 4,771 persons doing actual shop supervision of trainees. In other words only 44 percent of the administrative and project personnel were in direct shop supervision.

DRASTIC DECLINE IN TRAINEES

The National Youth Administration estimates that, with the present funds available, it could maintain a monthly youth employment of approximately 70,000. Since the average training time is 2 months, approximately 420,000 youths could be trained during the course of a year. Actually the number of youth in training during the present fiscal year has approximated more closely 60,000 or 65,000 during any given month. This is borne out by Mr. Williams' testimony that 30,000 young people enter the National Youth Administration every month and 30,000 go out. Of this daily turn-over of 1,000 approximately 500 go into war industry.

These figures indicate a constant drop in the number of trainees, both resident and nonresident, from a high of 281,477 on July 30, 1941, to a low of 53,603 on November 25, 1942:

National summary—Out-of-school work programs: Number of youth under active assignment as of the last Wednesday of the month

1941—July 30	281,477	57,297	224,180

Sept. 30	53,912	53,912	----------
Oct. 28	53,327	53,327	----------
Nov. 25	53,603	53,603	----------

[1] During the fiscal year 1942 the training program was called Youth Work Defense Program. During the fiscal year 1943 the program is called War Production Training Program. No separate training program was operated during the fiscal year 1941 or prior years.

It is apparent from this tabulation that there has been a drastic decline in the National Youth Administration training program and that this decline has brought the total number of trainees well below the number which may be adequately trained by the supervision and training stations now on hand. To offset this, the National Youth Administration has made every effort to recruit trainees, even going so far as to place advertisements in the newspapers and to make announcements over the radio.

Much of this falling off of the program has been attributable to the loss of male enrollees for which the number of female trainees has been unable to compensate. The 53 percent males who are trainees are predominately in the younger-age groups as the following testimony of Mr. Williams suggests:

Male trainees, by age groups

	Percent of total
16 years old	5.7
17 years old	28.2
18 years old	26.5
19 years old	15.3
20 years old	9.0
21 years old	5.6
22 years old	4.0
23 years old	2.
24 years old	2.8

This tabulation as of October 14, 1942, indicates the decline in the number of draft-age males enrolled in the National Youth Administration programs and suggests the probable effect on the 18- and 19-year-old group when draft regulations take full effect. With 66 percent of the male trainees in the draft group, it is probable that the National Youth Administration faces complete breakdown of its defense-training program.

On the other hand, the United States Office of Education program is much more extensive. This Office trains a total of 345,000 of which 162,000 are in preemployment training, 101,000 in supplementary employment training, and 82,000 in regular vocational employment. Because of the very nature of the organization the matter of securing trainees is not a problem to the same extent found in the National Youth Administration.

COMPARISON OF TRAINING STATIONS

According to the United States Office of Education figures, it supports 56,053 training stations, of which 36,489 are rovided by Federal funds and 19,564 by local and State funds. These training stations supply the needs of 85,915 preemployment trainees and 43,000 supplementary employees for a total of 128,920 trainees. In other words, the Office of Education program averages 2.3 trainees per station per day. According to the latest surveys of work stations and employees, the National Youth Administration had 53,722 trainees for 56,534 work stations. Of these stations 17,655 are now in storage.

Consequently, the average number of trainees per work station may be compared as follows:

Work station and trainee comparison

	Work stations	Trainees	Percent trainees per station per day
Office of Education	56,053	128,920	2.3
National Youth Administration:
Total	56,534	53,722	.95
In use	38,879		1.4

Thus the National Youth Administration is using its total equipment less than half as efficiently as is the Office of Education, while from compilations based on stations actually in use, one finds the National Youth Administration training almost one person less per day per station than does the Office of Education.

There is a total number of 56,534 work stations owned by the National Youth Administration, 31 percent of which are not in use. Following is a table illustrating the large percentage of National Youth Administration work stations which are now in storage, not being used principally because of a lack of trainees.

Washington	1,201	211	990	82	158
Total	56,534	38,879	17,655	31	53,722

From the above tables it is evident that there is an amazingly small number of youth in defense training in certain States. The industrial State of Rhode Island has only 16; Delaware has a like number; Wyoming has 64; and Oregon 86.

Particularly notable is the number of work stations not in use. Massachusetts with only 806 work stations in use out of a total of 3,801 indicates the extent to which such disuse has taken place. California with 61 percent, or 1,115 of 1,743 work stations not in use, and Virginia with 78 percent, or 3,291 of 4,228 work stations in storage, are other outstanding examples. Of 221 stations in Nevada, not one is in use. Clearly, despite examples of full use, such as in Pennsylvania, where every work station is filled on an average of 2 shifts, the fact that 17,000 of these stations are in storage in the country as a whole is indicative that the National Youth Administration is not performing at capacity. With only two-thirds of its stations in use by an average of slightly more than 1 person per day the efficiency training rating of the National Youth Administration must fall somewhere about the 33-percent level if one were to take the Office of Education figure of 2 trainees per station a day as a tentative average.

PUBLIC CRITICISM

Despite the defense purpose of most of the National Youth Administration work, the committee has continued to receive numerous letters from a wide variety of sources, indicating indignation at the continued expenditure of public money for the National Youth Administration. These criticisms, for the most part substantiated by factual examples, were based on the following:

1. The National Youth Administration is duplicating work performed by other Government agencies, private business, and trade schools.

2. Waste of equipment needed in war industries has been observed.

3. Administrative and instructive ineptitude has disgusted student and instructor alike.

4. The desire to perpetuate the National Youth Administration rather than to preserve an efficient training program has been observed.

CENSURE FROM EDUCATORS

According to experts in the field of education it is apparent that the National Youth Administration has gradually developed into a self-perpetuating agency distinct from the original purpose of providing relief and work relief. Consequently leading educational organizations have become alarmed at attempts to make the National Youth Administration a continuing agency because they think it now duplicates the program of the Office of Education and suggests the beginning of national bureaucratic control of education.

Local, State, and national education groups believe the National Youth Administration is now competing with the regular school program for vocational school training. They believe it will work toward centralized national control of education; that it will prove both more costly and less effective; that it will create inefficient use of the school plant; and that the National Youth Administration's original purpose is no longer followed. The report on the National Youth Administration by the Educational Policy Commission of the National Education Association and the American Association of School Administrators as of October 1941, states on page 76:

"The United States Commissioner of Education says the Nation has invested about $1,000,000,000 in buildings and equipment for trade and industrial education and that 15,000 of the 22,000 teachers of industrial courses are qualified to train workers for defense industries and that there are 1,000 experienced supervisors available, and that the school plant can accommodate 750,000 additional trainees. These figures suggest the futility of duplication. Many of these instructors have been giving part training to National Youth Administration enrollees and should be familiar with its administration and its effectiveness."

The National Education Association has repeatedly voiced this duplication as expressed in the following testimony before the Senate Committee on Education and Labor (quoted from p. 13):

"We of the National Education Association are therefore unable to see any fundamental difference between the National Youth Administration and the public schools in this matter of the kind of training which they provide. 'Work experience,' it seems to us, is not a matter of working for National Youth Administration wages or of producing some useful goods. It is a matter of learning to apply oneself continuously and industriously to a job, learning to work under supervision, learning to meet high standards of performance. These learnings, we believe, can and do take place in vocational school shops quite as well as in National Youth Administration shops. A boy in a public-school class, who receives no pay but wants to qualify for a job, will work just as industriously and just as skillfully as a boy in a National Youth Administration shop who is paid for his work and who also wants to qualify for a job. And if neither boy wants to qualify for a job, neither is likely to learn much about 'work habits,' wages or no wages. If the public-school boy needs money to pay his expenses while he is completing his training, that can be furnished through a student-aid program.

"It is therefore our conviction that the entire National Youth Administration training program, with its attendant production and service projects, should be transferred to the State and local educational agencies at the earliest possible date. Funds necessary for the operation of the program should be allotted to the United States Office of Education, for distribution to the States. The activities transferred from the National Youth Administration should be made an integral part of the national defense training program, which is already being operated in public schools throughout the Nation. Resident centers, which are remote from the larger school systems, or which serve youth drawn from many communities, can be efficiently operated by State departments of education or State boards for vocational education. The shops and equipment purchased by the National Youth Administration can be turned over to State or local educational authorities and utilized in the national defense training program during the war and in the schools' permanent program of vocational education in the post-war period."

CONCLUSIONS

From the foregoing discussion certain inferences may be made regarding the National Youth Administration:

1. The National Youth Administration activities duplicate those training programs of various Government bureaus as well as those of industry itself. Although it is true that the National Youth Administration has carried its present training program to places where there are no vocational training facilities of a similar nature, nevertheless this does not necessarily argue for the continuance of the National Youth Administration, for other Government training programs can be carried to these very places should the expense and the results seem justified.

2. The cost of the National Youth Administration training is much higher than necessary. This cost would be more than doubled under the present proposed program to increase the number of trainees.

3. Recent figures indicate that the enrollment in the National Youth Administration has fallen off markedly while the number of female trainees is rapidly overtaking the number of males.

4. The National Youth Administration has been forced to depend more and more on boys beneath the draft age of 18 for its male trainees.

5. The equipment of the National Youth Administration is not being utilized to an extent commensurate with satisfactory results.

6. Only 50 percent of the youth trained by the National Youth Administration utilize these skills in war industry.

7. Educational groups fear that the National Youth Administration presages centralized educational control.

The committee's investigation of National Youth Administration has been thorough. Every fact obtainable of its administration, need, and cost is in the recorded testimony. Evidence challenging the National Youth Administration's continuance because of duplication, extravagance, and ineffective results came to the committee from all parts of the country. Some of it is submitted in the appendix of this report. The committee has examined every possible justification for the continuance of the National Youth Administration. It must confess it has found none.

Other vocational groups, in the Government and out, are at present covering the entire field that has been allocated to the National Youth Administration during the fiscal year 1943. The scope of this includes, as indicated above, all the functions of the National Youth Administration dealing with national defense. Consequently it is difficult to see why the National Youth Administration should not be liquidated as of July 1, 1943.

APPENDIX

The following are excerpts from a few of the many letters received from people in a position to observe the operation of the National Youth Administration from the standpoint of cost, duplication, and effectiveness. The committee has not attempted to investigate these statements but, in view of their sources, feel they deserve to be added to this report:

FROM MINNESOTA

"I am taking the liberty to inform you that in the State of Minnesota the so-called war production training projects that are now carried on by the National Youth Administration are just a duplication of the war production-training program for war production workers carried on under the auspices of the United States Office of Education. As I see it, the only difference between the two is that our trainees are expected to attend the classes in the public schools without pay; on the other hand, the National Youth Administration pays their trainees for attending.

"If the above situation is to be continued indefinitely, we will find that our public schools with facilities far better than those possessed at the National Youth Administration centers being vacated and our students attending the National Youth Administration centers in order to receive $25 a month for taking training." (Harry C. Schmid, acting State director of vocational training for war production workers, St. Paul Minn., December 14, 1942.)

FROM MASSACHUSETTS

"If the history of the National Youth Administration were ever written, I would say that it would be one of the most vicious attacks on the rights of the taxpayers of this Republic that we have ever known. This school has at the present time the most modern, up-to-date machine-shop equipment together with the most modern tools. There are instructors there drawing $12 and $15 a day who have had during the past month as few as two pupils some days, and some days those pupils would not come in. The attendance for the week of February 8 under the National Youth Administration: Five pupils on Monday, February 8; six pupils on Tuesday, February 9; six pupils on Wednesday, February 10; six pupils on Thursday, February 11; and eight pupils on Friday, February 12.

"This is the best attendance they have had in some time. There are 49 stations.

"We have in the city of Quincy a trade school with an enrollment of 254 pupils, which is adjacent to the Quincy High School with an enrollment of 1,600 pupils. In the Quincy Trade School we have regularly from 62 to 72 pupils taking machine shop practice. We are obliged to go out and get third- and fourth-rate lathes which should be sold for junk, while this up-to-date machinery is standing idle. If we had this machinery we could put it to work for defense purposes. It could be used to advantage. The large Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation is clamoring for machinists." (James N. Muir, superintendent, Quincy public schools, Quincy, Mass., March 15, 1943.)

FROM CALIFORNIA

"National Youth Administration has set up a defense training school in Compton for boys age 16 and over, paying these boys $24.80 per month for 2 months while going to school. Add to this, bus transportation is furnished to haul Long Beach boys to Compton.

"Continuation high school here (Long Beach) gives defense training for 16-year old boys, but we do not pay $24.80 a month for our boys to go to school, nor do we furnish bus transportation. We thought it patriotic to prevent duplication of effort, save money and do away with unnecessary transportation." (Excerpt from a letter to Congressman JOHNSON, January 19, 1943.)

FROM KANSAS

"At the outset I wish to make it clear that I did not condemn the National Youth Administration in its original purpose, namely, that of providing subsistence and work experience for needy youth. Pursuant to that thought I record at the beginning of this statement that fact that I was perhaps the first school man in Kansas who offered to cooperate with the State director of the National Youth Administration in our State.

"So far as supervisory, clerical, and administrative staff is concerned, it would be very easy for the vocational schools to absorb all of the training programs of the National Youth Administration for those who are capable of being trained to employability. While it is true that employers have lowered their physical and educational standards for employability, it is still true that the National Youth Administration, for some reason, is attempting to train a great many young people who, for one reason or another, are almost incapable of being trained to employability.

"While my sympathies are always with youth, and while I feel that we are apt to spend too little rather than too much in preparing them for their life work, I am still convinced that the National Youth Administration in Kansas has been notoriously extravagant. It has done so many things for youth that youth should have done for itself. It has been extravagantly overstaffed, and in many cases overequipped.

"One case of notoriously extravagant and bad planning was the building of a fine machine shop and foundry at a lake several miles from a railroad and several miles from a main highway. It is out in what we call the Flint Hills of Kansas, where not much of anything grows except bluestem grass, jackrabbits and white-faced cattle. It was about as far from any industry as it could be. At one time they were operating classes at that location for as few as three and four students. These few students were transported by bus from Topeka—a distance of about 30 miles. At that time they were running two shifts. The teacher was on duty but idle while the bus made a trip to Topeka to bring the three or four students and take back three or four more. On one occasion one of our workers inadvertently found himself trailing a National Youth Administration bus of the 48-passenger type. It was carrying not to exceed 5 passengers. Another such bus was following him with no more than that many passengers. He observed that they drove from Independence to Parsons, Kans., a distance of approximately 30 miles. We were told that they were reporting full loads, but we cannot verify that statement. We do know that for months they have been transporting students as much as 50 and 60 miles to their machine shop at Parsons, Kans. We do not believe there is justification for such expenditure of transportation facilities when they are so badly needed in such war production areas as exists around Parsons and Wichita, Kans.

"It is significant that for many months the National Youth Administration had thousands of dollars' worth of the very best of equipment lying in crates in a warehouse in Wichita, Kans., while at the same time the vocational school was in very great need of just such equipment and making every possible effort to get it.

"It is no secret that the National Youth Administration has resorted to just about every form of solicitation to keep its schools in operation. It has used the radio and the press. It has circularized high-school students. It has sent out house-to-house solicitors. A solicitor came to my own home soon after my son was graduated from high school to get him to enroll in the National Youth Administration training program. At Emporia, Kans., the National Youth Administration is installing equipment in the city auditorium to operate what they call a War Manpower Commission school. They are attempting to enter into arrangements to give shop training for high-school boys and girls for high-school graduation credit.

"This interesting thing came to our attention recently. In the December 28, 1942, issue of the Coffeyville (Kans.) Journal appeared a blind advertisement appealing to young men and women to train for employment. The director of our vocational school in Coffeyville sent his secretary to investigate this blind ad. He reports as follows:

"'As we were interested to find out just what this might be, I sent the girls from the office down to make application and we find this is a National Youth Administration setup with the title of "War Manpower Board." The girls were given quite a build-up for the training in the various centers. They were told they had 33 sign up at Independence yesterday.'

"Independence, incidentally, is a city only a few miles from Coffeyville.

"I am very certain that no worth-while thing is being accomplished by the National Youth Administration nor that could not be accomplished by the vocational schools of Kansas, and at only a fraction of the cost. With practically no increase in administrative cost, the vocational schools of Kansas could absorb any part of the National Youth Administration training program that is worth while. I do not hesitate to say that there are a great many Kansans who would pay income tax and buy bonds more cheerfully if they did not see such extravagance as is evident in the National Youth Administration training program.

"Within 4 blocks of my office, 2 big 48-passenger National Youth Administration busses stand idle the greater part of every day in order that those young people may have immediate transportation, while the high-school students by the hundreds walk to and from school and working men and women either walk or hang on a strap in an overcrowded city bus.

"The vocational schools of the State are right now approaching the very peak of training demand. We need more equipment. We're getting the trainees. Much of the metalworking equipment that belongs to the National Youth Administration could be used effectively in both Wichita and Kansas City war-production training program. The aircraft factories of both those cities are begging for workers. Our training program is geared to their needs. We have combed the State of Kansas and picked up every piece of second-hand equipment available, while at the same time the National Youth Administration had new machines sitting idle.

"I hesitate to record such an indictment against any Government agency. I have done so only because I feel it to be my patriotic duty at this critical time to speak up vigorously concerning an institution or activity that, in my opinion, has outlived its usefulness." (C. M. Miller, director, Kansas State Board for Vocational Education, Topeka, Kans.)

FROM KENTUCKY

"It is my considered opinion that the National Youth Administration set-up as now maintained is contrary to the best interest of the people of this country.

"The training given by the National Youth Administration is a duplicate of the training given in our public high schools and consequently is in direct competition with them. The result is that neither program is as efficient as it would be if under a single administrative agency. The public school system as maintained in our States is the proper place for the control and administration of the National Youth Administration program.

"At the present time the National Youth Administration is enticing from the high schools and grade schools boys and girls that by all standards should remain in public schools. These students are taken away from home and housed under conditions that cannot be as satisfactory as home conditions." (V. O. Turner, principal, Maytown Consolidated School, Langley, Ky., January 29, 1943.)

FROM TEXAS

"We have a situation in regard to National Youth Administration that is apparently very vicious. Mr. J. C. Kellam invited some members of the State department of education and school administrators together on Wednesday, January 6, and proposed to them that they endorse a plan whereby the National Youth Administration would furnish their shop facilities and take over school shop facilities outside the regular hours and permit the high school students, who were 16 years of age or over, to attend the National Youth Administration program for 3 or 4 hours and go to school the other part of the day, and while attending the National Youth Administration shop, they would be paid $12 per month. The group he called to meet him, which did not include any vocational people, refused to endorse the program unless he agreed to pay those students regularly enrolled in day trade shop programs the same rate of pay as those attending the National Youth Administration shop. Mr. Kellam stated that he had approximately a million and a half dollars for this type of a program. Mr. Kellam and the National Youth Administration authorities are already again approaching school administrators with this proposition. We have had several inquiries from school superintendents as to whether or not they would be permitted to use the vocational shops and their regular day trade teachers to handle this National Youth Administration program.

"Now it so happens that we have amended our State plan and provided for an extra 3-hour section of all our day trade shop sections in this State to permit youth enrolled in other schools to attend and obtain training outside of regular school hours that will meet military objectives and prepare for industrial employment also. These classes have been set up by and with the permission of the United States Office of Education and are part of our regular vocational program. The National Youth Administration apparently is attempting to duplicate this and to needlessly pay $12 per month to the youth.

"As you can see, if they carry through this type of a program, our day trade students would, in large numbers, quit their present class and enroll in the National Youth Administration class to receive the $12 per month. To me, this is gross carelessness in the expenditure of Federal funds. Money is being spent needlessly and uselessly. If these youth want to attend classes of this type, we have them available and have regular educational funds available to support them. I do not believe that Congress ever intended for the money appropriated in paragraph I of the National Youth Administration section of Public Law, 647, to be used to train students regularly enrolled in high schools.

"I am wondering if they are not attempting to do this same thing in other sections of the country. Their enrollments are very low in their regular out-of-school war-training programs. Apparently this is a move to build up enrollments to justify their further existence at the expense of the public school systems of this country." (James R. D. Eddy, State director of vocational education, Austin, Tex., January 19, 1943.)

FROM KENTUCKY

"As a result of the present emergency, when our people are having the heaviest tax burden in our history imposed upon them, they are naturally becoming much more concerned about the manner in which this money is spent by their Government. I do not wish to stipulate that our people object to taxes, however steep they may be, so long as the money obtained is used wisely in preserving our American way of living.

"The general public sentiment today is becoming more and more critical of the misuse of Federal funds in promotion of such organizations as the now abolished Work Projects Administration and the still-existing National Youth Administration. The prevalent sentiment is that the present National Youth Administration is in direct competition with and a duplication of the efforts of our public and vocational school systems. There is not the slightest reason to doubt that with the equipment and money allotted to the National Youth Administration our public schools would do a far better job than any such organization.

"I have personally made a study of the activities of the National Youth Administration by direct contact for the past year. In a recent survey I found 42 percent of the trainees enrolled in one shop to be under 18 years of age and the average grade level of this group to be 7. The only logical assumption we can make is that these boys and girls have been enticed away from the public schools and from under home influence, where they rightfully belong." (Fred A. Martin, coordinator, Prestonburg shop, Mayo State Vocational School, Prestonburg, Ky., January 31, 1943.)

FROM COLORADO

"Cooperative relationships between the National Youth Administration and the public schools of Colorado, so far as the field of vocational education is concerned, may be summarized as follows:

"1. We now have many vacant training stations in the war-production program in vocational schools. Though women are coming into the classes in increasing numbers, a recent survey indicates that we can easily accommodate an additional 3,000 trainees with present equipment and instruction staff. In other words, we are running a minimum program when we should be running a maximum program. The National Youth Administration operates 3 vocational training centers in Colorado—at Denver, Trinidad, and Colorado Springs. In each instance enrollment is low in both the public-school classes and the National Youth Administration classes in subjects in which the National Youth Administration is duplicating the vocational-school effort.

"2. The vocational schools of Colorado could absorb the trainees in the National Youth Administration war-production-training program immediately if authorized to do so. This would include absorption of machine shop, foundry, and patternmaking trainees in Denver by the Denver Opportunity School, and absorption of the machine shop, radio, electrical, and sheet-metal trainees in Colorado Springs by the Colorado Springs Vocational School.

"3. The duplication of these National Youth Administration vocational-training programs in centers where we have well-established local vocational schools, seems to us to be an extravagant waste of money. Full details regarding this duplication of work can be secured from Mr. Roy Hinderman, director of vocational education, Denver public schools; or Mr. Charles E. Greene, superintendent of schools, Denver, Colo.; and from Mr. A. C. Erickson, director of vocational education, Colorado Springs, Colo.; or Superintendent Roy J. Wasson of the Colorado Springs public schools; and from Mr. P. P. Mickelson, president of the Trinidad Junior College, Trinidad, Colo.

"4. The National Youth Administration has solicited, and is soliciting, high-school students for National Youth Administration recruiting purposes. We have not objected to this because the Congress authorized the National Youth Administration in Public Law 647 to offer vocational training for war-production workers. Some school districts refused to permit this solicitation although generally it was accepted with the feeling that it was a duplication of service but that in wartimes it might be tolerated, at least on a temporary basis.

"5. This office is of the opinion that National Youth Administration trainees and qualified instructing personnel, as well as the shop equipment, should be transferred at the earliest opportunity to the local school districts maintaining vocational-training programs in the public schools. There is no function now performed by National Youth Administration that has not and that cannot be done by the public-school system. Furthermore, the present plan of operation sets up a duplicate vocational-training system in the United States, one a cooperative Federal-State local program, the other a Federal system of vocational schools operated by National Youth Administration.

"The above information is submitted on the basis of personal experiences and observations made during the past several years in administering the war production training program in the State of Colorado. I hope that something can be done to get the Congress to realize the situation and that an effort will be made to correct the administrative difficulties now existing." (H. A. Tiemann, State director of vocational education, Denver, Colo., January 21, 1943.)

FROM OKLAHOMA

"The following information is submitted relative to the vocational-training program of the National Youth Administrtaion. The high points of the program in several cities will be given.

"In a general over-all view of the program at the present time, note should be taken of the fact that on the 30th of June 1942 there were 2,459 white youth and 41 Negroes, or 2,500 National Youth Administration youth, receiving training in the cooperative program with the vocational education authorities. Since that time enrollment has dropped steadily and it has been necessary for us to discontinue many of the classes due to very small enrollment. The National Youth Administration continually operates classes with 2, 3, and 4 trainees per supervisor. It has been our policy to call this condition to their attention and give them a week or 10 days to increase the enrollment before closing the class and combining shifts. * * *

"The vocational schools could easily absorb the National Youth Administration trainees in the war production training program. In fact, there is a demand for people at this time that is not completely filled. The National Youth Administration is duplicating the vocational training programs in Oklahoma City, Tulsa, and Muskogee. In many cases youth go to those centers, begin their training, and as soon as they become informed as to the type of training going on in the vocational schools they drop out of the National Youth Administration and complete training in the vocational schools.

"The National Youth Administration classes are generally small in the State. The program at Tonkawa is the only one which carries a full load consistently for all instructors and supervisors. As has been pointed out that program has lost enrollment in the last 2 or 3 months. This has been very noticeable since the Signal Corps has reduced the civilian training program. * * *

"National Youth Administration machine-shop equipment is needed by vocational-training programs in the public schools. The situation in this State is becoming serious. If the equipment were transferred to the State board of vocational education it could be used to augment shops and increase training capacity so as to meet the very great demand for machine operators in war plants. There is also a need for expanding aircraft sheet metal at Tulsa and Oklahoma City, and there is approximately enough National Youth Administration equipment of this type in the State to supply the needed equipment.

"There is a demand by a large welding contractor for paid training for arc welders, for which training the State board of vocational education will not have sufficient machines. It will be necessary for the contractor to take portable machines off the pipe line in order to provide facilities for training pipe-line welders. Twenty additional arc-welding machines would certainly help this situation." (M. L. Powers, State supervisor, trade and industrial education, Stillwater, Okla., January 26, 1943.)

FROM KENTUCKY

"The National Youth Administration work is a duplicate of effort in this area. Busses are hauling children 35 miles through Madisonville to Providence now for the National Youth Administration course. All of these children could take the same type of courses in our regular school work in Madisonville at much less cost and expense.

"I understand that in the United States there are 50,000 National Youth Administration training stations but not that many trainees. It has been our observation that many of the trainees from the National Youth Administration school at Providence have been turned down by the employers of labor at Evansville because they are not 18 years of age. It has also come to our attention that the training which is given to the trainees in this shop is not particularly helpful to them after they enter industry.

"No reason has ever been presented to me why better learning could not be obtained in public schools at less training cost and expense." (Harper Gatton, superintendent, Madisonville city schools, Madisonville, Ky., January 19, 1943.)

FROM NEW JERSEY

"The number of National Youth Administration trainees in the State of New Jersey has dropped during the past 6 months, and at the present time only five small centers are in operation. All of the enrollees could be absorbed in the existing war production training program. All of the National Youth Administration enrollees could be absorbed in the war production training program in New Jersey even if all of the available stations were filled. This could be done by arranging shop classes and related subject instruction that could be staggered in such a fashion that one group could be occupying the shop while the other group could be receiving instruction in mathematics, blueprint reading, etc.

"I have in my files a complete set of reports on National Youth Administration activities in the Newark center. These reports extend over a period of more than 6 months, and I am quoting the following statements from the reports.

" 'That milling machine that came in last April stands still, rusting away, never turned a wheel.'

"The milling machine that was referred to was secured with two others at a time when it was difficult to obtain equipment of this kind.

" 'During the week of December 26 there were 23 in attendance in the center, 6 in the welding unit, and 17 in the machine shop. To instruct this group of 23 youths there was 1 welding instructor, salary $225 per month, 1 shift supervisor, salary $250 per month, and 2 supervisors, salary $225 per month each. With a total day and night enrollment of 75 students there was an overhead of 25 supervisors and foremen.' " (John A. McCarthy, assistant commissioner of education, Trenton, N. J., January 13, 1943.)

FROM MICHIGAN

"If authorized by Congress, the vocational schools of Michigan could absorb trainees now in National Youth Administration programs without any difficulty and with very little, if any, additional administrative or supervisory expense.

"I consider National Youth Administration training a duplication of effort and training which could be absorbed by vocational schools. There is no justification for paid work project experiences at the present time since trainees can be quickly placed at work after intensive training at wages prevailing in war production industries.

"It seems to me that there is no place for the two training programs—one or the other should be discontinued. Naturally, I believe that all such training should be carried on through public schools that have had a long-time established program, and therefore, experiences necessary to meet the situation. Furthermore, public schools are unbiased in their desire and effort to meet their obligation to serve the youth and adults of the country. The public schools have demonstrated their ability to carry on effective training during this war emergency at a cost which certainly cannot be questioned. The program as operated through the public schools, even though subsidized by Federal funds, is more in line with our democratic practices. * * *

"I am frank to admit that since two programs cannot be justified, it makes the cost to the taxpayer high, the programs should stand on their own merit and one or the other should be discontinued.

"If the National Youth Administration program is transferred to the public schools, these schools should be given the opportunity to transfer needed equipment for training purposes from the National Youth Administration shops. In many cases the National Youth Administration has had priorities on securing equipment, and thus has always had first choice. Any surplus of equipment could certainly be absorbed by the Army, the Navy, and the Air Corps.

"National Youth Administration students are only supposed to be enrolled in National Youth Administration projects which are reimbursed in part through a cooperative plan with the State board for a period not exceeding 3 months. We have cases where trainees will be enrolled in the National Youth Administration in one resident project, for example, Traverse City, and at the end of 3 months the same trainees will be transferred to Cassidy Lake for an additional period of time. The individuals will also be enrolled twice on National Youth Administration enrollment figures. We have been advised that some trainees in National Youth Administration projects have been enrolled for periods as long as 14 months."—(George H. Fern, director, State board of control for vocational education, Lansing, Mich., January 19, 1943.)

FROM KENTUCKY

"We have information of where the National Youth Administration superintendent dissuaded National Youth Administration boys from taking employment with the Simms-Drake Co., of Puget Sound. Mr. H. S. Hendersen, who was recruiting officer with the above company, whose address is 2929 Sixteenth Avenue, SW., Seattle, Wash., could probably give you further information. Boys who had taken employment and already had their tickets in possession to go to work for this company were talked into returning tickets in order that the National Youth Administration quotas might not be diminished. Mr. Alexander Smith, National Youth Administration camp superintendent, made the statement that he personally dissuaded the boys from taking employment. The statement was made before Mr. Henry C. Turner, United States Employment Service, Frankfort, and before the author of this letter. The National Youth Administration enrollment at Camp Lake Reba is about 125 trainees. The Lafayette Trade School, Lexington, Ky., can accept many more trainees at work stations which are now open." (Charles V. Youmans, supervisor-coordinator, Fayette County vocational schools, Lexington, Ky., January 23, 1943.)

FROM WEST VIRGINIA

"The National Youth Administration spends millions of dollars duplicating the work of the Office of Education in the field of vocational education. It runs schools in our States which are thoroughly federalized and pays students during these prosperous times to go to school. The money spent by the National Youth Administration would get better results if it were channeled through the United States Office of Education, regularly organized State departments of education, and the local public-school systems. More real educational results could be had this way for a fraction of the present cost." (W. W. Trent, State superintedent of free schools, Charleston, W. Va., January 15, 1943.)

FROM IOWA

"The writer wishes to call your attention to the enormous equipment placed in the National Youth Administration center at Clinton, Iowa, and the comparison with it of the number of trainees which are being produced. The capital outlay is such that the results do not warrant the maintenance by this agency.

"In the attached list you will notice 4 planers, the largest of which has a 30-foot bed. The attached list of equipment is only the heavy equipment. The total installation exclusive of building will cost approximately $250,000 to $275,000. At the time of the visit of the writer to Clinton there were 11 trainees only.

"In the conduct of the duties of my office I often find it necessary to contact the National Youth Administration agency and on several occasions I have found it their desire to use youths less than 16 years of age to bolster their enrollment. This matter has been taken up with them.

"The national emergency which has eliminated their span of operation should make the continuance of this work of the National Youth Administration unnecessary. There is a Federal channel through which this training can be accomplished; I refer to the department of vocational education as it is now organized for the production of war workers.

"The National Youth Administration has been able to secure delivery of costly equipment while the department of vocational education for war production workers has had to wait and is still waiting for delivery of similar equipment which is now standing idle in many National Youth Administration shops across the country.

"This equipment of the National Youth Administration which has been acquired at such enormous amounts should be transferred to the Vocational Education of War Production Workers. Your efforts to discontinue the National Youth Administration and the subsequent assignment of this costly equipment to a present successfully operating organization within the Government would be appreciated and be highly useful in the war effort.

"Clinton National Youth Administration heavy machinery: 4 planers, 6 shapers, 10 lathes, 5 milling machines, 3 cutter grinders, 6 drill presses, 1 gear cutter, 1 vertical mill (Vernon), 2 radial drills, 2 bench lathes, 1 Doall band saw, 1 Vernon milling machine." (L. E. Wass, director, war training, Independent School; district, Davenport, Iowa, January 27, 1943.)

FROM MASSACHUSETTS

"At a Washington conference with Aubrey Williams and Dr. Judd as far back as 1938 or 1939, we took issue over the federally financed and directed 'schools' of National Youth Administration, set up independently from the United States Office of Education, State and local authorities. Springfield, Mass., was particularly pointed to at that time as typical of what was going on and a published account of what National Youth Administration called their 'school' in Springfield was quoted from. Both Mr. Williams and Dr. Judd denied that there was any plan or intent on the part of National Youth Administration to establish a rival system of Federal vocational schools within the States. Whatever their plan or intent may have been the resulting effect of National Youth Administration has been to do just that: They have an organization which results in Statewide duplication and competition in the field of vocational education.

"Under various terminology, duplication of plants, equipment, and personnel with competition for trainees has gone on since that time and is going on now. It cannot possibly be otherwise as long as Congress appropriates funds for such a program to be administered from Washington by an independent agency. The person has not yet been born who could administer it without duplication and competitive phases arising. A study of National Youth Administration activities in this commonwealth, as to their various establishments, closures, shifts, carting off equipment, devices for securing trainees, and other ranges of manipulations, disclosed desperate efforts to administer an impossible program." (R. O. Small, assistant director of vocational education and director of war production training, Boston, Mass., January 22, 1943.)

FROM MINNESOTA

"* * * There is a very strong possibility that in doing away with the National Youth Administration, their entire facilities, personnel, and general set-up will be placed under a new agency, keeping the same politically minded but inefficient personnel that is at present in control to do an important job for which they have had neither experience nor training. If this is done, we will still have our dual system of education steeped in politics and subsidized beyond reason by the Federal Government.

"We believe that when the National Youth Administration is terminated, the department of education should be ordered to take over all training centers for the duration for the following reasons:

"1. A trained personnel is immediately available to do a good job.

"2. Training would be removed from politics.

"3. Economy.

"4. Efficiency in training.

"5. Better standards and a definite goal.

"6. Perfect cooperation with the Manpower Commission.

"7. All facilities immediately available for Army or Navy trainees.

"There is no selfish motive promoting this letter. I have been a superintendent of schools for 15 years and now plan on leaving the educational field entirely." (John A. Metcalf, superintendent, Shakopee public schools, Shakopee, Minn., January 11, 1943.)

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have been advised that the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], as chairman of the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures, has filed an additional report with the President of the Senate dealing with the National Youth Administration. I ask unanimous consent that I may file my individual views and that they may be treated in the same manner as he requested his report to be treated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered; and the views submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, printed as a document, and printed in the RECORD.

The individual views submitted by Mr. LA FOLLETTE are as follows:

REDUCTION OF NONESSENTIAL FEDERAL EXPENDITURES—INDIVIDUAL VIEWS

Trained manpower is now one of the acute bottlenecks of the war-production program. Maintenance of production schedules depends upon a steady flow of trained men and women going into war industry.

The National Youth Administration program is daily turning out 700 potential war workers with basic training in mechanical skills so desperately needed in war industry. Such a contribution to the war effort cannot be regarded as a "nonessential" expenditure of the Federal Government.

The War Manpower Commission has estimated that an additional 4,600,000 persons will have to be employed in essential industry in the period from July 1943 through June 1944. After making due allowance for additions to the work force from the depleted ranks of the still unemployed, and by transfer of workers from less essential industries to war or war-connected industries, most of whom will require training or retraining, at least 2,500,000 of the additional number will be workers without any previous shop experience.

To provide retraining for the unemployed and those transferred from the less essential industries, and preemployment training for the 2,500,000 new workers who are without any shop experience, will require the maximum utilization of all available training agencies.

It is apparent that more, not less, training of war-production workers is needed.

Industry itself must undertake a great deal of the burden and is doing so. But it is important that an employee have the basic knowledge of machine skills before he steps into a production plant. To slow down vital war production while a foreman or a skilled machinist takes the time and ties up a vital machine needed in the production line to teach him the rudiments of machine work is wasteful and unnecessary.

There lies the essential function of the National Youth Administration's training program. The National Youth Administration is no longer a relief agency. It has converted to war production. No training is being offered not directly usable in the war effort.

In the fiscal year 1942 it provided preemployment training for approximately 900,000 persons. Of that number, 386,000 are known definitely to have taken work in the skilled and semiskilled phases of war production, and another 300,000 have gone into other related phases of war industry. In the light of present employment conditions, and the curtailment of nonessential lines of production of all kinds, it is reasonable to assume that most of those persons on whom the National Youth Administration does not have definite record have also found their way into war production of some kind.

Scores of outstanding firms engaged in war production have expressed their gratitude and praise for the work National Youth Administration has done in helping to provide a reservoir of potential employees with basic mechanical training.[1] In line with Federal manpower policies of the armed forces and the selective service, it has long been emphasizing the training of women for war production jobs to take the place in industry of men needed by the armed forces.

The general charge that National Youth Administration has been wasteful of funds, equipment, and manpower is not borne out by the facts presented to the committee.

The cost per youth-month on the National Youth Administration war production training program is $65.86, including a nominal wage of 16 cents per hour as compared with customary wages of 60 cents or more received by trainees of private industry. This average total cost per youth-month also includes the cost of subsistence for thousands of trainees living at resident training centers as well as all administrative costs.

It seems evident that a fair comparison cannot be made between the entire cost of National Youth Administration training, which is completely supported by Federal funds, and the Federal Government's share in the grant-in-aid program of the Office of Education.

It must be remembered that the National Youth Administration is also producing, as a part of its training program, a significant quantity of war matérie' for the Army, Navy, and Maritime Commission. For the Portsmouth Navy Yard alone it produced 311,000 specific items in a year's time.

It is true that National Youth Administration facilities are not being used to maximum capacity. The National Youth Administration officials themselves are concerned about that. They state that they have the equipment to handle another 50,000 trainees per month, and are asking that the restrictions in the present law be modified by Congress so that they can provide full use of their facilities.

The question of duplication of function upon which the recommendations of the majority of the committee are based is in the last analysis extremely academic at this time when it is clear that with both the National Youth Administration program and that of the Office of Education the future needs for preemployment training in war production will not be met as full as they should.

The delay and expense of dismantling a going and tested program and fitting it into a different organization operating on a different basis, the grant-in-aid system, should not be attempted in this critical emergency when there is no showing that the operation of one is in any way impairing the effectiveness of the other. Both organizations are engaged in vocational training, but they are training different people. In that sense there is no duplication.

Unlike other vocational training programs, the National Youth Administration has developed in its 8 years of experience a system of resident centers where the trainees from remote areas can live while receiving their training. This has in effect expanded the recruiting area of war industry. It is doubtful that these resident centers could or would be preserved under a grant-in-aid program.

The fact that the National Youth Administration shops are completely controlled by the Federal Government has allowed a flexibility of program and a mobility of facilities that would be difficult under a grant-in-aid program where ownership of facilities is vested in local authorities.

This flexibility has been of great value in allowing immediate shifting of training curriculum to meet sudden shifts of war-industry needs for specific skills. The mobility of facilities has made it possible to move training shops into areas where skilled-labor shortages threaten and to concentrate training facilities where they are needed most.

In this way the National Youth Administration program has been a highly effective agency complementing the vocational training program of the schools.

Congress should give full support, financially and morally, to both the National Youth Administration and the Office of Education in promoting the full utilization of their facilities. It is highly essential to war industry and the war effort.

This is no time to delay the training of war workers simply to straighten out the organization charts of the executive branch of the Government.

The question of integrating the two programs can be left for later consideration when time can safely be allowed for the readjustments that would be required.

In the meantime, instead of abolishing the National Youth Administration, Congress should authorize 100 percent utilization of its facilities by removing the present age limit and other restrictions on the selection of trainees and by providing the necessary funds.

ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, Jr.

APPENDIX

The following are a small, representative sample of letters received by the National Youth Administration from business firms engaged in war production, attesting to the value of National Youth Administration training in providing a source of manpower with basic mechanical training and reducing their own training problems:

WORTHINGTON PUMP & MACHINERY CORPORATION,
Holyoke, Mass., August 1, 1942.

Mr. LEON J. KOWAL,
Regional Youth Administration,
Region No. 1, Boston, Mass.

DEAR SIR: May I take this opportunity of expressing my opinion of the very fine work the Holyoke National Youth Administration have been doing for the war effort.

One of our largest departments of manufacture is the weldery, and I doubt very much that without the wholehearted cooperation that we have received from both Mr. Fitzgibbons and his instructors and others that we would have been able to accomplish the tremendous schedule we have undertaken in this war effort.

My congratulations for such a fine piece of work.

Very truly yours,
WORTHINGTON PUMP & MACHINERY CORPORATION,
A. F. JEVONS, Personnel Manager.

---

[1] In his testimony before the committee Mr. Williams read from a few of the letters received and supplemented this with a list of concerns from which such letters had been received. At my request more of those listed have been submitted for examination, and copies of some of the representative ones are contained in the appendix to this report.

A. A. JOHNSON MACHINE TOOL CO.,
Syracuse, N. Y., December 28, 1942.
NATIONAL YOUTH ADMINISTRATION,
Syracuse, N. Y.
(Attention Mr. S. Ciciarelli.)

GENTLEMEN: We believe that at this time we should write you a letter regarding the work you are doing and what a great benefit to industry in general the National Youth Administration must be to the war effort. As you know, through your cooperation we have had the benefit of the services of some of your trained boys. Boys who never had, before going into your places, any mechanical training of any kind and, after being at your place here in Syracuse but a short period of time, they were able to come into our plant, where we are rebuilding machine tools.

Some of the machines that we rebuild with almost zero tolerances, and we were able to adapt these boys for not only machine work, but also in a short period o time develop them into scraping hands where they had to work to the very finest tolerances.

We, therefore, take this opportunity of again thanking you for your cooperation and of commending you on the fine type of work you are doing. It is quite noticeable that this training includes not only things that are mechanical, but also you certainly must devote some time toward personality and character training.

The boys' behavior and actions in our shop were very much beyond the usual employee that we hire.

Very truly yours,
A. A. JOHNSON MACHINE TOOL CO.,
A. A. JOHNSON.

BARNES-DULUTH SHIPBUILDING CO.,
Duluth, Minn., November 10, 1942.
Mr. CARL F. MAHNKE,
Project Manager,
National Youth Administration,
Duluth, Minn.

DEAR SIR: In the course of the past few months we have employed approximately 90 welder trainees from your training center, situated at 4832 Grand Avenue, Duluth, Minn

We have found them to be very satisfactory and they have shown that they have had exceptional training in their respective fields.

We would like to recommend that the present age limit of trainees be increased to permit the training of older people in order to meet the demands which will be brought about by the drafting of the 18 and 19-year-old men.

In the course of the next 6 months we contemplate on enlarging our welding force from 150 to 200 additional welders.

Yours very truly,
WALTER J. BARTHOLDI,
Director of Personnel.

NEW BRITAIN-GRIDLEY MACHINE DIVISION,
THE NEW BRITAIN MACHINE CO.,
New Britain, Conn., September 26, 1941.
Mr. RICHARD A. BARRETT,
State Administrator,
National Youth Administration,
New Haven, Conn.

DEAR MR. BARRETT: I would like to take this opportunity to write you on how the boys whom we have hired from the National Youth Administration in Nepaug and Rocky Hill have turned out. At the present time we have approximately 30 boys in our employ who are working on machines or machine assembly. According to all reports that I have received from the foremen these boys are turning out excellent work and are working conscientiously. They are industrious and ambitious without being too aggressive.

I have read where the National Youth Administration has been under some criticism for importing these boys from out of State. We feel that it is necessary to do so, as the supply of trained or semitrained men is practically negligible in Connecticut, and it has been necessary for us to hire men from wherever and whatever source we are able. These National Youth Administration boys have had more training than the graduates of the local defense schools and thus are more valuable to us. However, the supply of local trade-school boys has been depleted and now we must draw from the outside. The unemployed now remaining in the State are not of the caliber or do they have the experience or training that we are looking for.

In general, I can say that we are well pleased with the type of boy that we have obtained from your centers and hope that we may obtain more in the future.

Yours truly,
NEW BRITAIN MACHINE CO.,
JAMES L. BISHOP,
Personnel Manager.

LAISTER-KAUFFMANN
AIRCRAFT CORPORATION,
St. Louis, Mo., September 14, 1942.
Mr. WYATT,
War Production Training Project,
National Youth Administration,
St. Louis, Mo.

DEAR MR. WYATT: As you know we have been using your woodworking classes to train people for our work in glider manufacturing. We have found so far from our experience with those whom we have placed that the training that they have there, and your recommendations as to their special qualifications, has been a decided benefit both to us and the trainees.

As prime contractors we have also placed some of your trainees with two of our subcontractors here in St. Louis, and from reports to date they have worked out quite well, although probably none of them have been employed more than a month so far

We want to continue to use your training classes for this purpose, and are depending upon these classes to a considerable extent as far as training women in the future is concerned.

We thank you for your very kind cooperation in helping us and sincerely hope that we will be able to continue this program in the future.

Yours very truly,
LAISTER-KAUFFMANN
AIRCRAFT CORPORATION,
GORDON G. LEWIS,
Assistant Personnel Director.

SOUTHEASTERN SHIPBUILDING CORPORATION,
Savannah, Ga., January 4, 1943.
Mr. GILBERT C. MCLEMORE,
Project Manager, National Youth
Administration, War Production
Training Center, Savannah, Ga.

DEAR MR. MCLEMORE: I have recently discussed with Mr. May, personnel director of your center, the fact that during the coming year the Southeastern Shipbuilding Corporation will need numbers of men and women to complete and maintain our personnel in the building of Liberty ships.

We are unable to give specified numbers of workers who will be needed, but we wish to indicate that we will desire to employ a number of young men and women trained by the National Youth Administration.

Since July 1, 1942, approximately 500 young men and women trained at your center have been employed by our company as welders, ship fitters, pipe fitters, sheet-metal helpers, machinist helpers, boiler maker helpers, bolter-up helpers, and in other fields.

We have employed every welder you have trained who has passed our entrance test. At present, we are continuing to accept all who meet our requirements. Some of our foremen have been impressed by National Youth Administration workers and have requested their employment.

We have been grateful for your cooperation and interest. Your assistance has been of very definite value in meeting our scheduled production.

Yours very truly,
SNYDER ATWELL,
Personnel Director.

RICHMOND SHIPYARD NO. 1, OF THE
PERMANENTE METALS CORPORATION,
Richmond, Calif., January 9, 1943.
Mr. LEONARD SEIDENMAN,
National Youth Administration,
Richmond, Calif.

DEAR MR. SEIDENMAN: This is to advise you that the Richmond shipyards will employ all the sheet-metal, coppersmith, machinist, and welder trainees you can train.

We have found a definite shortage in skilled men within these crafts and, with the anticipation that we will hire approximately 20,000 additional employees within the next 3 to 4 months, we believe the shortage will become still more acute. This figure might also be enlarged by the inroads made on our personnel because of selective service, enlistments in the armed forces, etc.

These shipyards appreciate the work your organization has been doing in the past and thank you for your continued cooperation.

Very truly yours,
RICHMOND SHIPYARDS, NOS.
1 AND 2, OF THE PERMANENT
METALS CORPORATION,
RICHMOND SHIPYARDS, NOS.
3 AND 3-A, OF KAISER CO., INC.,
JAMES C. EGAN,
Director of Labor Relations.

CONSOLIDATED AIRCRAFT
CORPORATION, FORT WORTH DIVISION,
Fort Worth, Tex., August 12, 1942.
Mr. J. C. KELLAM,
Regional Administrator,
National Youth Administration,
Austin, Tex.

DEAR MR. KELLAM: Consolidated Aircraft Corporation is now faced with a critical shortage of new employees, and schools in this area anticipate an early lack of potential trainees. For this reason we feel that every effort should be made to reinitiate negotiations for the establishment of a National Youth Administration resident youth center in this area.

We understand from Mr. John B. Manning that it might be possible to bring into Fort Worth prefabricated buildings which could be used as a "hold over" station, and that youths from other National Youth Administration centers in the State could be brought here and housed until they receive their first pay check from Consolidated and find permanent living quarters.

I would like to ask that you give serious consideration to this proposal, and that every effort be made to work out some arrangement with the local schools for sponsorship of this plan.

Very truly yours,
CONSOLIDATED AIRCRAFT CORPORATION,
FORT WORTH DIVISION,
VAN A. FRANCE,
Educational Supervisor.

HIGGINS INDUSTRIES, INC.,
New Orleans, December 1, 1942.
Mr. C. O. EMMERICH,
Regional Personnel Officer,
National Youth Administration,
Atlanta, Ga.

DEAR MR. EMMERICH: I visited the National Youth Administration resident unit in Hattiesburg, Miss., and talked to Mr. Deen about the possibility of our using your resident unit in an allocated training program for Higgins Industries in New Orleans, La.

He suggested that I write you about the possibility of expanding to four shifts on the training facilities and of peak capacity in youth recruits to be used by Higgins Industries after they are trained by the National Youth Administration.

I hope it will be possible to use the four resident units over the entire State of Mississippi to their fullest capacity on this allocated training program for specific wartime production at Higgins Industries.

I am assured that the United States Employment Service and Higgins can recruit sufficient numbers of youth to fill these four units provided you will accept and make room for them.

The organization of the aviation plant of Higgins is now taking place and we expect to use 20,000 women in the construction and assembly of planes. I hope that you will be able to house and train at least 2,000 youths for us by March, which is the time they will be needed.

I am sending a copy of this letter to Mr. J. C. Flowers, of Jackson, Miss., and I can proceed no further until I know what you both will be able to do in this wartime training program. Please let me hear from you at your earliest opportunity.

Yours very truly,
HIGGINS INDUSTRIES, INC.,
(MRS.) SALOME D. SEVIER,
Coordinator of Vocational Training.

PARACHUTE CO. OF UTAH,
Manti, Utah, August 11, 1942.

Mr. AUBREY WILLIAMS,
National Youth Administrator,
National Youth Administration,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. WILLIAMS: It has come to our attention that the National Youth Administration sewing project at Ephraim, Utah, is about to be discontinued. We feel that this project has made a definite contribution to national defense, and the purpose of this letter is to ascertain whether there is not some way of continuing its valuable work.

The Parachute Co. of Utah, a subcontractor for Standard Parachute Corporation, of San Diego, was organized solely for, and is engaged exclusively in, the manufacture of parachutes and parachute spare parts for the United States Army and Navy. When this company came to Utah about the 1st of May the only women in southern Utah who were familiar with power sewing were those who had been trained in the National Youth Administration sewing project at Ephraim. Each week the National Youth Administration has sent us some prospective employees with a basic knowledge of power sewing. Some of the best operators we have on our pay roll at the present time are young women who were originally trained in power sewing on the National Youth Administration sewing machines. We find that a woman who has had experience on a power machine has mastered the first step in parachute making, i. e., overcoming fear of the machine.

This company made its first shipment of parachutes to the United States Army on June 17. In the 8 weeks since that time we have shipped 1,600 parachutes, 895 harness assemblies, and 300 spare packs. This, of course, is just a small beginning. The State of Utah is presently constructing a State armory building in Manti, to be occupied exclusively by the Parachute Co. of Utah. This building is 8 times larger than the building we are now occupying and in which we are now running 3 shifts per day, employing approximately 300 women. With the completion of the new building, our total personnel requirements will be around 800 women.

If the National Youth Administration project were discontinued, we feel that we would lose a very valuable source of personnel. We believe that the Federal Government could make no better contribution toward national defense in this community than by continuing to train young women in power sewing. The industry is here to employ them when they have completed their training with the National Youth Administration. It is the only defense industry within a radius of 100 miles and it is doing a 100-percent war job.

We respectfully seek your cooperation in maintaining the National Youth Administration sewing project at Ephraim, Utah.

Very truly yours,
PARACHUTE CO. OF UTAH,
By M. J. BROWN.

The following two letters are from representatives of Government services on the value of National Youth Administration training:

UNITED STATES MARITIME SERVICE,
ENROLLING OFFICE,
Minneapolis, Minn., August 20, 1942.

Mr. C. B. LUND,
Administrator, National Youth
Administration, Regional Office,
St. Paul, Minn.

DEAR SIR: During the last several months a number of radio trainees from your shops have enrolled in the Maritime Service after receiving basic training in your shop.

Additional trainees are needed and because of the continued demand for radio operators we shall appreciate if you will refer youth to our agency from your radio shops in Duluth, Minn.; Warren, Minn.; Sand Lake, S. Dak.; Fargo, N. Dak.; and other radio shops operated by our agency in this region.

Sincerely yours,
O. P. SWENSON,
Boatswain, United States Coast Guard,
Enrolling Officer.

ASSEMBLY AND REPAIR DEPARTMENT,
UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS AIR STATIONS,
Quantico, Va., October 16, 1942.

Mr. J. P. ROYER,
Youth Personnel Officer, Manassas
War Production Training Project,
National Youth Administration.

DEAR MR. ROYER: Up to the present time we have placed 38 girls in our overhaul shops, who have received their training at the National Youth Administration school in Manassas.

These young ladies are working in the engine-overhaul, metal-spray and bake-enamel shop, machine shop, instrument shop, accessory shop, carburetor shop, metalsmith shop, and erection shop.

To date they are all getting along fine and the quality of their work is very satisfactory.

We hope that in the future you will be able to continue to supply us with such well-trained shop personnel.

Sincerely,
R. J. BRITTEN,
Second Lieutenant,
Unites States Marine Corps,
Personnel Officer.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I make the request that I be allowed to file a statement of my individual views upon the National Youth Administration if, after reading the report, which I have not had an opportunity to read, I think I should state a different viewpoint.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the VICE PRESIDENT:

Resolutions of the General Court of Massachusetts, favoring amendment of the Federal Motor Carrier Act, 1935 (now pt. II of the Interstate Commerce Act); to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

(See resolutions printed in full when presented by Mr. WALSH on the 20th instant, p. 4646, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

A memorial of the Legislature of Florida; to the Committee on Appropriations:

"House Memorial 8

"Memorial requesting Congress to continue the appropriation for the work of the Farm Security Administration

"Whereas the Farm Security Administration is rendering a much-needed service to a great underprivileged class of our citizens; and

"Whereas no other agency, either governmental or private, will probably assume the task of elevating this large group to financial stability and responsible citizenship; and

"Whereas the need for more and more food and related farm produce will be best served by continuing this worthy agency: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the Congress of the United States of America in its wisdom continue the appropriations for the activities of the Farm Security Administration; be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this memorial under the great seal of the State of Florida be immediately forwarded by the secretary of state to the President of the United States of America, to the President of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States Congress, to the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, and copies be forwarded to the delegation representing the State of Florida in both the House and Senate of the United States Congress; be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be spread upon the journal in both the House of Representatives and the Senate of the State of Florida, and that sufficient copies be furnished to the press.

"Approved by the Governor May 20, 1943."

A memorial of the Legislature of Florida; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

"House Memorial 3

"Memorial to the Congress of the United States, requesting that provision be made for the establishment of a national monument at the site of Fort Caroline at St. Johns Bluff, on the south side of the St. Johns River, about 5 miles from the mouth of said river

"Whereas St. Johns Bluff and the area immediately adjacent thereto is of tremendous historical interest, yet has been ignored and neglected by United States Government, for some inexplicable reason; and

"Whereas this was the site of Fort Caroline, a colony and fortification established by the French in 1564, was the birthplace of the first Protestant white child on the North American Continent, was the site of the first battle between the armed forces of two European nations in the New World, when the Spaniards, under Pedro Menendez, captured the fort, killing most of the French garrison, and of the battle 2 years later when the French, under DeGourgues, recaptured the fort, killing most of the Spanish garrison, and it is probably the only spot in the United States which was actually fortified by five different nations, France, Spain, England, the Confederate States of America, and the United States of America; and

"Whereas this site is a place of great natural beauty: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the Congress of the United States be and it is hereby respectfully requested to establish the Fort Caroline National Monument at St. Johns Bluff, in Duval County, Fla., as a part of the post-war program for recreational centers; be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be sent to the President of the United States, and to each of Florida's Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States, to the Secretary of the Interior, to the Director of the National Park Service, and to each member of the Advisory Board on National Parks, Historic Sites, Buildings and Monuments, said copies to be under the great seal of the State of Florida.

"Approved by the Governor May 17, 1943."

A memorial of the Legislature of Florida; ordered to lie on the table:

"House Memorial 10

"Memorial endorsing the bill that has been introduced in the House of Representatives of the United States Congress providing for the relief of Floridians who suffered loss in the campaign to eradicate the Mediterranean fruitfly in 1929

"Whereas there has been introduced in the House of Representatives of the United States Congress a bill providing for the relief of Floridians who suffered loss in the campaign to eradicate the Mediterranean fruitfly in 1929; and

"Whereas it is just and equitable that the persons who suffered loss as aforesaid should be compensated for such loss; and

"Whereas such relief should be provided by an act of the Congress: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida:

"SECTION 1. That the Legislature of the State of Florida does hereby unanimously endorse the bill that has been introduced in the House of Representatives of the United States Congress for the relief of Floridians who suffered loss in the campaign to eradicate the Mediterranean fruitfly in 1929 and requests the Members of Congress to enact the same into law.

"SEC. 2. That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the Florida Members of Congress.

"Approved by the Governor May 17, 1943."

A joint resolution of the Legislature of California; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

"Assembly Joint Resolution 46

"Joint resolution relative to repair facilities and materials for agricultural machinery and implements

"Whereas the production of a sufficient food supply is essential to the continued health of the Nation and its successful prosecution of the war; and

"Whereas such production cannot be maintained unless necessary farm machinery and equipment is kept in working condition; and

"Whereas shops devoted to the repair of such machinery and equipment are being forced out of operation because of inability to get supplies: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California (jointly), That the Congress and President of the United States and the War Priorities Board are memorialized to make such laws, rules, or orders as may be necessary to make available to shops engaged in the repair of farm machinery adequate supplies of welding rod, acetylene, oxygen, and other essential materials; and be it further

"Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly is requested to forward copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives from California, and to the members of the War Priorities Board."

A resolution of the Assembly of California; to the Committee on Commerce:

"House Resolution 289

"Resolution memorializing Congress to enact necessary legislation to permit the reuse of bottles used as containers of alcoholic beverages

"Whereas under the provisions of Federal law the reuse of bottles containing bonded alcoholic beverages is prohibited, and compliance with the Federal laws requires a complete destruction of bottles used for the purpose of containing alcoholic beverages once filled and stamped; and

"Whereas replacement of bottles so destroyed constitutes an extravagance and waste of essential manpower, manufacturing equipment, production facilities and raw materials that would be of inestimable value in production for war; and

"Whereas the Federal legislation is designed and intended to protect Federal revenue under internal-revenue statutes and adequate provision to safeguard such revenue could be made without the necessity of destruction of containers: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly of the State of California, That the House of the State of California hereby respectfully petitions the Congress of the United States to so amend the provisions of the Federal law to permit for the duration of the war the reuse of bottles used for the purpose of containing alcoholic beverages; and be it further

"Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly is instructed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to the Senators and Congressmen from California in the Congress of the United States; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Senators and Congressmen from California in the Congress of the United States are respectfully requested to urge the legislation set forth in this resolution."

A resolution of the Assembly of California; to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

"House Resolution 232

"Relative to the Post-war International Economic and Food Conference

"Whereas the State Department of the Government of the United States has announced that a Conference of the United Nations will be held at Hot Springs, Va., on Tuesday, May 18, to discuss, study, and plan the problems of freedom from want, post-war interests, in full employment, free enterprise, the lightening of government controls, relief of devastated countries, international currency arrangements and trade reciprocity; and

"Whereas this recital of the agenda of the Food and Economic Conference marks it as one of the greatest national and international importance and of paramount interest to the world and to the people of the United States; and

"Whereas 42 nations have been invited to send representatives to this noted conference; and

"Whereas it has been declared by those in charge of the arrangements for the holding of the said conference that all representatives of the press will be barred from attendance at all meetings of the conference: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly of the State of California, That the members of the assembly protest the closing of the conference to representatives of the press as undemocratic, declare it to be a breach of the American principle of freedom of the press, deplore it as a reversion to star chamber procedures and an infringement of the right of a free people to know in full and complete detail the daily happenings of this world-important conference; and be it further

"Resolved, That the chief clerk be directed to prepare and transmit copies of this resolution to the President, Vice President, and Secretary of State of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and each Member of the House of Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States."

A concurrent resolution of the Legislature of California; to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

"Assembly Concurrent Resolution 56

"Concurrent resolution relative to settlement of Jewish refugees in Palestine

"Whereas the intolerable sufferings of the Jewish people in Europe at the hands of the ruthless dictators of the Axis Powers make an irresistible appeal to the Christian world and to the enlightened conscience of the United Nations, and make clear the need for a home land where stricken and persecuted Jewish people may settle in peace; and

"Whereas the favor with which Great Britain viewed the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people was evidenced by the Balfour Declaration of November 2, 1917; and

"Whereas the United States of America expressed concurrence in this policy by joint congressional resolution adopted on June 30, 1922, and by the provisions of the Anglo-American Treaty of December 2, 1924: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly of the State of California (the senate thereof concurring), That we favor the continued establishment of a Jewish homeland in Palestine and its further development for the absorption of as many Jewish refugees as may be called for by the exigencies of the situation be commended to the considered judgment of the United Nations, not only as an act of justice to the Jewish people, but as an integral part of a new democratic world order in which every people shall have the right to self-government and self-determination in accordance with the principles, to perpetuate which we are now engaged in the fiercest struggle of all time; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, to Senators WAGNER and MCNARY, co-chairmen of the American Palestine Committee, and to the British Embassy in Washington for transmission to the proper authorities in London, to the Secretary of State of the United States, to the President of the United States Senate, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States."

A joint resolution of the Legislature of California; to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

"Assembly Joint Resolution 19

"Joint resolution relative to memorializing and petitioning Congress to enact legislation giving to draftees and others entering the military and naval service of the United States adequate insurance protection for themselves in the form of permanent total disability insurance as well as life-insurance protection

"Whereas from 1919 up to and including October 8, 1940, persons entering the military and naval service of the United States were given the privilege of applying for United States Government (converted) life insurance, including the permanent total disability features thereof, which protected the soldier himself; and

"Whereas Congress in the passage of the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, approved October 8, 1940, provided in section 611 of said act that "No United States Government life insurance shall be granted hereafter to any person under the provisions of section 300 of the World War Veterans Act of 1924, as amended"; and

"Whereas the National Service Life Insurance Act does not provide permanent total disability benefit features or protection for the soldier himself and protects only the dependents and near relatives of the soldier; and

"Whereas it is estimated that 90 percent of those now in the military and naval service are without dependents and therefore not in need of such insurance but are in need of insurance with permanent total disability features protecting the soldier himself; and

"Whereas experience during and since the World War has adequately proved and demonstrated the merits of permanent total disability features of Government insurance, particularly as relates to the so-called misconduct cases, which are noncompensable for both compensation and pension, thereby taking care of these unfortunates who would otherwise be thrown upon local communities for care and sustenance; and

"Whereas it appears that in the passage of the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, including section 611 thereof, which prevented further application for United States Government life insurance with total permanent disability features thereof, those persons, including National Guard units entering Federal service after October 8, 1940, were discriminated against and were denied the privilege of taking out United States Government (converted) life insurance with permanent total disability features thereof, whereas those persons, including National Guard units entering Federal service prior to October 8, 1940, were allowed and permitted to take out such insurance; and

"Whereas we believe in order to give to every commissioned officer and enlisted man and every member of the Army Nurse Corps (female) and the Navy Nurse Corps (female), when employed in active service under the War Department or Navy Department, proper protection for themselves and their dependents, the United States should again permit such persons, including draftees, the opportunity to apply for and be granted either national service life insurance or United States Government (converted) life insurance with permanent total disability features as now constituted: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California (jointly), That the Legislature of the State of California hereby memorializes and petitions Congress to enact legislation which will provide that such persons so entering the military and naval service of the United States, including draftees, shall be given the opportunity of taking either national service life insurance or United States Government (converted) life insurance, at their option, including the permanent total disability features thereof; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this joint resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, to the Vice President of the United States, and to each Member of the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States, and that the Senators and Representatives representing the State of California in Congress be urged actively to support such legislation."

A resolution of the Assembly of California; to the Committee on the Library:

"House Resolution 226

"Resolution relative to the Spirit of Freedom Monument as designed by Mr. Amos A. Wyckoff

"Whereas the flag of the United States of America and the Liberty Bell are symbols of the highest American ideals; and

"Whereas no monument has been erected to personify the ideals and spirit for which the American flag and the Liberty Bell are fitting emblems; and

"Whereas one Amos A. Wyckoff, of Oakland, has designed a monument which is known as Spirit of Freedom, which would be a most fitting, imposing, and inspiring memorial to the people of the United States, and which monument is more particularly described as follows:

"1. The 13 steps represent the Thirteen Colonies.

"2. There are 48 columns, 1 to represent each State.

"3. The gear wheel represents the power of our United States.

"4. There are 48 cogs, 1 for each State in the Union, to represent the power of each State. Inside each cog will be the exhibit room for each State.

"5. Between each cog there will be placed a statue of the pioneers who fought their way here to make it possible for our people to live.

"6. The building is constructed of four cross-like sections with niches in which to place statues.

"7. On top of the building will be the statue of the California bear.

"8. Facing the east will be a statue of the first mother of California, holding a child, which represents as the sun rises the newborn is coming to light.

"9. Facing the west will be a statue of the first emigrant scout to California.

"10. The Liberty Bell forms the dome. Inside the dome will be the paintings of war scenes. Also a statue of the man who rang the Liberty Bell so hard he cracked it

"11. Then comes the tower rising to a great height of approximately 800 feet. In this tower will be elevators running to the observation room, where visitors will pay a small fee to have a view of beautiful cities and surrounding area, as well as the beautiful blue Pacific Ocean. The income can be used for the upkeep.

"12. On the top of the tower will be a powerful light for protection and guidance of airplanes.

"13. Four large American eagles, representing the keenness of vision of our United States will face the north, south, east, and west. The eagles, to be outlined in neon lights, are guarding the American flag, which is flying high over their heads.

"14. On the point of each cog shall be a duplicate of each State seal.

"Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly of the State of California, That the members of this assembly hereby commend Mr. Amos A. Wyckoff as the originator and designer of the artistic and symbolic 'Spirit of Freedom'; and be it further

"Resolved, That the members of this assembly do recommend the construction of this symbolic monument on a suitable site to any commission for post-war reconstruction or planning as a project worthy of their most careful consideration; and be it further

"Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly be instructed to prepare and transmit copies of this resolution to any commission for post-war reconstruction or planning and to the commission in charge of the celebration of the one-hundredth anniversary of the State of California, as a project worthy of their most careful consideration, to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to each Senator and each Member of the House of Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States and to the aforesaid Mr. Amos A. Wyckoff, of Oakland, Calif."

A joint resolution of the Legislature of California; to the Committee on Immigration:

"Assembly Joint Resolution No. 45

"Joint resolution relative to facilitating the employment of Mexican citizens in agriculture

"Whereas the United States of America is sorely in need of skilled agricultural labor and has entered into arrangements with the Government of the Republic of Mexico for permitting its citizens to engage in agricultural pursuits in the United States; and

"Whereas, there reside within close proximity of the borders of California and other States bordering upon the Republic of Mexico, a large number of citizens of the Republic of Mexico who, if existing governmental arrangements permitted, could either continue to reside in Mexico and work in the United States, or reside intermittently in the United States for agricultural purposes; and

"Whereas existing regulations governing recruitment of Mexican citizens for agricultural labor in the United States require application for such work in Mexico City; and

"Whereas, The President of the United States on Tuesday, March 30, 1943, stated that importation of Mexican agricultural workers was one of three means of relieving the farm labor shortage in the United States: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California (jointly), That Hon. Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, and Hon. Chester C. Davis, Food Administrator of the United States of America, be and they are hereby memorialized to enter into negotiations which will, for the duration of the current emergency, permit the citizens of Mexico residing in proximity to the borders of the United States to enter the United States freely for the purpose of engaging in agricultural pursuits, without the necessity of making application personally in Mexico City; and be it further

"Resolved, That Hon. Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, and the Honorable Earl G. Harrison, Director of Immigration, be and they are hereby requested to make such adjustment in the immigration regulations of the United States as will, for the duration of the current emergency, facilitate the free ingress and egress of such Mexican citizens for the purpose of engaging in agricultural pursuits; and be it further

"Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly transmit copies of this resolution to Hon. Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, to Hon. Chester C. Davis, Food Administrator, to Hon. Earl G. Harrison, Director of Immigration and Naturalization, and to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to the Senators and Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States."

A resolution of the Assembly of California; to the Committee on Military Affairs:

"House Resolution 257

"Resolution relating to the return of gold mines to partial production

"Whereas the complete stoppage of gold mining is resulting in the destruction in the economic life of the communities engaged primarily in this industry; and

"Whereas if the industry were permitted to continue on a limited scale during the war, an income sufficient to defray taxes and maintain essential businesses could be produced; and

"Whereas under such conditions of partial production the existence of the communities located in the gold-mining areas could be continued to the benefit of their residents and of the State in general: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly of the State of California, That the Congress and the President of the United States and the War Production Board are memorialized to make such laws, rules, or order as may be necessary to provide for the return of the gold mines of this State to partial production during the continuance of the war; and be it further

"Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly is requested to forward copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives from California, and to the Chairman of the War Production Board."

A resolution of the Assembly of California; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

"House Resolution 284

"Resolution relative to memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact S. 971 or H. R. 2426, Seventy-eighth Congress, first session, providing for Federal participation in financing of a post-war highway construction program

"Whereas two measures are pending in the Congress of the United States, namely, S. 971 and H. R. 2426, to authorize Federal assistance to the States in financing a post-war construction program on rural and urban highways; and

"Whereas such legislation is designed to, and will, provide useful employment for those returning from services in the armed forces, or released by war industries after the war, and will, accordingly, tend to prevent unemployment and the necessity for unemployment relief; and

"Whereas necessary wartime restrictions on gasoline and highway transportation have resulted in curtailment of revenues received by the highway departments of the States, and restrictions on use of materials have curtailed construction and reconstruction of needed highways during a period in which many highways have been damaged by heavy wartime truck traffic, engaged in transportation for the war effort; and

"Whereas such legislation will assist the States in bringing their highway systems and their highway construction programs back to normal, and in making up the time lost due to necessary deferment of highway construction during the war; and

"Whereas there will be particular need to provide employment in California, following the war, due to the large number of war industries in this State; and

"Whereas there will be particular need in California for reconstruction of highways due to such war conditions: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly of the State of California, That the Congress of the United States be, and the same is hereby, memorialized to enact either S. 971 or H. R. 2426; and be it further

"Resolved, That the chief clerk shall transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the chairman of the House Committee on Roads, and to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States from California."

A joint resolution of the Legislature of California; ordered to lie on the table:

"Assembly Joint Resolution 44

"Joint resolution relative to the appointment of the Honorable Jesse Tapp as Assistant to the Food Administrator of the United States

"Whereas the State of California has been called upon to increase its agricultural production goals during 1943 although it is faced with an agricultural labor supply which is less than that available in 1942; and

"Whereas the President of the United States has appointed the Honorable Chester C. Davis as Food Administrator with the duty, among others, of obtaining adequate agricultural labor for this year's crops; and

"Whereas the Honorable Chester C. Davis, Food Administrator, has appointed the Honorable Jesse Tapp as his assistant, thereby recognizing the need of having in Washington, someone familiar with the problems of western agriculture: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California (jointly), That the Honorable Chester C. Davis, Food Administrator, be commended for his recognition of the problems of western agriculture in appointing the Honorable Jesse Tapp as his assistant; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Honorable Jesse Tapp be congratulated upon his selection for this important assignment; and be it further

"Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly transmit copies of this resolution to Hon. Chester C. Davis, Food Administrator, to Hon. Jesse Tapp, Assistant to the Food Administrator, to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to the Senators and Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States."

By Mr. ELLENDER:

A resolution of the Central Labor Union, of Bogalusa, La., favoring a Congressional investigation relative to the present activities and affiliations of Capt. Edward V. Rickenbacker; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A letter signed by J. Howard Rusco, secretary-manager of the Kansas Press Association, favoring the enactment of Senate bill 1073 relating to payment for advertising the defense program in daily and weekly newspapers; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

EXTENSION OF RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT—PROTEST AGAINST AMENDMENT OF PENDING MEASURE

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred a telegram in the nature of a memorial which I have received from Mrs. Howard Naylor, legislative chairman of the Kansas League of Women Voters, Topeka, Kans., opposing any changes in the present trade agreements program.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TOPEKA, KANS., May 19, 1943.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER,
Washington, D. C.:

Kansas League of Women Voters opposes any alteration in present trade-agreement program. Feel Taft proposal neither needed nor necessary. Please vote against this proposal and any such damaging amendments.

KANSAS LEAGUE OF WOMEN VOTERS,
Mrs. HOWARD NAYLOR,
Legislative Chairman.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. McNARY, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

S. 249. A bill providing for taxation by the States and their political subdivisions of certain real property acquired for military purposes; with an amendment.

By Mr. RADCLIFFE, from the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 131. A bill to provide reemployment rights for persons who leave their positions to serve in the merchant marine, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 262).

By Mr. THOMAS of Utah, from the Committee on Education and Labor:

H. R. 2664. A bill to provide for the training of nurses for the armed forces, governmental and civilian hospitals, health agencies, and war industries, through grants to institutions providing such training, and for other purposes; with an amendment (Rept. No. 263).

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on May 20, 1943, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 649. A bill to grant the consent of Congress to a compact entered into by the States of Colorado, Kansas, and Nebraska relating to the waters of the Republican River Basin, to make provisions concerning the exercise of Federal jurisdiction as to those waters, to promote flood control in the basin, and for other purposes; and

S. 1041. A bill to extend the period during which direct obligations of the United States may be used as collateral security for Federal Reserve notes.

BILLS AND A JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HILL:

S. 1124. A bill to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, to provide for the establishment of a uniform classification and uniform scale of class rates for railroad freight, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. HILL (for himself and Mr. MEAD):

S. 1125. A bill to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, for the purpose of clarifying its provisions with respect to its application to certain officers in the executive branch of the Government; to the Committee on Civil Service.

By Mr. NYE:

S. 1126. A bill for the relief of the city of Grand Forks, N. Dak.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GREEN:

S. 1127. A bill for the relief of the Washington Park Yacht Club; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CAPPER:

S. 1128. A bill to permit certain burials in the Scottish Rite Temple in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. MURDOCK:

S. 1129. A bill to extend the time within which a suit or suits may be brought under the act of June 28, 1938 (52 Stat. 1209); to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

(Mr. THOMAS of Utah introduced Senate bill 1130, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and appears under a separate heading.)

(Mr. LODGE introduced Senate bill 1131, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. WALSH:

S. 1132. A bill to amend the Naval Reserve Act of 1938 so as to provide for the payment of a uniform gratuity to certain officers recalled to active duty; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, on behalf of myself, the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], and the Senators from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. CHANDLER], I introduce a joint resolution giving the consent of the Congress to an agreement between the State of Indiana and the Commonwealth of Kentucky, establishing a boundary between those two States.

By Mr. WILLIS (for himself, Mr. VAN NUYS, Mr. BARKLEY, and Mr. CHANDLER):

S. J. Res. 62, Joint resolution giving the consent of the Congress to an agreement between the State of Indiana and the Commonwealth of Kentucky establishing a boundary between said State and said Commonwealth; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

PROVISION FOR CARE OF CHILDREN AND MOTHERS IN UNITED STATES WAR AREAS

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I introduce a bill and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. I make this request because if the bill shall be considered, it will be considered in connection with the Hayden bill on the same subject, which the Committee on Education and Labor is now considering.

The bill (S. 1130) to provide for care of children of mothers employed in war areas in the United States, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

AMENDMENT OF SERVICEMEN'S DEPENDENTS ALLOWANCE ACT

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am today introducing a bill to amend the Servicemen's Dependents Allowance Act of 1942 so as to provide for an increase of 15 percent in the amount of the Government's contribution to the dependents of enlisted men entitled to family allowance under this act.

Under my bill an enlisted man with a wife but no child would receive $32.20 from the Government instead of $28 as is now the case. If he has a wife and one child he would receive $46 from the Federal Government instead of $40 as is now the case.

The Servicemen's Dependents Allowance Act of 1942 became a law on June 23, 1942, and the rates prescribed in that bill have not been changed since that time.

On the other hand, many things have happened since that time which imperatively indicate the need for increasing the rate:

First, there has been an increase in living costs recognized by the President in his message to the President of the Senate on December 11, 1942, wherein he stated:

> The Government of the United States, which is the largest single employer in the Nation, has permitted a condition to develop regarding rates of pay, hours of work, and overtime compensation, for its civilian employees, which is grossly unfair.
> It is * * * a bad situation and should be avoided.

Secondly, this increase in living costs has been recognized by the Congress in its passage of legislation increasing the pay of Federal employees. One of these acts applying to the overtime compensation of Government employees as a whole was approved May 7, 1943, and another providing additional compensation for employees in the Postal Service was approved April 9, 1943. Furthermore, in the monthly report of employment by the United States Civil Service Commission for March 1943, it is shown that the average monthly salary as of March 31, 1943, has increased 15.4 percent over the salary paid in June 1942. In fact, the average monthly salary for June 1942 was $160.11 and for March 31, 1943, it was $184.77. This is an increase of $24.66 or 15.4 percent.

Thirdly, indications multiply that the number of dependents of servicemen who are receiving various forms of public assistance is growing. I am advised that in Massachusetts, for example, in the period from September 1941, to June 1942, there were 33 aid-to-dependent-children cases attributable to the fact that the father had entered the service. A survey of general relief cases undertaken in May 1942, listed 78 families with members in the service. On the other hand, in March 15 of 1943 a report covering 90 percent of the State, listed 1,481 cases of servicemen's dependents receiving it as follows: 616, old-age assistance; 446, aid to dependent children; 419, general relief.

Fourthly, we have the statements of every responsible public authority that the rate of induction of men with dependents will increase in the near future and we have, therefore, not only the justification afforded by the increase in living costs, the action of the Federal Government in the case of its own employees, and the experience in my own State of Massachusetts, but we have also the duty of exercising common ordinary foresight in meeting a situation which is sure to arise in the near future when the number of servicemen's dependents is greatly increased.

This bill does not change the present law in any way except insofar as the rates are concerned. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I hope that prompt action may be taken so as to avoid unnecessary suffering. Congress has established the principle that, of all men, the serviceman should be the least troubled by family distress at the very moment that he is risking his own life for his country. We must keep faith with that policy, and we cannot keep faith if the rates are not maintained on a basis which is adequate to do the tasks to which we are committed.

The bill (S. 1131) to amend the Servicemen's Dependents Allowance Act of 1942, so as to provide for an increase of 15 percent in the amount of the Government's contribution to the dependents of enlisted men entitled to family allowances under such act, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

H. R. 2713. An act making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes;

H. R. 2719. An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 2753. An act making supplemental appropriations to carry out the provisions of an act to promote the defense of the United States, approved March 11, 1941, as amended, and for other purposes.

AMENDMENT TO INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. WHEELER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 2719) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes, in the item for investigation of raw material resources for western steel production (national defense), which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On page 78, line 8, to strike out "$149,000" and insert in lieu thereof, "$300,000."

UNUSED-LEAVE COMPENSATION TO MEMBERS OR FORMER MEMBERS OF CAPITOL POLICE FORCE ENTERING ARMED FORCES

Mr. MEAD submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 13), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives are authorized to pay from the contingent funds of the Senate and the House of Representatives, upon vouchers approved by the Chairman of the Capitol Police Board, to members or former members of the Capitol Police force entering the armed forces, such sums as may be necessary to reimburse them for unused leave accumulated under regulations of the Capitol Police Board while serving as members of the Capitol Police Force assigned to duty in the Capitol Building.

ASSISTANT CLERK, COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS

Mr. ELLENDER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 153), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That, until otherwise provided, the Committee on Claims is authorized to employ an assistant clerk to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $3,600 per annum, and Senate Resolution No. 18, agreed to January 23, 1939, is hereby repealed.

REAR ADMIRAL CHARLES E. ROSENDAHL

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, on Thursday last, while I was unavoidably absent from the Senate Chamber, the Senate confirmed the nomination of Capt. Charles E. Rosendahl to be a rear admiral in the Navy. The nomination had been sent to the Senate by the President and approved by the Committee on Naval Affairs. If I had been in the Chamber when the nomination was reached on the Calendar I would have made a statement relative to Captain Rosendahl's service in the Navy, and particularly in connection with his experience with lighter-than-air craft.

Capt. Charles E. Rosendahl, United States Navy, Washington, D. C., a veteran of 20 years lighter-than-air experience, has been promoted to the rank of rear admiral, and has been assigned to duty as the first chief of naval airship training.

The new naval airship training command under his direction will combine all airship training under a single functional unit.

Headquarters of the new command will be located at the Naval Air Station, Lakehurst, N. J., and the command will also include the experimental and flight-test department and the training center. In addition, the command will cover the naval airship training center at Moffett Field, Calif., and such other units as may be assigned by the Vice Chief of Naval Operations.

Requirements for airship-training candidates are as follows: Cadets must be between 18 and 27 years old, unmarried, American citizens of 10 years standing, graduate of an accredited high school, and meet physical and other general requirements identical with heavier-than-air standards. Officer candidates must be of rank of lieutenant, junior grade, under 31 years of age, must have had at least 1 year of sea duty as an officer in the Navy or merchant marine, and must meet the same physical requirements as those established for cadets.

The contribution of blimps to the present system of safely escorting merchant vessels has resulted in sharp expansion of procurement and training since early in the war. Acquisition of a fleet of 200 of the airships was authorized by the Congress, and training activities were increased proportionately.

At present pilot courses are 4 months long; enlisted courses last 3 months. This represents a shortening and intensification of the peacetime courses. Upon successful completion of training cadets are commissioned ensigns, while enlisted men are designated either chief aviation pilot or aviation pilot, first class.

Captain Rosendahl, who has just returned from a 7-month tour of duty in the Pacific, was born in Chicago May 15, 1892. He was graduated from the Naval Academy in 1914, and trained as a naval aviator—airship—7 years later. He was navigator of the rigid airship U. S. S. Shenandoah, and was senior surviving officer when that dirigible crashed in 1925. With six others, he free-ballooned the forward section safely to the ground.

He later became commanding officer of the dirigible U. S. S. Los Angeles for 3 years, followed by 1 year as commander, Rigid Airship Training and Experimental Squadron. In 1928 he observed trials of the German airship Graf Zeppelin, and made the first North Atlantic crossing in that ship. In 1929 he was a guest aboard the Graf Zeppelin during its world cruise. He became commanding officer of the U. S. S. Akron, a rigid dirigible, which later was lost. He was commanding officer of the Lakehurst Naval Air Station during the 1936 North Atlantic operations of the German airship Hindenburg, and also when that airship was consumed by hydrogen fire on May 6, 1937. He is the author of several books and articles on the airship.

EXTENSION OF RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, our able Secretary of State, the Honorable Cordell Hull, has made a very effective statement regarding the Danaher amendment to the bill relating to trade agreements and as I concur in his expressions, I wish to ask that his statement be incorporated in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as a part of my remarks, along with an article by Mr. Arthur Krock published in the New York Times.

I also ask unanimous consent to have incorporated in the RECORD as a part of my remarks an address on the subject of trade agreements, delivered by the distinguished senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS].

There being no objection, the statement, article, and address were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE

The Danaher amendment relates to the following provision of the existing Trade Agreements Act:

"Every foreign trade agreement concluded pursuant to this act shall be subject to the termination, upon due notice to the foreign government concerned, at the end of not more than 3 years from the date upon which the agreement comes into force, and if not then terminated, shall be subject to termination thereafter upon not more than 6 months' notice.

The trade-agreements program is a cooperative undertaking between the Congress and the executive branch of the Government, having for its purpose the carrying out within definite Congressional instructions and limitations of the policy prescribed by Congress.

Congress, of course, may at any time terminate any part or all of the authority entrusted to the executive department under the existing cooperative arrangement necessary for carrying out the trade-agreements policy. The suggestion by some that the Danaher amendment would not affect the power of Congress is wholly beside the point. Everyone knows that the power of Congress would not be affected. The real and the dangerous point is that the proposed amendment would give notice to the world that 6 months after the termination of the war it, Congress, may wipe out all of the existing 29 trade agreements by joint resolution. This notice of such possibility or probability naturally creates at home and abroad a state of doubt and uncertainty as to the future life of all trade agreements, and in fact of the entire trade-agreements policy itself. Such destruction of the trade agreements would restore automatically the original rates of the Hawley-Smoot Act, and head this and other nations away from international economic cooperation and straight back to the narrowest policies of economic nationalism, with serious effects upon both the domestic and international situations.

DANAHER PLAN MENACES OUR TRADE-PACT POLICY—DEFENDERS OF SECRETARY HULL'S PROGRAM WARN INNOCENT-SOUNDING CLAUSE COULD SCUTTLE LEGISLATIVE SHIP — OLD HIGH-TARIFF DANGER RISES

(By Arthur Krock)

WASHINGTON, May 22.—The amendment to the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, sponsored by Senator DANAHER, of Connecticut, and affixed to the statute in committee by a combination of Republicans and Democrats, is the most innocent-appearing paragraph that was ever devised to scuttle a legislative ship or cut a legislative throat. It seems merely to state the obvious, to emphasize the coordinate powers of Congress in a time when popular opinion favors the reassertion of these powers after a long period of prodigal loans to the Executive.

The Danaher amendment, so far as its language goes, simply provides that the President, or Congress by joint resolution, 6 months after the President proclaims the end of the war may terminate any trade agreement entered into between the United States and any other nation.

Congress, of course, always possesses the power to repeal all or any part of a statute, and this includes the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. Congress may pass such a statute one day and repeal it the next, and one Congress cannot bind another. Although a repeal in this form would not necessarily disturb the legal tenure of agreements previously made, its effect would be to kill them in operation and prevent the making of any others. This being so, what is the real purpose of the Danaher amendment, and why did Secretary Hull and Chairman GEORGE of the Senate Finance Committee unite in the statement that it will emasculate the entire trade-agreements program?

ANSWER TO THE ISSUE

The answer, by the consensus of those who have been most active in making the pacts with other countries, is simple and easily demonstrable:

1. There is an influential Republican group which has never accepted the theory of the Hull agreements and hopes to return after the war, to that economic nationalism, best expressed in the Smoot-Hawley tariff law, which many charge with large responsibility in bringing on the present conflict between the have and have-not nations. This group is counting on a Republican victory in 1944 and wishes to be ready to junk the reciprocal agreements program and the 29 pacts already made. The Danaher amendment provides the means to do this when and if the opportunity arises.

2. There are Democrats in Congress who, fearing the growth of Executive power and anxious to weaken it against the fourth-term drive, seize upon any chance that presents itself to delimit that power. Their support of the Danaher amendment is not aimed at Secretary Hull or his economic policies; it is a blow at the scope of Executive authority.

3. Mr. Hull's program is not unpopular in Congress, and the Secretary himself enjoys more respect and admiration, and wields more influence at the Capitol than any other member of the administration. Therefore, a frontal attack on his Trade Agreements Act would fail. Accordingly, the Danaher amendment was fixed on to accomplish the same eventual purpose, but on the flank and in disguise.

PERIL TO WHOLE PROGRAM

4. Its adoption would emasculate the program because (a) it would be undoubtedly taken as notice by 29 nations, some of them partners in the war against the Axis, that a change in the party control of the United States Government would mean the end of the program. (b) This would be tantamount to notifying them that, as soon as the war is won with their help, the most powerful economic nation in the world intends to return to the Smoot-Hawley policy. (c) That would mean the restoration of embargo rates against these nations, calling for restoration on their part of the barriers and other discriminations against our exports which Mr. Hull through his agreements has gradually been eliminating. The world would go back to the economic policies of the early 1930's.

5. So far as new agreements are concerned, if any can be negotiated during the war, the conferees would meet under a congressional sword of Damocles. That is not a very hopeful decoration for conference rooms. And meanwhile the existence of the Danaher amendment in the law would begin to sap the vital qualities of the agreements now in operation.

That is the case which supporters of the Secretary and his program make against the Danaher amendment. This correspondent has put the case before the economic representatives of certain other nations, and they agree that the effects abroad would probably be as forecast.

In reply, advocates of the amendment say the post-war prospect is so uncertain that the United States should have an anchor to windward, that it should not leave itself bound to long-enduring reciprocal trade arrangements when these might prove disastrous to our national economy. They contend that the post-war prospect possibly includes a European trade union, organized against the United States, and that the Danaher amendment gives to the country a club in the closet.

ESCAPE CLAUSE

This would be persuasive in a hard-boiled way—despite its foundation on distrust of allies—if the trade agreements already entered into did not have a number of escape clauses and if all new pacts would not contain the same. These clauses are designed to meet any such conditions or emergencies as are envisioned in the post-war world. Congress put limits to the Executive power when it delegated the authority to make the agreements and required the very safeguards which have been erected. To reshape these provisions into a constantly suspended threat is to leave the impression that the threat is a fixed promise.

After the war the products of American farms and factories will be seeking foreign markets and production will be turned from the items of war to those of peace if the system of free enterprise continues. Instead of opening more doors abroad to these products, the Danaher amendment is a warning to the nations to close their doors before the United States can close its own. If the Hawley-Smoot law and the economic policy for which it was spokesman are sound and what the Nation wants to restore, then the Danaher amendment lays down a broad road on which to return to them. But if that law and policy are unsound and no longer wanted there is no good foundation for the amendment.

HOUSE COMMITTEE VIEW

In its report on renewing the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act the Ways and Means Committee majority wrote:

"The testimony * * * from all sources is overwhelming on the side of viewing these very (post-war) uncertainties as one of the reasons which make it imperative that this act be given a clean-cut continuance. * * * Our interest is in doing all that we can do to make sure that post-war conditions are not permitted to lapse into chaos. Of course, there are uncertainties about many things in the post-war period. But the important point is that unless we and other like-minded nations take a position now on certain agreed policies, and establish procedures for making these policies effective, the uncertainties which we fear will become certainties of past sad experience."

The House cut down the extension of the act from 3 years to 2. That would seem to have been sufficient provision against unpredictable economic consequences of the war.

ADDRESS OF HON. SCOTT W. LUCAS, UNITED STATES SENATOR FROM ILLINOIS, AT THE CONVENTION OF ILLINOIS POSTMASTERS, PEORIA, ILL., MAY 22, 1943

Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, it is a pleasure for me to leave for a few days the manifold responsibilities which are with me in the Nation's Capital at a time when free government is on trial.

I bring to you the greetings of the Honorable Frank Walker, Postmaster General of the United States, who through his wisdom, industry, and understanding, is doing a magnificent job in the handling of the mail in America's most trying and difficult period.

I should also like to take this opportunity to commend the postmasters, the postal clerks, and all of the postal employees of the country for the high degree of patriotism and the unusual skill they have manifested throughout the length and breadth of this land as they carry into execution the high resolve of national duty.

My friends, it must be crystal clear to the reasonable and prudent mind that America is moving through the most critical military, economic, and political period in all of her history. Many reasons can be assigned as to why this world at the moment is in such a state of flux and chaos. But anyone who is familiar with the economic policy of the world during the last two decades must necessarily conclude that blunder after blunder was made in the international economic field or the world would not be in the present critical condition.

The Honorable Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, was one of the first men to visualize the necessity of a complete change in the attitude of nations toward one another insofar as their economic policies are concerned.

Back in 1934 the Congress at his behest enacted what is known as the reciprocal trade program. These programs have been renewed by the Congress every 3 years since that time. The Hull reciprocal trade agreements fit hand in glove with the good-neighbor policy which was promulgated by this administration, both of which have been the basis of peace and understanding with our neighbors in Central and South America. Never in our 150 years of experience has our relationship with the countries south of the border been so encouraging and friendly as it is at this moment. You will recall prior to World War No. 1 that we were compelled to send our soldiers to the Mexican border. We were compelled to, to protect the Panama Canal. We had few friends anywhere in that part of the world, and that primarily was due to the dollar diplomacy of exploitation which had been the policy of this Nation for many decades.

It is my firm conviction that if in 1920 the reciprocal trade agreements or some compacts similar thereto had been the policy of this Nation and the policy of the world, World War No. 2 might have been averted. Under such a mutual arrangement and understanding, I seriously doubt that a maniac like Adolf Hitler could ever have reached the top in a nation like Germany.

This brief statement is preliminary to the discussion of current legislation and one of the most important problems insofar as the future of this country is concerned that has been considered by the Senate since the beginning of World War No. 2. Next week the Senate of the United States will vote "yes" or "no" on the continuation of reciprocal trade treaties. The continuation of these trade pacts is vital and necessary, if we are to have the international economic cooperation which is indispensable from the standpoint of the peace and prosperity of the world.

Before I proceed further, perhaps I should say that under no circumstances do I want you people to regard my remarks here as a political speech. Politics in this emergency insofar as I am concerned is out of the window. While you and I know that there will be primary and general elections next year, I submit with complete sincerity that the time is not apropos for either Democrats or Republicans to be talking from the public platform the political problems or probabilities of 1944. Every individual, regardless of his political affiliations, should have only one purpose in mind and that is the winning of the war at the earliest possible moment in order that our soldiers, sailors, and marines may return safely to their homes. The votes I have cast upon important measures before the United States Senate have been in line with what I conceive to be my duty as a public servant of the people of this great State.

My friends, you may wonder why I am discussing the reciprocal trade agreements tonight. There is only one reason and that is an amendment that was offered before the Finance Committee of the Senate on last week which seeks to terminate all present trade treaties 6 months after hostilities cease. As a member of the Finance Committee, I voted and spoke in the committee against this amendment. It was reported out favorably by a vote of 11 to 10, and next week the Senate will either approve or disapprove this amendment, which seeks to emasculate the trade agreements.

It should be remembered that the trade agreements have been in existence for 9 years. Congress has endorsed these agreements upon two different occasions after full and comprehensive debate. These trade pacts have demonstrated beyond the peradventure of a doubt that they are effective instruments for the promotion of international trade on a basis of fair dealing and nondiscrimination. This trade program which has proved sound in principle and operation is the basis for a stable economic, political, and peace structure in the post-war years. To write into the law now an amendment which means the emasculation of these trade treaties 6 months after hostilities cease is advising the world that we will retreat back to the high protective wall of abominable Hawley-Smoot tariff.

My friends, if that course is pursued, there will be in the future no economic stability from the world standpoint. There will be no stability from the standpoint of the military. There will be nothing but chaos and disorder that will lead to another world war within less than 20 years. Civilization cannot withstand the present global conflict without being seriously crippled for several generations to come, and if in the course of our reformation another world war should come, then there is nothing that can save humanity. Civilization will perish.

This new proposal to destroy the trade agreements comes from the Republican members of the Finance Committee. It would change the underlying law so that all agreements passed in the future would terminate at one time, 6 months after the present shooting stops. In my judgment this amendment is the most dangerous and destructive amendment that could be devised. Even though it may be repetition, may I say just a word or two more in detail about this delusive and deadly amendment.

The proposal comes to this: We are being asked to say, by legislative action, that we want arrangements made whereby all the trade agreements may be ended at one time. If this were followed out it would occur during the most critical period of post-war reconstruction. This proposal, if it became the law, would advise the world that we are thinking seriously of canceling them all at once, thereby abandoning all of the reductions in other countries' tariff rates which those countries have made at our request, and on our part returning to the Hawley-Smoot rates of 1930, and the added special rates of 1932. If this emasculatory amendment becomes a law, it would mean that our talk about international collaboration in trade matters, and the general good-neighbor policy of which trade collaboration is an absolutely necessary part, are good for the war only, and may be canceled just as soon as it is over. We are asked to confirm formally that what Hitler's radio has said all along is true: That we are getting ready to run out on our friends as soon as the shooting stops.

The adoption of this amendment would be pleasant music to the ears of the Axis groups. Through the power of the radio they would make the most of this amendment in attempting to disturb the pleasant and peaceful relationship we have with our neighbors to the south.

If there is any better way to start the break-up of the United Nations, so far as their alliance depends on trade collaboration, I don't know it.

What else will this proposed amendment do if we adopt it? It will force every other nation in the world, including all our present friends, to plan their post-war trade without us. Every nation has to make some plans for post-war trade. They can't avoid some action. If we announce that we will make no promises that are good beyond the war, they will have to plan to get along without us. What will they do then? What would we do if the situation were reversed? Everyone of them will try to work out an economy based upon its own resources, and on collaboration with such others as are willing to collaborate. There will be regional trade blocs, and intensified empire preference schemes, international cartels, and exclusive arrangements between groups of countries, all over the world, and we will be excluded, and it will be our own fault. What will our cotton and wheat farmers do then, or our hog raisers, or our manufacturers of export products, or our shipping people, or our aircraft industry? And what chance will there be of avoiding international rivalry and jealousy and imperialist schemes, with depression, unemployment, and another world war at the end of the road? I tell you this proposal is very far reaching and very damaging and very dangerous indeed.

Some Senators who may vote for this amendment naturally will not say that they are trying to destroy the program. They will say that conditions after the war are unpredictable and that they want to retain enough liberty of action to protect legitimate American interests from destructive competition. That is all right, but what an absurd way to do it.

Other Senators who have consistently and persistently been against the trade program from the beginning will say as one of the Republican Senators did in the Finance Committee the other day, "I never have been very strong for the trade agreements." Senator GEORGE, of Georgia, the distinguished chairman of the committee, replied: "This amendment you are now supporting certainly is proof of that."

The American people should know that every one of the agreements we have now was negotiated with great care. Every one of them can be changed if need be by renewed negotiation. Every one of them contains careful escape clauses for use in case of need. And if we should have to use these clauses, and the other country objected, we could nevertheless take the necessary action even if that meant terminating an agreement on relatively short notice, in no case more than 6 months. It is absurd to say that a general reservation of the right to cancel everything at once is necessary to protect us. It is not; its only real purpose can be to start the destruction of the program now and finish the job of wrecking it as soon as possible after the war.

You should know that at this very moment there are 31 of these trade agreements. Twenty-six of these trade agreements have been in existence over 3 years, and under the present terms of those agreements the executive branch of Government can terminate those agreements on a 6 months' notice. It should also be understood, and there is no dispute about the fact, that Congress still retains the power to terminate these trade agreements at any time. Even with these safeguards, nevertheless we have this backdoor amendment that seeks to destroy the far-reaching and constructive work which has been accomplished over a period of years through these trade pacts.

What this country needs in its international commercial policy is some conception of its own real national interests. It is time that we forgot the local rivalries and fears and prejudices which continuously hamstring us when we attempt to set up a consistent international position. The United States is a great and powerful country, and it has many powerful friends throughout the world. If we can show that we are willing to work in real collaboration with those friends, not just today in war, but afterward in peace, in the practical matters that affect our national prosperity and theirs, then there is real ground for hope that we may have a peaceful world when this war is over, and great prosperity at home. But if the Senate says next week, by adopting this amendment, that the United States plans to withdraw into its aconomic shell 6 months after the war ends, then we are headed straight for chaos.

The road is before us. We can either become the leading and dominant figure in the post-war planning, or we can forget the rest of the world, isolate ourselves, antagonize other nations by our refusal to cooperate, and ultimately find ourselves alone in a dislocated economic world. I submit that the bomber and the fighter plane have destroyed every hope and illusion that any nation in this small world can stand alone.

Therefore, my friends, as one of the Senators from Illinois, upon my return to Washington next week, I shall do everything within the limitations of my power to make the trade treaties effective by defeating this unworthy amendment. This great economic problem transcends all political lines. I am firmly convinced that the continuation of those treaties without change will serve as the real basis for the future peace, security, and prosperity of the world.

COL. ROBERT McCORMICK OF THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a newspaper article from the New York Times of May 19, 1943.

This unusual news story coming from the enemy through Tokyo radio beamed to the North American continent, vitally concerns the people of this hard-working, hard-fighting nation. The article portrays the admiration of the Japanese Government for Col. Robert McCormick, publisher of the Chicago Tribune.

We may rest assured that all such broadcasts have governmental sanction in Japan and that the Japanese war lords have no McCormicks opposing them or obstructing their war efforts.

All of us can well imagine what would happen to this type of publisher, publishing an obstructionist paper, say, in the city of Kobe. Kobe would be literally forced to do without his cosmic dissertations upon the issue of the day, the truth of the past and the low-down on tomorrow. Chicago newspapers have renamed Colonel McCormick—Colonel McCosmic.

It seems almost too good to be true in this cynical world that the foreign enemies of this nation should have, without tremendous expenditures of money and risk to the lives of those engaged in this sort of work, domestic enemies of this Government doing such a commendable job for them.

A newspaper in my own State of Pennsylvania headlined this same story with the words—"Hon. McCormick, Hon. Wonderful, says Tokyo." I ask to have that article included in the RECORD as a part of my remarks; and I further ask consent to have printed in the RECORD, as well, as a part of my remarks, an editorial from the Philadelphia Record of a later issue, entitled "The Japs Praise McCormick, Promoter of Disunity."

If the Honorable McCormick has any explanation to offer for this friendly gesture from Japan, I would be very pleased to put it in the RECORD any time he publishes it.

There being no objection, the articles and editorial were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times of May 18 and 19, 1943]

JAPAN LAUDS PLAN OF COLONEL McCORMICK—PUBLISHER'S IDEA TO HAVE UNITED STATES TAKE BRITISH EMPIRE HAILED

An English-language broadcast from Tokyo radio beamed to North America said yesterday that "Mr. McCormick's plan for the absorption by America of all the British countries may perhaps be the best plan to safeguard American interests," the Columbia Broadcasting System short-wave listening station reported. (Col. Robert McCormick is the owner of the Chicago Tribune.)

Excerpts of the talk follow:

"Just as you and I, Colonel McCormick * * * has both friends and enemies. His enemies brand him as a British-hating archisolationist, a publicity-thirsty megalomaniac. To his friends, however, Colonel McCormick is a man of independent will, a man of action, a fearless foe, ready to express himself regardless of consequences. I also assume there must be a group of neutrals who has no definite likes or dislikes about the colonel.

"At any rate, there is no doubt that Robert McCormick is an extremely charming character. I think America today needs many more characters like this Chicago veteran. You will recall that a little more than 3 weeks ago the fighting Chicago newspaper publisher declared that he would start a Nation-wide editorial campaign for the absorption by the United States of all the British countries.

"Remember that Colonel McCormick's Chicago Tribune has no less than 1,000,000 circulation. * * * Moreover, there is the possibility that other influential newspapers, such as the New York Daily News and the Washington Times-Herald also may join the colonel's annexation campaign. * * * They will have tremendous influence over the reading public."

HON. McCORMICK HON. WONDERFUL, SAYS RADIO TOKYO—AMERICA NEEDS MORE LIKE HIM, SAYS BROADCAST AIMED AT UNITED STATES

"Robert McCormick is an extremely charming character. I think America today needs many more characters like this Chicago veteran."

Tokyo radio speaking. And complimenting the owner of the Chicago Tribune for his editorial suggestion that the United States absorb all British countries.

PLAN WINS JAP PRAISE

An English-language broadcast beamed to North America Sunday by Tokyo radio said the plan "may perhaps be the best to safeguard American interests."

The broadcast was picked up by Columbia Broadcasting System's short-wave listening station in New York, which made public these excerpts:

"Just as you and I, Colonel McCormick * * * has both friends and enemies. His enemies brand him as a British-hating arch-isolationist, a publicity-thirsty megalomaniac.

SEE CAMPAIGN SPREADING

"To his friends, however, Colonel McCormick is a man of independent will, a man of action, a fearless foe, already to express himself regardless of consequences. I also assume there must be a group of neutrals who has no definite likes or dislikes about the colonel. * * *

"You will recall that a little more than 3 weeks ago the fighting Chicago newspaper publisher declared that he would start a Nation-wide editorial campaign for the absorption by the United States of all the British countries.

"Remember that Colonel McCormick's Chicago Tribune has no less than 1,000,000 circulation. * * * Moreover, there is the possibility that other influential newspapers, such as the New York Daily News and the Washington Times-Herald Daily News and the colonel's annexation campaign. * * * They will have tremendous influence over the reading public."

CALLED TRUE AMERICAN

Tokyo radio also said McCormick is conducting a "one-man crusade for the defense of true Americanism and for the salvation of the United States from the hands of the * * * radical internationalists led by Mr. Roosevelt."

THE JAPS PRAISE MCCORMICK, PROMOTER OF DISUNITY

A lot of Americans got a laugh out of the latest proposal of Col. Robert R. McCormick, publisher of the Chicago Tribune.

The proposal called for the United States absorbing the British Commonwealth of Nations (all but South Africa) and the British Empire. England, Scotland, Wales, and Ireland, he suggested, would become four more States of our Union.

But the proposal was no laughing matter. Some of the British took it seriously and began to wonder whether we really planned to take over the British Empire, as the Axis radio had beel telling them.

The Montreal Gazette declared the idea was no joke in Canada. It said: "In the McCormick plan, with its specious imitation of a world outlook, there may well be a weapon for power isolationism."

Now Japan proves that McCormick was more sinister than facetious by openly praising him.

The Tokyo radio, in a broadcast beamed to North America, declared: "Robert McCormick is an extremely charming character. * * * America today needs many more characters like this Chicago veteran."

It touted the plan as "safeguarding Americanism" and attacked the "radical interventionists led by Mr. Roosevelt."

Tokyo reminded Americans of something that the scoffers often forget—that the Chicago Tribune has a circulation of 1,000,000 (daily), and there are other powerful papers owned by the McCormick-Patterson dynasty peddling the same brand of poison—the New York Daily News and the Washington Times-Herald.

Some of us may think that McCormick belongs in a comic book. Japan knows better.

This latest proposal to create disunity between Britain and the United States is only one of a long series of Roosevelt-hating, isolationist, anti-United Nations tactics by the McCormick-Patterson press.

It has sneered at Britain, attacked lease-lend, accused Roosevelt of dragging us into the war even after Pearl Harbor, warned of "dictatorship" and cancelation of elections, cast aspersions at Russia, and so on, ad nauseam. It had already won the commendation of the Berlin radio. Now Tokyo adds its congratulations.

This comes very close to "giving aid and comfort to the enemy," as defined in the treason clause of the Constitution—closer than John L. Lewis came in calling a wartime strike.

We suggest for McCormick not only an iron cross but the Japanese order of the rising sun or the order of the golden kite. As Churchill is a symbol of United Nations unity, McCormick is a symbol of disunity.

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. SCRUGHAM] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are detained on important public business.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] is absent because of the death of his mother.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. THOMAS] is absent because of the death of his wife.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 1762 making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that the motion is not debatable.

Mr. McNARY. I appreciate that, Mr. President. I do not propose to debate it. I wish to make a statement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the motion made by the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Oregon for the purpose he stated.

Mr. McNARY. No, Mr. President; I am not asking the Senator to yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall yield to the Senator for the purpose he stated. I have moved that the Senate proceed to consider the bill.

Mr. McNARY. I know that motion is not debatable, Mr. President. I shall wait till Senate action is taken on the question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee that the Senate proceed to consider House bill 1762.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1762) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I did not rise for the purpose of opposing the motion made by the able Senator from Tennessee. I know full well that a motion made before 2 o'clock today is not debatable. But I hoped the Senator in charge of the bill would be willing to defer action on the bill until Thursday or Friday. The senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT]——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I wish to suggest to the Senator that I understand the item on page 4 of the bill providing for the National Resources Planning Board is a matter of dispute among Senators, and that the Senator from Ohio is unavoidably away from the Senate today because of very sad circumstances in his family.

Mr. McNARY. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. But I should like to have all the other items voted on today.

I wish to say to the Senator——

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not wish to yield any further.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator had stated what I intended to state very much better than I could, and I appreciate his courtesy. I was going to say that the senior Senator from Ohio, for the reason assigned by the Senator from Tennessee, made the request that the item relating to the National Resources Planning Board be put over until Thursday. More than that, Mr. President, there are a number of Senators absent because of official business, and it might be well to defer action on the bill in its entirety until Thursday. However, I am not asking for that at this time.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator.

Mr. McNARY. I am simply repeating the request made to me by the Senator from Ohio and by other Senators. I shall leave the matter so far as that is concerned to the wise judgment of the distinguished Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, it seems to me we ought to proceed with consideration of the bill. If Senators will look at "Status of appropriation bills, first session, Seventy-eighth Congress," on the back page of the calendar they will note that we have a great deal of work to do on appropriation measures if we are to get them through by the 1st of July. For that reason, and especially in view of the fact that I am told by our acting leader that we cannot have sessions tomorrow and the next day because of the absence of a great many Senators, I think it would be most wise to proceed with all the items of the bill except the one on page 4 which has been referred to, which I shall be glad to have go over until Thursday.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, personally, as I stated before the session convened, I have no objection to that arrangement. Other Senators may have. I think the able junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] would probably like to have the whole measure go over until Thursday.

Mr. BYRD. I will say, Mr. President, that I think by all means the senior Senator from Ohio should be permitted to make his argument with respect to the item dealing with the National Resources Planning Board. It occurs to me that perhaps no great progress would be made now, and that it would be well to have the whole bill go over.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, we have the whole day before us, and I know of nothing else, at the present moment at any rate, which will come up, and if we can proceed with consideration of the bill and dispose of the other items in the bill—and I think we can dispose of them very quickly—I hope that may be done, because we must make progress with the appropriation bills if we are to pass them all by July 1. Our committee is doing everything it can to get the bills before the Senate as rapidly as possible, and we want the Senate to act as speedily as may be on the bills as they come before it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Of course, the only alternative is to take up the measure relating to the extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, and there was some discussion whether that might be done today. So far as I am concerned, as the ranking Republican member of the Finance Committee which has dealt with the subject, I agreed to that suggestion. But I do not think it would be fair to spend 2 or 3 hours today on one bill, and then ask the Senate to proceed to consider the other bill. If the bill dealing with the extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act is to be taken up today I think it should be taken up immediately.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, it will take the Senate but a few moments to act on all but one of the items of the appropriation bill. There are very few controversial matters other than the item in the bill dealing with the National Resources Planning Board.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Then what advantage is there in considering the bill at all until we can go straight through with it?

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Michigan knows the usual procedure in getting bills through the Senate. The sooner we get the noncontroversial items passed upon and behind us, the better it is. Long experience has shown me that we ought to move as rapidly as we can now. I hope the Senate will agree to proceed with consideration of the items of the bill other than that dealing with the National Resources Planning Board, and I shall ask that it do so.

Mr. McNARY. We might have the understanding, Mr. President, that if we strike any controversial amendment—the minute it is detected that an item is controversial—it be allowed to go over, and that we simply pass on items which are not the subject of debate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if it shall unexpectedly appear that some good reason shall be advanced for asking that an item in the bill, other than the one heretofore referred to, be passed over, I should not object to that being done.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that I intend to move to strike out section 102 which provides that—

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, the salaries of the Commissioners of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Commissioners of the United States Maritime Commission, with the exception of the Chairman so long as the office is held——

Mr. McKELLAR. On what page does the section appear?

Mr. WHEELER. On page 66. It is the section which fixes the salaries of the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission at $10,000. Under the law of 1920, their salaries were fixed at $12,000; but during the depression they were cut down to $10,000, and the item providing for that amount has been carried in the bill. I shall want to take up that matter. However, I do not think there will be much controversy over it, for I think everyone will concede that particularly at this time the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission should receive the salaries which were fixed for them in the law. In the Commission there now are directors who receive $10,612, and in addition are paid overtime; so that the directors and some of the employees of the Commission are receiving more money than the Commissioners themselves are receiving.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, that matter was brought up before the committee, and the committee decided to leave the item as it has been for a number of years. Let me say to the Senator that we can discuss it when the time comes.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the amendments of the committee be first considered, beginning with the amendment commencing on page 3.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The clerk will proceed to state the committee amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Title I—Executive Office of the President—Bureau of the Budget", on page 3, line 23, after the word "amended", to strike out "$1,655,000" and insert "$1,450,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 16, to insert:

EMERGENCY FUND FOR THE PRESIDENT

Defense housing: The unexpended balance of the appropriation made under the heading "Emergency fund for the President, defense housing," contained in the Third Supplemental National Defense Appropriation Act, 1942, is continued available until June 30, 1944.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the next amendment is on page 4, and relates to the National Resources Planning Board. By agreement, the amendment is to go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 10, to insert:

BOARD OF INVESTIGATION AND RESEARCH—TRANSPORTATION

Board of Investigation and Research: For all necessary expenses to enable the Board of Investigation and Research to perform the duties authorized under part 1 of title III of the Transportation Act of 1940 including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; not to exceed $500 for periodicals and newspapers; not to exceed $12,000 for travel, including attendance at meetings or conventions of societies or associations concerned with the problem of the board; contract stenographic reporting services; lawbooks and books of reference; rents in the District of Columbia; and payment of actual transportation and other necessary expenses and not to exceed $10 per diem in lieu of subsistence to persons serving, while away from their homes, without other compensation from the United States, in an advisory capacity to the Board; and including not to exceed $20,000 for printing and binding; and not to exceed $10,000 for the temporary employment of persons or organizations, by contract or otherwise, without regard to section 3709, Revised Statutes, or the civil service or classification laws, to remain available until September 18, 1944, $350,000, which amount shall be added to and merged with the unexpended balance as of June 30, 1943, of the appropriations under this head in the Third Supplemental National Defense Appropriation Act, 1942, and the First Supplemental National Defense Appropriation Act, 1943: Provided, That of this amount not to exceed $50,000 shall be available for economy and fitness studies.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Federal Power Commission—Salaries and expenses", on page 17, line 4, after the word "services", to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$150,000" and in line 5, after the word "exceed" to strike out "$76,670" and insert "$115,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Federal Trade Commission," on page 18, line 17, after the figures "$1,900,000" to insert a comma and "of which not less than $172,410 shall be available for the enforcement of the Wool Products Labeling Act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Federal Works Agency—Office of the Administrator", on page 19, line 24, after the words "classification laws," to strike out "$200,000" and insert "$275,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Strategic highway network," on page 30, line 15, after "55 Stat.", to strike out "821–822" and insert "765."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Access roads," on page 30, line 24, after "55 Stat.", to strike out "821-822" and insert "766–767."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Surveys and plans," on page 31, line 10, after "55 Stat.", to strike out "821–822" and insert "767."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I can scarcely keep up with the very rapid reading of the gracious clerk of the Senate. What was the last item?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is merely a statute reference.

Mr. McNARY. Where is it?

Mr. McKELLAR. On page 31, line 10, at the beginning of the line. The proposal is to strike out "821–822," and insert "767." The item is merely a reference to a statute; it has no other meaning.

Mr. McNARY. I was not questioning the item; I simply wanted to know where it could be found in the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is entirely correct in inquiring, and I am very happy to give him the information.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 31, line 10.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Interstate Commerce Commission—Salaries and Expenses", on page 37, line 18, after the word "act", to strike out "$3,000,000" and insert $3,100,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "National Housing Agency—Federal Home Loan Bank Administration", on page 43, line 2, after the words "total of," to strike out "$8,310,734, and such corporation shall be liquidated as provided by section 4 (k) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 to the extent necessitated by the reduction of administrative personnel herein required, and the expenses incident to such liquidation shall be considered as nonadministrative expenses for the purposes hereof. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation shall not incur for administrative expenses in excess of $833,333.33 for any month from July to December 1943, inclusive, nor in excess of $208,333.33 for any month from January to June 1944, inclusive" and insert "$12,142,200."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 15, after the numerals "1936", to insert a colon and the following additional proviso: "Provided further, That, notwithstanding any order or regulation issued by the Office of Price Administration, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation is authorized to dispose of any real property to which such corporation has title upon such terms and conditions as the Federal Home Loan Bank Commissioner determines will expedite the orderly liquidation of such real property."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, after line 21, to insert:

The appropriation under the head "National Housing Agency" contained in the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act, 1942, is hereby continued available until June 30, 1944.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Securities and Exchange Commission," on page 52, line 7, after the figures "$4,000,000", to strike out the colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to promulgate or enforce any rules or regulations known as the proposed rule or regulation F-9 and F-10, and providing in substance (1) that engineers' reports shall be mandatory, (2) requires a disclosure of the cost or purchase price, and (3) an abridgment of the right to appoint an agent, all with reference to the sale of oil and gas royalties and leases, under the jurisdiction of the Oil and Gas Division of the Securities and Exchange Commission."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Tariff Commission", on page 55, line 11, before the words "of which", to strike out "$750,000" and insert "$825,000."

The amendment was agreed to

The next amendment was, under the heading "Veterans' Administration", on page 63, line 4, after the word "facilities", to insert a colon and the following additional proviso: "Provided further, That notwithstanding the limitation in section 106 of this act, this appropriation shall be available for the purchase of legal newspapers in an amount not exceeding $200."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I should like to have the amendment explained by the Senator in charge of the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the item is a very small one of $200 for the purchase of legal newspapers. Let me say that I felt the same way about the item as the Senator did when it was presented to the Senate. I shall read the amendment:

That notwithstanding the limitation of section 106 of this act—

I need not read the proviso further.

General Hines, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, stated that the Comptroller General had ruled that legal newspapers were newspapers within the scope of section 106 and, therefore, within the $50 limitation. The Administrator stated further that the need of these legal publications arises out of the necessity for their chief attorneys receiving due notice in connection with actions pending in the State courts, in guardianship cases, and being currently informed on the status thereof. Such information could be secured by laborious and time-wasting search of the court records, but this would cost, in time of salaried employees, far more than the subscription price of the publications, and would be much less efficient as to results.

The publications are technical legal periodicals. They are newspapers only in the sense that they are so styled for the purpose of qualifying under State statutes for publication of legal notices. No one but a practicing lawyer would subscribe to any of them and then only for the technical aspects—not for the general news value.

For the reasons given by General Hines, the committee added the $200 limitation for legal newspapers. As the Senator will notice, in line 7, instead of saying "Purchase of newspapers", it says "Purchase of legal newspapers." They are in a class by themselves. Their only value is with reference to legal notices, court notices, and things of that sort.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. These are newspapers which, under State statutes, carry notices in guardianship proceedings, estate proceedings, and matters before probate and surrogate courts. They bring to the Veterans' Administration a knowledge in which it has a real interest in matters of that sort.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is entirely correct.

Mr. McNARY. I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 63, line 5.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, after line 18, to insert:

Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief: For payment of claims as authorized by article IV of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act Amendments of 1942, $70,000, to be immediately and continuously available until expended: Provided, That any moneys received under said article IV shall be credited to this appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, line 1, after the word "Administration", to strike out "$887,017,000" and insert "$887,087,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title II—General Provisions," on page 70, after line 24, to strike out:

SEC. 205. Unless otherwise specified and until July 1, 1944, no part of any appropriation contained in this or any other act shall be used to pay the compensation of any officer or employee of the Government of the United States, or of any agency the majority of the stock of which is owned by the Government of the United States, whose post of duty is in continental United States unless such person is a citizen of the United States or a person in the service of the United States on the date of this enactment who, being eligible for citizenship, had theretofore filed a declaration of intention to become a citizen or who owes allegiance to the United States.

And insert:

SEC. 205. Unless otherwise specified and until July 1, 1944, no part of any appropriation contained in this or any other act shall be used to pay the compensation of any officer or employee of the Government of the United States (including any agency the majority of the stock of which is owned by the Government of the United States) whose post of duty is in continental United States unless such person (1) is a citizen of the United States, (2) is a person in the service of the United States on the date of enactment of this act who, being eligible for citizenship, had filed a declaration of intention to become a citizen of the United States prior to such date, or (3), is a person who owes allegiance to the United States.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the distinguished Senator in charge of the bill what class of persons is included in the third category—

(3) is a person who owes allegiance to the United States.

What persons, besides citizens and persons who have filed declarations of intention to become citizens, owe allegiance to the United States?

Mr. McKELLAR. Section 205 as passed by the House seemed to members of the Senate committee to need clarification. The amendment which the Senate committee added was for the purpose of clarifying the language of the House bill. It did not change it, as we understood it. It appears that no suggestion was made as to the definition of a person who owes allegiance to the United States. I am in doubt about it myself.

This language has been carried in the law for a number of years, and we left it there. I am not sure what it means.

Mr. GILLETTE. I cannot conceive of any person who is not a citizen and who has not filed a declaration of intention to become a citizen, who owes allegiance to the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. Possibly it refers to a person from the Philippine Islands, the Virgin Islands, or Puerto Rico, who owes allegiance.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think this amendment comes under the head of controversial amendments, and I ask that it go over.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MAYBANK in the chair). Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

That completes the committee amendments, with the exception of those passed over.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] I offer an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee, on behalf of the Senator from Virginia will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 32, line 24, after the figures "$2,531,000", it is proposed to insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That the salary of the Assistant Comptroller General shall be at the rate of $10,000 per annum effective on the date of enactment of this act, so long as the position is held by the present incumbent."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, on behalf of the committee and on behalf of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] I offer an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee on behalf of the committee and the Senator from Virginia will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 42, before the period at the end of line 25, it is proposed to insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That the Administrator may, with the approval of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, transfer to this authorization or to an authorization of a constituent unit from funds available for administrative expenses of the constituent units or the office of the Administrator of the National Housing Agency such additional sums as represent a consolidation in the office of the Administrator or in a constituent unit of any of the administrative functions of the National Housing Agency; but no such transfer of funds shall be made unless the consolidation will result in a reduction in manpower and a savings in administrative expenses, which savings shall not be used for administrative expenses but instead shall be returned to or remain in the funds from which administrative expenses are drawn under this authorization."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the only knowledge I have of the amendment is from hearing it read. It seems somewhat complex. I ask that it be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

Does the Senator from Tennessee wish to offer further amendments at this time?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have no further amendments to offer.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, would the Senator be willing to pass over until Thursday the amendment on page 43, line 2, and the amendment on page 46, line 15, relating to the Federal Home Loan Bank Administration? I may wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be glad to do so, of course. The amendments have already been agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I should like to move to reconsider the votes by which the amendment on page 43, line 2, and the amendment on page 46, line 15, were agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator can move to reconsider either now or on Thursday.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment on page 43, line 2, and the amendment on page 46, line 15, were agreed to, so that they may be subject to discussion and amendment on Thursday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I shall not object, but I wish to say to the Senator that, as he knows, the House put in a limitation, and that limitation was stricken out by the Senate committee. The Senate committee provision would not change the present course of liquidation, except that there is a proviso at the end of the section which requires the Federal Home Loan Bank Board to sell, as rapidly as possible, approximately 31,000 houses which it has on hand. It had on hand 265,000 houses. It has already sold approximately 235,000 houses, and the time is so propitious for selling houses in most places in the country that the committee felt that the properties should be sold as rapidly as possible. Testimony was given by members of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation both before the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures, of which the distinguished Senator from Virginia is chairman, and in connection with which he has done such a wonderful job, and before the Appropriations Committee. The testimony shows that their collections are excellent. I am very much in hope that the Senator will not insist upon reconsideration. He heard fully the testimony which was presented before his committee, and I hope he will not conclude to offer his amendment on Thursday. However, I am perfectly willing to have the amendments go over.

Mr. BYRD. There is nothing in the appropriation bill, as I understand it, which would in any way control the liquidation.

The Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures has recommended that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation be liquidated not later than July 1, 1945. I desire to confer with the Senator with respect to some provision to be inserted in the bill which would indicate that Congress is in favor of reasonably prompt liquidation of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, one of the reasons which actuated our committee was the fact that the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] came before our committee and said that the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, which had this matter in charge, would probably make a recommendation along the line suggested by the Senator from Virginia, and we thought that the legislative committee had better do it.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, if the amendments are to go over, I make the point that we can argue them when the question is again presented next Thursday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] that the votes by which the committee amendment on page 43, line 2, and the committee amendment on page 46, line 15, were agreed to, be reconsidered.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFICER. Without objection, the amendments will be passed over.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, on page 66, line 9, after "1944" and the comma, I move to strike out the words "of the Commissioners of the Interstate Commerce Commission", so that the salaries of the Commissioners of the Interstate Commerce Commission will be returned to the level originally fixed in the act of 1920.

When the Transportation Act of 1920 was passed——

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I ask that the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana be passed over. We can take it up later when we consider the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Oregon will not insist upon his request for the reason that it will be impossible for me to be present on Thursday next when the bill is to be taken up again. This amendment should not be a very controversial issue.

Mr. McNARY. I am assuming, from the attitude of the able Senator in charge of the bill, that the amendment will be controversial. I am not expressing any view; but the committee has acted adversely, and I can see the possibility of controversy. I merely asked that the amendment be passed over. However, I do not wish to inconvenience the Senator.

Mr. WHEELER. I shall soon leave for Chicago, and it will be impossible for me to be here on Thursday next. Otherwise I should not have offered the amendment at this time.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment being taken up, but I wish to explain the situation as it appeared to the committee when the matter was before it for consideration.

Mr. WHEELER. I have the testimony taken before the committee. The chairman of the committee said that so far as he was concerned he thought the original salary provision should be restored. Let me give the history.

Under the original act of 1887 to regulate commerce, the Commissioners' salaries were fixed at $7,500 per annum. They were increased to $10,000 in the 1906 amendment to the act to regulate commerce known as the Hepburn amendment. Under the Transportation Act of 1920 the salaries were increased to $12,000. They were never changed by any act amending the Interstate Commerce Commission Act.

Effective July 1, 1932, under the act making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1933, commonly known as the Economy Act (47 Stat. 402) the salaries were reduced to $10,000. The provision reducing the salaries was continued in effect for the fiscal year 1934 by Section 4 (a) of the Treasury-Post Office Appropriation Act, 1934 (47 Stat. 1513) as amended by Section 4 (a) of an act to maintain the credit of the United States (48 Stat. 13).

Sections 2 and 3 of this latter act provided for a further reduction in the Commissioners' salaries of 15 percent per annum which made the Commissioners' salaries, as of April 1, 1933, $8,500 per annum. This salary remained in effect until January 31, 1934, when the reduction was made 10 percent or to $9,000, under Section 21 (a) of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1935 (48 Stat. 521). Eective July 1, 1934, the reduction was made 5 percent and the Commissioners' salaries were made $9,500 until March 31, 1935, when Public Resolution No. 3, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, eliminated the reduction entirely. Thus, the Commissioners' salaries would have been restored to the statutory figure of $12,000, but for a provision carried in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1935 (48 Stat. 521) and subsequent years, which continues the provision that for the then current fiscal year the Commissioners' salaries should not exceed $10,000.

I call attention to the fact that the salaries of other Government employees were returned to their normal base. However, the salaries of the Commissioners of the Interstate Commerce Commission were not so restored.

With reference to the Interstate Commerce Commission Act, allow me to say that since the Transportation Act was passed in 1920 we have added to the duties of the Interstate Commerce Commission by providing that it should regulate the operation of trucks and busses throughout the United States. Approximately 2 years ago we again added to the duties of the Interstate Commerce Commission by requiring it to regulate water transportation in interstate and foreign commerce. So today we are imposing upon the Interstate Commerce Commission greater burdens than are imposed upon any other commission in the United States Government. It regulates billions of dollars worth of property in the United States and deals with one of the most important subjects coming before the Congress and the people of the United States year in and year out.

I also invite attention to the fact that the effect of the law which was recently enacted increasing the salaries and overtime pay of employees of the Government was to increase the salaries of some of the directors in the Interstate Commerce Commission above those of the Commissioners themselves. I submit that while we are spending billions of dollars for everything under the sun, the Commissioners of the Interstate Commerce Commission should receive the salaries which were provided for them when the act was originally passed. There can now be no excuse for reducing their salaries. The only excuse for reducing them in 1933 was the condition of the Treasury and the fact that salaries generally were being reduced under the Economy Act. Other salaries which were reduced under the Economy Act have been restored, but those of the Interstate Commerce Commissioners have not been restored.

Mr. McKELLAR. In the beginning I was rather inclined to take the view the distinguished Senator from Montana took, but the committee, as I recall, rather overwhelmingly voted in favor of leaving the provision as it was and I do not think we are now in a position to raise the salaries. They were reduced by law in 1932, as the Senator from Montana has said, and the law now provides that the salaries shall be $10,000 a year.

I am inclined to think that the amendment of the Senator from Montana is subject to a point of order because the salaries have been fixed at $10,000 a year by act of Congress, known as the Economy Act, and for that reason the amendment would not be in order. I may interpose a point of order later, but waiving it for the moment——

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. If the statement made by the able Senator is correct then why the necessity for the provision in the appropriation bill that during the next fiscal year the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be paid at the rate of $10,000 per annum? Is it not correct that the statutory law is the provision to be found in the Interstate Commerce Commission Act which fixes the salaries at $12,000 per annum, and this appropriation is a limitation on the statutory salary and a reduction?

Mr. McKELLAR. I am not certain about that.

Mr. OVERTON. I am not certain either, and am asking for information.

Mr. McKELLAR. For that reason I have not interposed a point of order.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me interrupt the Senator, if I may, to say that the statement of the Senator from Louisiana is exactly correct. The Transportation Act of 1920 fixed the salaries of the Commissioners at $12,000 a year.

Mr. McKELLAR. I remember that, but it was amended afterward.

Mr. WHEELER. It was never amended, and if this provision were stricken out then the salaries of the Commissioners would immediately be restored to $12,000 a year.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well; but leaving that for the present, the reason these salaries were reduced in 1932 was because of the peculiar situation so far as finances were concerned which existed at that time. I remember that what he said was entirely correct and, if there was necessity for such action at that time, it is a million times greater today. I have long felt that Senators and Members of the House of Representatives ought to have more salary than they receive.

Their work has been vastly increased, but I would not think of offering an amendment to increase the salaries of Senators and Members of the other House at a time such as this, and I am rather inclined to think the committee was entirely correct in not increasing the salaries of the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the members of the Maritime Commission, and the members of the Tariff Commission. If the amendment of the Senator from Montana as to the Interstate Commerce Commission should be agreed to, a similar amendment ought to be made to apply to the members of the other two Commissions, for they ought to be treated alike. But, Mr. President, I do not believe now is the time to increase salaries. Due to the increase in the cost of living, brought about by the war, it was right that the salaries of low-paid employees should be increased, but to increase salaries of $10,000 is not necessary now in order that the Commissioners may live. They may have to live more economically, just as we have to live more economically on our salaries of $10,000. We get $10,000 a year and we have to live more economically on that sum than was the case some years ago. I am inclined to think that the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the members of the Tariff Commission, and the members of the Maritime Commission will unquestionably have to pinch themselves a little and tighten their belts, just as these times require Senators to pull their belts in a little bit; but they can manage to get along.

The great thing we ought to consider now is to win this war. I do not think it is a good time to raise salaries of $10,000 or more. I do not think that these particular salaries ought to be reduced; and if it were any other time except a time of war there would be no opposition on my part to restoring these salaries; indeed, when I first considered the matter, I was inclined to think that these salaries ought to be restored to $12,000 a year, but I am not so sure about it now. I do not know whether it would really meet the approval of the country if we were to increase salaries of $10,000 to $12,000 at this time.

So I am asking the Senate to uphold the committee in its action in leaving the salaries as they are. The House of Representatives have already done so. As I remember—and I have asked the clerk of the committee to verify my memory—the Senate for a number of years has uniformly voted to increase these salaries, and has stricken out a provision similar to the one in question, but, nevertheless, it has been retained in the bill every year. The House insists upon it; and there we are.

Mr. President, I simply do not believe this is a good time to raise salaries, and I hope the Senator from Montana will not insist on his amendment. As soon as the war is over I shall be perfectly willing to restore these salaries; I think the committee will be willing to do so, and I think the other branch of Congress will be willing to do so. It is true the work of the Commissioners has been increased, and they are doing good work; in fact, all three of these Commissions are doing good work; there is no doubt about that; but I think the Members of the Senate and the Members of the House of Representatives are also doing good work, but their salaries are not being increased and they have salaries of only $10,000 a year.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, it is not a question of raising the salaries of the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission. It is a question of restoring their salaries to the amount fixed in the original Transportation Act of 1920.

Now, I shall read what the Senator from Tennessee said in the hearings:

Senator McKELLAR. The next item is on page 61 and refers to the salaries of the Commissioners of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. BARTEL. That is the matter of the Commissioners' salaries, previously discussed?

Senator McKELLAR. Frankly I think that the law ought to be carried out, so far as I individually am concerned.

Then he said:

My recollection is that the House conferees—I believe I was on the conference committee—just stood out against any raise in those salaries.

So the acting chairman of the committee himself says they ought to be increased. As I have pointed out, in view of conditions, I agree that we should not go ahead and raise salaries generally, but we have in the Interstate Commerce Commission at the present time a curious situation, which, I am inclined to think, does not prevail in the case of any other commission, in that directors who are getting $10,000 a year as their base salary, with the increase which has been recently granted by the Congress of the United States, with their overtime and otherwise, will be receiving more money than are the Commissioners themselves. When we have employees getting more money that the heads of the Commission, there is bound to be created some little friction, some difficulty. I say that the salaries of the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission ought to be increased and restored to the original amount.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. NYE. I rose merely to say that, as a member of the Appropriations Committee, I moved to strike from the bill this restriction upon the salaries of the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, for the reason which the Senator has so ably stated. I mean to support his amendment this afternoon, and I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield the floor to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, with reference to the observations made by the acting chairman of the Appropriations Committee in charge of the bill, I wish to state that the position taken by the committee on this bill is not in accordance with his conception of what ought to be done because it carries with it an exception. The bill declares that "with the exception of the Chairman"—of the United States Maritime Commission—"so long as the office is held by the present incumbent," and so forth. Of course, we know we have a very able Chairman of the United States Maritime Commission, but I do not think anyone disputes the statement that the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission are very able men, and have just as much work to do as does the Chairman of the United States Maritime Commission. If we are to follow the argument made by the able Senator from Tennessee to its logical conclusion, the committee should have stricken out of the bill the provision making an exception of the salary applying to the Chairman of the United States Maritime Commission.

I do not think any comparison can be instituted, so far as the volume of work and the responsibility now attaching to the offices are concerned, between the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Commissioners of the United States Tariff Commission, because the work done by the United States Tariff Commission has abated considerably. On the other hand, responsibilities which from year to year have been imposed on the Interstate Commerce Commission have increased. As the Senator from Montana has pointed out, we have added to their duties, and only 2 years ago, as I recall the date, we added to their jurisdiction the regulation of transportation over inland waterways, and a few years before that we gave them jurisdiction over transportation by busses. So their duties and responsibilities have increased, while those of the United States Tariff Commission have decreased because of the war; yet no distinction is made. The duties of the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission are just as great as those of the chairman of the Maritime Commission, the responsibilities are as heavy, and an exception is made in his case, and none in reference to the memoers of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. STEWART. Is it not correct to say that the salaries of members of the Interstate Commerce Commission are fixed at $12,000 by a statute passed many years ago?

Mr. OVERTON. It was passed in 1920, according to my recollection.

Mr. STEWART. And that Congress has fallen into the practice, in the last few years, of merely not appropriating the full amount of the salary?

Mr. OVERTON. The Senator is correct.

Mr. STEWART. So, after all, it would not be a matter of raising or increasing salaries; it would be a matter of appropriating a sufficient amount to pay salaries already fixed?

Mr. OVERTON. We are reducing a salary below the statutory limit.

Mr. STEWART. I wish I could persuade my colleague not to oppose the amendment. This is a very meritorious proposal.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand the amendment of the Senator from Montana, it is merely to strike out the reference to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does not the Senator think that if we are to strike out the reference to the Interstate Commerce Commissioners, we should strike out the reference to the members of the Tariff Commission and the members of the Maritime Commission, as well? The law provides the Commissioners shall receive $12,000 a year, and if we are to obey the act of 1920 in the way the Senator from Montana asks as to one commission, then, in all fairness, the members of the three commissions should be put on the same basis. That is the way the matter strikes me. The question of work is relative, of course, and the Congress has fixed the salaries by act, and I think that if the reference to one commission is stricken out, the reference to all should be stricken out.

Mr. WHEELER. I am not sure that the salaries of the Tariff Commissioners were fixed at $12,000 a year. They may have been.

Mr. McKELLAR. They were.

Mr. WHEELER. I do know what the situation is with reference to the Interstate Commerce Commission. I happen to be thoroughly familiar with the activities of that Commission. Work has been piled on that Commission in the last 3 or 4 years. The salaries of the Commissioners were fixed at $12,000 a year in 1920, when they had only the railroads to deal with. Since then we have added to their burden by including the regulation of busses and trucks, and, in addition to that, the regulation of transportation over inland waterways.

Mr. Eastman is now the head of the O. D. T., and that, again, has increased the work of the Interstate Commerce Commission tremendously.

I say that there is not a commission in the city of Washington which has duties so complicated as those of the Interstate Commerce Commission, nor one which has to deal with the regulation of transportation running into the billions of dollars, as does the Interstate Commerce Commission.

There is one thing which has not been said about the Commission. Other commissions have been criticized; and in the last few years young men, just out of college, have been brought to this city and put in one department or the other and paid $10,000 a year, but in the Interstate Commerce Commission we have responsible men, who have had great experience in their line of endeavor. One member of the Commission resigned about 2 years ago because he could not afford to remain on the Commission. Mr. Eastman has been a member of the Commission for over 20 years. I do not know just how much longer he has been a member of the Commission, but it has been ever since I have been in the Senate, and his salary is fixed by law at $12,000. We are not proposing to increase his salary. What is proposed is to strike out a limitation under which he cannot receive the salary which was fixed by the Congress more than 20 years ago.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I agree with all the Senator says, and I should be glad to do what he suggests if we were not in a war in which the very life of our Government is at stake. I wish to be frank. In my opinion Commissioner Eastman is one of the best officials of the Government. The members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the members of the Maritime Commission, the members of the Tariff Commission are all doing fine work; I agree with every word that has been said about them, and I wish it were so that we could increase their salaries, but I still am of the opinion, the matured opinion—for, as the Senator has just indicated, when the matter first came up I took a different view of it—that any of us who are receiving as much as $10,000 a year should be satisfied at this critical time in our history and not ask for more. That is what I think about it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and of the subcommittee which handled this matter. I usually go along with the chairman of the subcommittee, the Senator from Tennessee. I did not happen to be present at the time the vote was taken on the provision we are now discussing. I had left my proxy with the ranking Republican, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], and I understand he cast it in the affirmative, to strike the language out.

I wish to address myself to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] and to the objection presented by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]. I speak in support of the amendment.

The Interstate Commerce Commission was the first administrative commission created in our Government, away back in 1887, and from that day to this the Commission has set the mold of practice for all administrative commissions. The practice established in its administrative, quasi judicial work by the Interstate Commerce Commission has been the pattern for other commissions. Always the Interstate Commerce Commission has outranked in importance the other commissions.

In the Transportation Act of 1920 Congress fixed the salaries of the Commissioners at $12,000 a year. I am not sure, but I am under the impression that that salary was above the average paid members of other commissions, and perhaps it was the only commission the members of which received $12,000 a year.

The fixing of the salaries of the Commissioners at $12,000 a year was a recognition of the importance, the dignity, and the scope of the work handled by the Interstate Commerce Commission. There is no other commission, no other administrative body in this Government, which handles work of the scope, of the magnitude, and the importance of the work handled by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and, without being critical of any other Government body, I do not think the work of any other body or commission in the Government compares with that of the Interstate Commerce Commission. There is certainly no other administrative body which commands the confidence of the people of this country to the extent that the Interstate Commerce Commission does.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree with all the Senator from Kansas has said, but I wish to make a suggestion. We have 195 United States district judges in the United States. Those judges are the busiest persons in the world. They are at work nearly all the time. Yet they receive only $10,000 a year.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not wish to get into an argument with the Senator from Tennessee, but I wish to express my opinion on that point. We have been constantly increasing the number of Federal judges all through the years, while litigation has been decreasing. Therefore in most cases we have more Federal judges than we know what to do with. So much for that.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I will venture the assertion that anyone who is familiar with the work of the Federal judges—and I think I am familiar with their work—knows that the average Federal judge in the United States does not put in one-half the time put in by the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The members of the Interstate Commerce Commission—and I know of what I am speaking—do not take vacations. They are on the job and have to be on the job from early morning until late at night, day in and day out, year in and year out. Unless they are constantly on the job they cannot possibly handle the problems which constantly confront them, whereas it will be found wherever one may go, that the Federal court judges do not sit more than 6 months out of the year, if that much, and the judges take long vacations.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator from Montana is correct in his statement. I happen to have the dockets of all the district courts in the United States. There are a few, but not many, busy district courts.

Mr. WHEELER. We know that one judge who was appointed to the Federal bench in Texas, is now sitting in the food conference at Hot Springs, Va., because, apparently, there is not enough for him to do in the district to which he has been appointed.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish to confine myself to the point immediately before the Senate. In 1920 the Congress of the United States fixed the salaries of the Commissioners of the Interstate Commerce Commission at $12,000 a year. Since 1920 the work of the Commission has easily doubled in scope and importance. As the Senator from Montana has stated, we have added to the Commission's work the supervision of motor vehicles on the highways; we have also added to it the supervision of the inland waterways and the intercoastal waterways and the coastal waterways. By legislation recently passed we have, as the Senator from Montana will remember, added to the work of the Commission, supervision of freight forwarders. So whereas originally the Commission had supervision over one carrier, the railroads, it now has supervision over four. First, it has supervision over the railroads; second, it has supervision over motor vehicles on the highways; third, it has supervision over inland and intercoastal and coastal waterways; and fourth, it has supervision over freight forwarders.

Mr. President, we have continued to pile work and responsibility upon the Interstate Commerce Commission and upon the Commissioners. I have had intimate contact with the Interstate Commerce Commission for over 20 years. I can bear witness to the fidelity, the industry, the dignity, and the integrity with which the Commission as a whole has performed its duties. So, Mr. President, I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana will prevail.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am very anxious to have action taken on as many items of the bill as possible at this time, and I am willing to have the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana agreed to and take it to conference.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator from Tennessee very much.

Mr. REED. And I thank the Senator very much.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] in section 102, page 66, line 9, after the words "salaries of", to strike out the words "the Commissioners of the Interstate Commerce Commission."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, under the agreement had with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], further consideration of the bill will now go over until Thursday next.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, it was agreed that all amendments which were not controversial be acted on today, and that list of amendments has been completed. The bill now goes over automatically until Thursday next, and at the same time it is agreed that the joint resolution under the charge of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] will be taken up next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, further consideration of House bill 1762 will be passed over until Thursday next.

AUTHORIZATION FOR APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE TO REPORT BILLS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I understand that it is the purpose of the acting majority leader to move that the Senate adjourn until Thursday. The Appropriations Committee may be able to report tomorrow or Thursday the lend-lease bill and the urgent deficiency bill. I ask unanimous consent that during the adjournment or recess of the Senate following today's session the Appropriations Committee may be authorized to report the two bills and have them placed on the calendar.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I desire to cooperate to the extent that we may complete our legislation as rapidly as possible. I am willing to consent to the proposal provided that if the bills are reported and any Senator finds he has not had an opportunity to read either of them and the hearings on them, upon request the consideration of the bills will go over for the day.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, I shall always be glad to cooperate with the Senator in that respect. I am sure, as was the case today, that we shall not undertake to take up any bill in a peremptory manner. However, I think consent should be given to having the bills reported and placed on the calendar.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection. However, I desire to retain to myself or to any other Member of the Senate who may not be familiar with the provisions of the bills or the hearings or the report on them, the right, when confronted by a motion to proceed to consideration, to object, and move that consideration go over until a subsequent day. With that understanding, I think the proposal is a fair one, and I shall not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the request of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] for unanimous consent that, during the recess or adjournment of the Senate following today's session, the Committee on Appropriations shall be authorized to report the lend-lease bill and the urgent deficiency bill and have them placed on the calendar. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXTENSION OF RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that House Joint Resolution 111, to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, be considered by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 111) to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment, on page 1, line 8, after "1943", to insert the following proviso: "Provided, That every foreign trade agreement concluded in accordance with the provisions of said act, as amended, shall be subject to termination 6 months after the cessation of hostilities in the present war as fixed by proclamation of the President, pursuant to joint resolution of the Congress or by the President."

THE MISSION OF EVERY AMERICAN

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, now that Rommel's war plans in north Africa have miscarried, and Ruml's tax plans in the United States of America are still being considered by the conferees of both Houses; now that the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER] has advisedly advised the strategists; now that the fourth-term issue is soon to burst upon this fair land, plans being under way to carry it through to fruition; now that my distinguished friend the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] has graciously conceded the superiority of butter as a food, by feasting the Prime Minister of Great Britain, Mr. Churchill, the Prime Minister of Canada, Mr. Mackenzie King, the Under Secretary of State, Mr. Sumner Welles, and his own associates of the Senate and the House, on Wisconsin butter and cheese—deeds speaking louder than words; now that the Senate will soon be considering the McKellar bill; now that the Senate and the people will soon be further aroused by a debate on the subject of the reciprocity treaties; now that the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate has not acted on my resolution to create a liaison committee between the Executive and the Congress to consider plans and ideas relating to post-war international cooperation and collective security; now that the Congress will soon have before it another mammoth appropriation bill; now that Yamamoto, who was to make peace, is gone, and Stalin has dissolved the Third International, and Attu is ours again, and the United Nations are on the march, an offensive march on all fronts; now, I thought it opportune to express a few ideas which I think are pertinent on the subject of the statesmanship of peace and American leadership and responsibility.

Two years ago, I spoke on the subject, The Nation's Job. I said that the Nation's job then—and those were halcyon days—was defense in its broadest aspects, not only a military defense but an economic defense, a social defense, and an individual defense. It meant not only the steel armor plate of mechanized defense, but also the building of bombproof barriers of mental and spiritual defense.

Since that day in June 1941 much water has gone over the dam. Today we look back on Pearl Harbor, Bataan, Corregidor; the capture of Attu and Kiska by the Japs; the invasion of Africa by our troops, and the magnificent victory there; the battle of the Solomons; the saving of Australia; the sinking of 3,000,000 tons of Japanese shipping; the German submarine warfare; the tremendous offensive put on by the Russians; the bombing of Germany and here satellites; 6,000,000 men already in our armed forces and 5,000,000 more yet to be inducted, making 11,000,000 total; our home economy being more and more turned over to the war effort; a 2-ocean navy now in being, soon a 3-ocean navy; the shifting from the defensive to the offensive; 135,000,000 people now engaged in a war effort.

That, Mr. President, is quite a change from those almost halcyon days of 2 years ago.

The fight we are engaged in is not one of our own choosing. As a people, we had hoped to keep out of it. A majority of the American people never were in favor of intervention. But after Pearl Harbor that issue was solved. The Axis Powers intervened in our affairs, and now it is our job to win through to victory. Why? The issue is plain. We are fighting, literally, to preserve our freedom. We know what happened to nations that were taken over by the Axis Powers. We are fighting to preserve our way of life. We call it the democratic way under the Republic. We know that the Axis Powers have no time for the democratic processes or for the American way of life. They say that our way breeds weaklings. We are demonstrating to the world that free people are the strongest people.

Let me relate an incident of which Ambassador Grew tells. He says he was told by one of the highest officials in Japan that Japan would conquer America, would take over America, "Because," that man said, "Americans cannot play ball together; they are disunited; they are weak; they love luxury; they will not fight."

Certainly by this time the eyes of the Japanese must be opened. If they are not, as the war goes on they will be opened. We know that the only answer is to defeat the Axis.

We are fighting to maintain religious freedom. Under the Republic since its inception, man has been free to explore the way that leads up to God. Under the Axis he is told what to believe and what faith he shall follow. We know that if we were to lose this war, not only the physical man but the mental and spiritual man would be regimented. We know that the Axis Powers have a deep conviction that the totalitarian way is the only way of life. We know, now that our way of life is jeopardized, that our way—the way of the free press, free speech, the right of assembly the processes of law under the Republic freedom of religion—is the way; and we have a conviction on that subject now; and the battle goes on. There is no halfway mark. There is no turning back.

All this is so well understood that it is almost axiomatic, and yet it is well for us to review the facts and to realize that each of us has a great job to perform. In the performance of it, our efforts may be unheralded and unsung. The world may not recognize our individual efforts, but we know that individually we have to play our part, a great part, in a great age—a turning point in the history of the race. The workers in the plants of our cities, the tenement-house mothers, the small-town priests, the cross-roads doctors, the little businessmen, the farmers at the plows—all are contributing to the winning of the war, provided they do their jobs well. Each one is as important on the home front as are our sons on the battle front.

The "man of Japan" who spoke to Ambassador Grew said there could be no unity in America. Our first job, then, is to demonstrate an absolute unity in the war effort. To do so calls for dedication and sacrifice. Then unity will result. In spite of our mistakes, our Nation has done the impossible in the last 2 years. It has done what the Axis Powers, at least, said was impossible. We have changed from a peacetime economy to a wartime economy. In taking that stride there has been a great deal of disorganization, and there have been too many mistakes by our servants. But we cannot take time to review a lot of those mistakes. We can only return to them now and then in order to profit by them. If we continually stress them, or spend our time dwelling on them, we are like the old American of German stock up my way who said, "If you keep your nose in the limburger all the time, you smell nothing but limburger."

That does not mean that we should not indulge in constructive criticism if the object is to better the administration. But it does mean that we have to keep our eye on the ball and carry it through the enemy's goal to victory.

We have nothing to fear, if we prove ourselves adequate. We do not aid our cause if we doubt our ability to finish the job before us—the war and the post-war period. We may at times become perplexed, but not downhearted. There is too much to be grateful for, for us to lose our mental rudders.

As long as man lives, there will be work to do.

While our boys are fighting on the seven seas, on all the continents of the globe, and we at home are producing the planes, the war matériel, the ships, and the arms that are needed to carry on the conflict, we have another job to do—one of equal importance. I call it "the mission of every American."

Included in this mission are the following:

First. Do our part to see that we do not have a runaway inflation. This calls for no stampede buying, no buying in black markets, insisting on paying 50 percent of war costs in taxes, and financing the balance by individual buying of bonds. Let me say parenthetically that, last year, at the time when the Senate was considering the question of spending $80,000,000,000, when I insisted that we pay half of it in taxes, one distinguished Chicago newspaper called me a radical Tory. Yet, Mr. President, last year we raised about $33,000,000,000 in taxes.

Second. Do our part to see that there will not be created class hatred or race hatred in this country. That, too, sounds simple. Let me say, Mr. President, that it is very important that we stop the march toward the creation of such hatreds. There are plenty of people who want to create in this country division between groups, between races, between labor and management; and it is too bad that, frequently, persons who are not aware of what is being done take the hook.

Mr. President, let me relate another story that Mr. Grew tells. He said that all those who were in the Embassy in Tokyo expected to be massacred, that a mob came up shrieking and yelling, and that those in the Embassy were prepared to sell their lives dearly; that one person in the Embassy opened one of the windows and waved a little flag, or handkerchief, and started to laugh. Pretty soon one and then another of the Japanese in the street also began to wave and laugh. Then, catching the idea, all the others in the Embassy opened their windows and waved their handerchiefs and laughed and laughed—and the mob did the same thing and soon dispersed.

Let us on the home front apply the lesson contained in that story to the problems existing between labor and management, and between different racial groups of our citizens. It is the lesson of reason, of balanced thinking, of understanding.

Third. We have to do our part now to prepare for the post-war era. We have to think this matter through. That calls for clear thinking, simplified thinking, unbiased and poised thinking. There is no place in this picture for any hysteria. There will be a challenge in America to our system of free enterprise. There will be continual pressure in trying to centralize more and more activities in Washington. Our Government in its inception was built upon the republican basis of checks and balances in the National Government, and a system of checks and balances between the States and the Federal Government. It has worked well. It will continue to work well if each of us on the home front works well.

The post-war era will have great economic challenges, great social challenges, and great international challenges. There will be room for the idealist, and room for the practical man. They must learn to work together for the benefit of the Republic.

Right now in Washington and all over the country the question of post-war collaboration between nations is being debated. There is much name-calling. That is a dangerous sign. My mail indicates that condition.

In this country we walk down the street together, you and I, on Sunday—you go to your church, and I go to mine, and we are friendly. We have learned that much. But when great national issues arise, and when men see things differently, then in many instances the human mind, instead of trying to get the other man's viewpoint, starts to abuse him. That does not make for clarity of vision, nor does it make for a correct solution.

I have felt that the problem is one of getting cooperation—not merely talking it. Many persons feel that adopting a certain plan or passing a certain resolution will do the job. If we simplify our thinking, we know if we enter into a contract with several parties, that is only the beginning. After that there must come the moral, economic, and physical responsibility of the contracting parties to carry the obligations of the contract into effect. We know that wishful thinking will not do the job. The same principle applies to international matters. We know that the resolution of a branch of one government will not create collective security. We must know what can be done to get the nations to cooperate to get rid of the causes of war. In every community we have a police force, but that is not the big factor in the maintenance of law and order. The big factor is that the majority of the people in that community cooperate toward the end of maintaining law and order. It is the moral attitude of the people that determines the peace of the community. In thinking this international problem through, we must watch our logic.

We know that after the last World War, after the League of Nations had been established, the members of that League, if they had had the necessary wisdom and moral strength, could have prevented this war. It might have been nipped in the bud. It started as a European war; and to say that if America had joined the League we would have had sufficient wisdom and moral responsibility to have done better than the European nations did, is begging the question.

We hope the intervening years since 1914 will have burned out the fevers of race hatred and lust for dominion and power, and that the wisdom and guidance of the Almighty will dwell among men. We shall see.

In preparing for the post-war era which will come sooner or later, we must constantly think in terms of economics. As we know, we plan to spend this year in the war effort more than $100,000,000,000. We should raise at least half of that by taxation, but it is estimated that we shall raise only thirty-five billion. If this war lasts through 1944 we shall have a national indebtedness of $250,000,000,000. We shall probably have a national debt in excess of three hundred billion before we are through. That will cost us at least $6,000,000,000 a year to finance. This will not be an insuperable load if we exercise the brains and mental acumen which I think we possess, but it calls for straight thinking and collective cooperation in America. This is the first requisite for world collective security.

At the rate we are going now we shall probably have between 11,000,000 and 15,000,000 men and women in our armed forces when the war ends. Speaking yesterday, Secretary Knox stated that we shall not demobilize all at once. That means that over an extended period we shall be constantly demobilizing our forces and feeding them into the economic machinery which must be available to meet the great needs. We shall probably keep in the armed forces—the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force—a million and a half men. We shall keep them for some time. The first item we shall have to consider will be the maintenance of the Army and the Navy.

This year we shall have a national income of approximately $130,000,000,000. To operate the Government, pay interest, and maintain the Army, Navy, and Air Force in the post-war period will require $15,000,000,000. If we are realists, we will raise this amount and at least $10,000,000,000 more, and start liquidating the national debt.

But, it may be asked, Where is this money coming from? It will not come from the war effort, because that will be largely over. That presents the problem which we must think about realistically. By the end of 1944, a great many of the highways and railroads of this country will have to be rebuilt. We shall have to build superhighways. We shall have to meet a housing need. We shall have a great commercial airplane industry. We shall have great public improvements. We shall have a reservoir of savings of the people which they will use to create a great market for consumer goods from the automobile industry, the air-conditioning industry, and the luxury trade. There will be a greatly increased demand for food, clothing, and other things. There will be new inventions, new methods of building.

All this means employment and an enlarged national income. It means employment for those who must step out of the war industry into the ordinary industry which will then be operating. It means employment for those who come out of the armed forces.

The question arises, How is all this to be financed? I believe that most of it can be handled through private enterprise. Of course, public improvements will be done by the counties, States, and the Nation. I think we may find something new happening in America in relation to financing. We may even see a new type of organization come into being. It has existed in other nations. The State and private enterprise join in a business adventure. But that creature must meet the same responsibility as any private enterprise meets. This Government now owns more than $16,000,000,000 in plants and equipment. The new creature will probably come into being, owned partly by Government and partly by the citizens of Government. But that creature must not be privileged. It must not create unfair competition. It must not be in a position where it can sabotage the initiative, enterprise, and capital of the citizen otherwise invested.

We shall see a great demand on America for exports of her goods. China with her 400,000,000, will be calling for our every consideration in order that she may set up her own industries. We shall see that the devastated countries will have to be rebuilt, which will call for a tremendous amount of our goods. Here again we must think through the matter of financing these demands. The result may be that we may have a national income of $150,000,000,000; and if we do we can cut the terrific tax load we are now undergoing and yet have a surplus to apply upon the national debt.

I see only one danger in this picture, and that I characterize as loose thinking. We must be on guard. We must have no economic Pearl Harbors. We do not want impractical theorists running the Government. This war ought to teach us that work, cooperation, industry, saving, application, invention, initiative, courage, and so forth, are the qualities which make for victory, whether the battle be economic, social, political, or war itself.

Mr. President speaking in the Parliament of Norway at the Interparliamentary Union Conference in August 1939, I said:

> From every land in Europe America has received its bloodstream. Your great culture has enriched our lives. Your music, your literature, your drama, some of your great ideas in economics, philosophy, and religion we have made our own. But, Mr. President, you have something we do not want. I refer to those barriers analyzed by the psychologists as fear, hatred, and distrust. Yes, we owe you much. We know the world is small. We are neighbors. We want to help. Your problems are intricate. There are many equations that we do not understand. I say we want to help, but we want to help you to help yourselves to the end that your problems may find solution through you.

The atmosphere was charged. War was only a few days away.

Mr. President, after making those remarks in the Norwegian Parliament, in a private audience with the King of Norway a day later, I suggested what Churchill has since suggested—a council of Europe. Let me read what Prime Minister Churchill said lately in his clear thinking on the subject of the post-war problem:

> One can imagine that under a world institution embodying or representing the United Nations, and some day all nations, there should come nto being a council of Europe and a council of Asia. It is upon the creation of the council of Europe and the settlement of Europe that the first practical task will be centered. In Europe lie most of the causes which have led to two world wars.
> This council must eventually embrace the whole of Europe, and all the main branches of the European family must some day be partners in it. What is to happen to the large number of small states whose rights and interests must be safeguarded? It would seem to me that side by side with the great powers there should be a number of groupings of states or confederations which would express themselves through their own chosen representatives, the whole making a council of great states and groups of states.

Europe is the pot which boils over. Two world wars started there. We are now in the midst of one of them.

Commenting on what Churchill said, former President Hoover and Hugh Gibson have recently said:

> The major scene of danger of war has always been Europe. Yet the League never had a European policy, even at the moment when every European nation was in its membership. For instance, there seems to have been no serious consideration of the crisis generated by the rise of the Axis. That is, the major danger to the world was ignored by the League.
>
> The whole experience would seem to indicate that one of the first functions in the prevention of war is the development of regional policies in the different major areas of Europe, Asia, and the Western Hemisphere.
> Mr. Churchill's regional plan simplifies the problem of detailed organization of the world institution to preserve peace.

I believe that when the war is over Mr. Churchill's idea in relation to a European council will be accepted by those nations which sense the need of cooperating on the European front. But let us bear in mind that out of Europe have come the two world wars, and the reason for that is that Europe has not solved her own problems. As I stated a few days before the outbreak of the war, in speaking to the representatives of the republics of the earth, we are ready to help them to help themselves. That seems to be what Mr. Churchill, that clear-thinking Englishman, has in mind. Undoubtedly the occupied nations, after having gone through their Gethsemane of suffering, will see the need of pulling together.

We must approach this problem realistically. We must leave all frustration behind us, and accept the responsibility of world leadership. We possess the spirit of liberation. When I use the phrase "the responsibility of world leadership," I mean that the world will look to us for the ideas, and the helpfulness which we must be ready to give.

EXTENSION OF RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 111) to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended.

Mr. GEORGE obtained the floor.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'DANIEL in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Ferguson	Murray
Andrews	George	Nye
Austin	Gerry	O'Daniel

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to enter into a discussion of the Trade Agreements Act this afternoon further than to say that the original act was passed in 1934 after serious debate; it was renewed in 1937, and again renewed in 1940. So the act will have been in operation for 9 years on June 12 of this current year. The act will expire on June 12 unless it shall have been renewed, and, therefore, the necessity for the prompt consideration of the pending joint resolution.

The House of Representatives in passing upon the renewal joint resolution has made one amendment which limits the life of the Trade Treaty Agreements Act to 2 years rather than 3, the latter being the usual period of extension heretofore approved by both the House and the Senate.

In the Finance Committee one amendment was made to the joint resolution. That amendment reads as follows:

Provided, That every foreign-trade agreement concluded in accordance with the provisions of said act as amended, shall be subject to termination 6 months after the cessation of hostilities in the present war as fixed by proclamation of the President, pursuant to joint resolution of the Congress or by the President.

That amendment was carried by the close vote of 11 to 10.

Another amendment offered by the distinguished senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] was rejected by the committee. Other amendments had been submitted on the floor but were not presented to the committee and were not passed upon by the committee, leaving the proponents of such amendments free to urge them on the floor, if they see fit to do so, without committee action.

Mr. President, in opening this debate—and I shall not do more than open it—I desire to read about two pages which shall, I think, state the issue. I have tried to state the issue fairly on the amendment, which is the pending question.

Mr. President, I do not believe that any Senator who is at heart in favor of the effort to mitigate excessive international trade restrictions by methods of international collaboration will be able, after analyzing the amendment, to persuade himself into the belief that the amendment would do other than seriously cripple, if not destroy, the trade-agreements program.

It will be noted that I am stressing this one thought, that any of us who profess to believe in the mitigation of excessive international trade restrictions by the method of international collaboration will be unable to persuade himself that this amendment will do other than cripple or emasculate the whole act.

I do not quarrel with any Senator who is not willing to pare down excessive international trade restrictions by international collaboration and who insists upon the old unilateral principle which had its full fruition in the nationalism which breathed in the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act.

The amendment has been proposed as a means for reserving to the United States complete freedom of action in the post-war world. The sponsors of the amendment say that they favor reciprocity, that the amendment would not interfere with true reciprocity. They say that after hostilities it may be necessary to impose higher import duties or other restraints in order to preserve our essential domestic interests. They say that the amendment is necessary to safeguard, above all things, the national interests of the United States.

No one will deny that the primary objective of the Congress in every piece of legislation coming before it must be the maintenance and upholding of our essential national interests first and foremost—that all measures which may result in benefit to our good neighbors must be judged primarily from the basis of their benefit to the United States. Proceeding on this premise, I vigorously deny that the amendment of the Committee on Finance is the way to uphold the essential interests of the United States.

Granted that in the post-war world economic dislocations throughout the world may necessitate additional protection to our local national interests, granted that factor must be borne in mind in the consideration of the joint resolution now before the Senate, my position is that we should endeavor to safeguard these national interests by means of a workable program of international cooperation and collaboration. Our 9 years' experience under the present program has shown that it is a workable one. We may disagree with particular details of the program, but I am convinced that the overwhelming majority of Senators feel that the program is in the right direction. I am further convinced that the program is readily adaptable to safeguard our national interests in the immediate post-war period, so far as international trade controls are concerned.

It is clear to me that the text of the Finance Committee amendment negatives the declarations of its sponsors that they favor international trade reciprocity. If the objective is to safeguard our essential national interests and at the same time pursue a reciprocity program, a program of international collaboration and cooperation, why should not the attempt be made to safeguard our interests through the program? Why destroy it? Why reserve the right to destroy it? Why reserve the right to destroy it 6 months after the termination of the war, in the most chaotic period that any human mind can imagine or grasp?

Mr. President, the committee amendment clearly gives notice of an intention to terminate the program at the first moment when domestic interests may require additional protection because it reserves the right to do precisely that, and that is the argument upon which it is based—to wit, to leave us with our hands completely untied at the time of the greatest chaos perhaps that ever settled upon the world, 6 months after the termination of the war.

The committee amendment gives notice to our allies that the Congress approves international economic cooperation only during a period when it can have no substantial economic effect. How can it have any effect during the war period? How many trade agreements is it possible to negotiate? Practically all the countries in this hemisphere have united in trade agreements with us. We all know that it is impossible to carry on commerce, under any circumstances, during this war period.

The trade agreements program has developed various safeguards for domestic producers and other essential domestic interests. Agreements are originally negotiated after painstaking study of all pertinent competitive factors. Concessions are not made when the facts indicate that they are likely to result in substantial damage to domestic interests. Safeguarding features are provided in agreements so that if unforeseen contingencies should result in such damage, appropriate action may be taken to prevent them.

Reference is particularly made to article XI of the trade agreement with Mexico, which became effective on January 30 of this year, and which I shall later in the debate insert in the RECORD. This general safeguarding clause is the outgrowth of years of effort to incorporate in our trade agreements program adequate provisions by which unforseeable damaging circumstances during the operation of the agreements may be offset. Earlier agreements also contained safeguarding provisions but of a narrower scope, such as those directed against the major benefit of concessions accruing to third countries to the detriment of domestic industries, and those to offset exchange dislocations.

Reservations have also been made to permit appropriate adjustment in import treatment when necessary to prevent imports from sapping the vigor of domestic controls program. These and many other types of possible damaging circumstances are fully covered in the present general safeguarding clause exemplified by article XI of the agreement with Mexico.

The language of the amendment is:

Provided, That every foreign-trade agreement concluded in accordance with the provisions of said act, as amended—

All that have been concluded through the years, and all that may be hereafter concluded—shall be subject to termination 6 months after the cessation of hostilities in the present war—

by the President, or by joint resolution of the Congress.

That is the language of the amendment. It would be begging the question to say that no one intends to terminate these trade agreements. It would be begging the question to say that neither the President nor the Congress has in mind to terminate these agreements, but under this provision every foreign-trade agreement, 31 in number, thus far made, and that hereafter may be made, "shall be subject to termination 6 months after the cessation of hostilities."

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. MCNARY. Would it not be so irrespective of this reservation?

Mr. GEORGE. No; not if the trade agreement is made for 3 years, as all of them have been made, except, I believe, the Peruvian agreement and perhaps one other, which have been made for 2 years. As a matter of domestic law, it would be in the power of Congress to do it, but in international law, where good morals must obtain, it would be a very definite breach of the agreement to terminate it in less time than 3 years.

I now come back to what I first said. After having read the language of this amendment, I pose a statement to every Senator who thinks that he is willing to depart from the new method of tariff making and go back to the unilateral method, the old type of tariff making with which most of us are very familiar. If Senators are willing to agree to the amendment, then I pose this statement: It is clear, it is unmistakable, that our allies, all nations associated with us in the present war, can construe the amendment of the Finance Committee only as a present refusal—let me emphasize that—as a present refusal to commit the United States to economic collaboration in the post-war period. I stand upon that premise. I stand upon that statement. By that statement it will be determined whether anyone is in favor of economic cooperation and collaboration in the post-war period or whether by repealing all the trade agreements he wants to go back to the high rates of the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act, and to the old method of tariff making.

Mr. President, I reserve further argument so far as I am concerned upon this amendment, if I should care to make any further argument, until a later period.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I wanted to clear up in my mind one matter which has to do with the language of the amendment which the Senator from Georgia has been discussing. I should like to state this proposition and ask the Senator from Georgia if he thinks my understanding of it is correct. The language would indicate that any termination of the trade agreements law as it would be amended by this proposal, would have to be accomplished in one of two ways, either by a joint resolution of the Congress or by act of the President himself. It is my understanding that a joint resolution differs from a concurrent resolution in that a joint resolution requires the signature of the President, and a concurrent resolution has a somewhat dubious status. I have always doubted whether we could enact legislation by concurrent resolution. So that if the Congress should pass a joint resolution and it should be vetoed by the President, it would require two-thirds of the Members of both Houses to upset the Presidential veto. Am I correct in that statement?

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, yes; certainly.

Mr. BONE. So that it would require two-thirds of both Houses to eliminate the law if Congress felt disposed to do it?

Mr. GEORGE. If the President saw fit to veto it.

Mr. BONE. If the President saw fit to veto it.

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. BONE. The second bracket of my question is this: Is it the view of the able Senator from Georgia that under the language of the amendment the President himself, without any act of Congress, could wipe away the statute by a proclamation? It seems that, according to the language of the amendment, the law may be done away with by joint resolution of Congress or by the President, and I take it that that is intended to mean that the President himself by his own act, without any reference whatever to Congress, may literally abolish the statute?

Mr. GEORGE. I think that was the intent of those who proposed the amendment.

Mr. BONE. I wanted to be sure that I have the correct understanding.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; I assume that is the correct interpretation of the amendment.

Mr. BONE. It would seem to be the purpose of the drafters of the amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. With reference to the point raised by the Senator from Washington, as I understand, his query referred to the termination of the act by proclamation of the President, but as I interpret the amendatory provision it refers to the cessation of hostilities, of the war, as fixed by proclamation of the President. The President cannot by proclamation terminate the act. The President can declare a cessation of hostilities by proclamation.

Mr. GEORGE. I did not draw the amendment, and I am not sponsor for it, but I interpret it to mean that the right is reserved to cancel or to terminate an agreement 6 months after the cessation of hostilities in the present war, as fixed by proclamation of the President, and that the termination of each and all foreign-trade agreements made under the act, as amended, may be brought about pursuant to a joint resolution of the Congress or by the President himself. I take that to be the clear meaning of the amendment. I do not think there is any question about its meaning.

Mr. OVERTON. That is probably the intention, but it certainly is doubtful whether the proclamation refers to a proclamation declaring a cessation of hostilities.

Mr. GEORGE. I think the proclamation declaring the hostilities to be at an end is, under this amendment, in the hands of the President, but the termination of any or all trade agreements made under the act, as amended, both before this proposed renewal or hereafter, may be accomplished by a declaration by the President or through a joint resolution passed by Congress.

Mr. OVERTON. I see. I agree with the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. I think that is the clear meaning.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. BONE. Perhaps I was guilty of using unfortunate language in making my inquiry. When I referred to abrogating the statute I did not precisely mean that the President or the Congress could wipe out the foreign-trade agreements and not the act. Of course the effect would be the same. I am sorry that I did not use very happy language in describing what I meant.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I regret that the measure providing for the extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act could not have been presented in a form which could have produced substantial agreement at this particular time for the sake of its impact upon the general war situation. Some of us earnestly sought to create this result in spite of our predilections. I think the extension of the act with the one single amendment asserting the constitutional rights of Congress in a modest way, avoiding all reasonable offense, would have achieved this desirable conclusion. I think it should have achieved this conclusion if we could have been dealing with reasonable men. I think it has been a mistake on the part of the present administration to resist this useful and constructive achievement, and I think that when the Senate has approved the pending amendment the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act will still stand in a position of effective and formidable endorsement.

At the moment, however, I am forced to present the case for the amendment, inasmuch as the amendment is being resisted. The amendment to which I refer is the one reading as follows:

Provided, That every foreign-trade agreement concluded in accordance with the provisions of said act, as amended, shall be subject to termination 6 months after the cessation of hostilities in the present war as fixed by proclamation of the President, pursuant to joint resolution of the Congress or by the President.

Mr. President, in determining the question of the renewal of the Trade Agreements Act, elaborate efforts have been made to clothe it with a sanctity it has no right to claim and to make it the conclusive and the exclusive symbol of our post-war attitudes. I respectfully submit that this pretense is without justification; and that to embrace it is to wholly distort the appropriate trend of the discussion. I submit that three definite and far different problems are alone involved.

First. There have always been deep-seated convictions in Congress and the country (1) against the constitutionality of this delegated trade-agreements power, and (2) against the economic wisdom of permitting the State Department, which is essentially a political rather than an economic arm of government, to make unchecked decisions which may spell life or death for various sectors of industry, agriculture, and labor within our own United States. These convictions—having nothing whatever to do with so-called and usually miscalled isolationism—long antedated the issues of this war, and will continue to postdate them as long as the Republic lives. It is absurd to pretend that citizens must abandon their independent thinking in this respect in order to prove that they will be progressively broad-minded in their attitudes toward the infinitely larger problems of the post-war world. Why hamper the legitimate cause of legitimate post-war cooperations by any such needless and unjustified constriction?

Second. In charting our ultimate contribution to this post-war world, we have a right to be free agents at the peace table so that—in the face of these subsequent realities—we may not only serve the aspirations of a new and happier international society but we may also be dependably sure that we have adequately conserved the rights and the interests of our own America. Shall trade agreements, or any other instruments of indirect control, be allowed to tie our hands in advance of full post-war knowledge? That is the second question involved in this debate.

Third. On the other hand, when we are in the midst of desperate war, must we not avoid every needless interruption to our interallied relationships so that no distractions shall interfere with our triumphant interallied unity?

Mr. President, particularly in view of the fact that international trade is largely an academic subject for the duration, I can wholeheartedly underwrite this third consideration; and that is what I propose, substantially, to do. I shall support the extension of the act for the duration. But I shall undertake to prove that the former considerations need not be abandoned in order to sustain the latter.

Since most of the debate on this subject, however, has been largely keyed to the self-serving notion that we are here really settling the larger questions of general post-war destiny, which I emphatically deny, I want, at the outset, to say a few things about my own post-war attitudes which certainly cannot be tied down to the relatively narrow issue involved in the mere extension of this Trade Agreements Act which has been seeking a synthetic importance wholly out of focus. I do it as a background against which to proceed, lest our global zealots find, in my ultimate suggestions, the mistaken notion that I fail to sense the real necessities for intelligent, international cooperation in this foreshortened post-war world.

So, Mr. President, I assert the faith that is in me upon this score.

First. America must maintain this present fraternity of battle—without any interruptions by previctory arguments or premature peace quarrels between us—until this war is unconditionally won wherever our arms are challenged. The first need is to end the Axis. This need must have uninterrupted and triumphant right-of-way.

Second. America must join in whatever organized post-war sanctions are necessary in order to prevent by mutual force the recurrence of criminal, military aggression in the world. International security must ever reflect scrupulous justice. But it must never again lack whatever international force is necessary in order to make its authority incontestable.

Third. America must cooperate to the limit of her resources in rebuilding the stricken liberties and resources of the Axis victims, and in perpetuating a more effective economic comity between the nations of a new and better world.

Fourth. America must be realistically world-minded in its external vision, but America also must never forget that its first duty is to 130,000,000 Americans and to the enlightened welfare of its own homeland, and it must never neglect to proceed by due process of law in making its commitments. Mr. Churchill has made it plain in his candid moments that he will look out for Britons, and I honor him for it. Mr. Stalin has made it plain that Moscow comes first with him. So far as I am concerned, Mr. President, America is worth an equivalent fidelity, her sovereignty, her Constitution, her people, and her destiny. And it will not much longer be considered treason to say so.

There is disagreement among earnest citizens as to post-war details. For example, upon the same day I read Dorothy Thompson saying:

> The failure of the United States to project a constructive vision of the future of Europe may prolong this war unnecessarily. * * * It is intellectual cowardice.

On the same day, I repeat, I read the distinguished University of Michigan historian, Dr. William A. Frayer, saying:

> The notion widely voiced in this country that we shall determine the European settlement after the war is incredibly naive.

Yes; there is disagreement as to details. But never mind the details. If the world is waiting for a message from America regarding our post-war attitudes—while carefully and cannily refraining from its own commitments upon this score—I know what I would say if it were within my power. I would say: "Do not doubt for an instant that we shall do our full cooperative part hereafter in peace as well as war in the creation of a better, a safer, a happier world, and that we want this mutuality of battle to carry over into a mutuality of peace all down the fruitful years to come; but do not expect for an instant that we intend 'to give America away.'"

If I may sum it up still differently, Mr. President, I should say that our course probably lies somewhere midway between the extremists, upon the one hand, who would devote our globally dissipated resources exclusively to a wishful world society, and those upon the other hand, who would entrench us behind a Chinese wall. We shall find the national middle ground of enlightened common sense. We shall vigorously cooperate with the forces of international progress; but we shall remain irrevocably the independent and sovereign United States of America.

Now, having asserted this basic prospectus, I come back to the relatively incidental issue now pending before the Senate.

Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I favor the extension of the Trade Agreements Act for the duration of the war because I am opposed to any needless interruptions in our interallied relationships while we are still engaged in the military pursuit of total victory. We want no internal diversions or divisions within the United Nations while our mingling bloods are sanctifying the military altars of our common faith—nor afterward, so far as they may be avoided.

I think the importance of this extension has been insufferably exaggerated by those who self-servingly seek to make it the telltale sign, the token and the omen of all post-war things to come. It is nothing of the sort; and, in my humble view, it is illy serving the superlatively vital post-war cause to deliberately invite the world to misjudge the decisions of Congress in respect to the domestic phases of this legislation. Some of those, for example, who deeply believe that these trade agreements are in fact treaties requiring Senate ratification are among the most forward-looking of our post-war planners. It is disingenuous—to put it mildly—to invite the world to believe that their failure to desert the Constitution would be proof of their intention to desert the broadest, practical post-war cooperation. Let us have done with such sophistry. Let us quit trying to fool either ourselves or our neighbors.

Certainly Mr. Walter Lippmann is no narrow-visioned provincialist. He says in respect to this specific question:

> The imprudence of posing the biggest issues on a test of this small issue is evident.

He then proceeds to prove it incontestably.

That is the whole thing in a nutshell so far as this pretense is concerned. The imprudence of it, from the standpoint of the State Department and the spokesmanship of America, is that the biggest issues are thrown to a test upon relatively small and inconsequential issues.

I repeat, I favor the extension of the Trade Agreements Act primarily for the very practical reason which I have indicated. Frankly, I care very little whether the extension be for 2 years, as voted by the House, or 3 years, as sought by the State Department. International trade will be largely an academic subject for the duration and immediately thereafter. I shall vote for the shorter term solely because I think it is sound democracy to have these delegated powers under continuous scrutiny by those to whom they constitutionally belong, namely, the people speaking through their Congress.

Now, the next point. Very few trade agreements remain to be made. We have already completed 31 with all the major powers of the globe. Therefore, the question whether, under the Constitution, Senate ratification or general congressional consent is required is also largely academic for the time being, although great principles of functioning democracy can never be really dismissed as academic. But here again I am willing to yield my judgment for the duration to what I believe to be the dominant desirability that we shall raise as few questions as possible regarding our interallied relationships until this war is done and won. I shall not personally press the point. But if it is raised and if we are denied the right to make the simple, modest, constitutional assertion which is recommended by the Senate Finance Committee and is now pending at the bar of the Senate, I certainly shall find it impossible to surrender my constitutional convictions.

But, Mr. President, there is one point at which I do insistently urge an addition to the joint resolution to extend the Trade Agreements Act. I am referring to the Senate committee amendment. The proposal has nothing to do with what happens ahead of inter-Allied victory. It has nothing to do with our economic attitudes toward the post-war world. It has solely to do with permitting America to be a free agent at the peace table unhampered by any advance, specific contracts which tie its hands in respect to the economic pattern of things to come. This is not an indictment of advance planning. We need to be planning ceaselessly—we and our international associates—for any and all of the contingencies which will require post-war answer in behalf of a more practical world exchange of goods and services. I favor all possible planning. But "planning" and specific, advance commitments, by those who have no authority to bind America, are two totally different things. Upon this score I recommend to my own American fellow-citizens the sage and prudent and always safety-first advice of Mr. Churchill to his Britons:

> We must beware of attempts to overpersuade or even coerce his Majesty's government to bind themselves or their unknown successors in conditions which no one can foresee and which may be years ahead, * * * and to make them pledge themselves to particular schemes without relation to other extremely important aspects of our post-war needs.

Mr. President, I confess that I should like to hear equally sturdy and equally practical advice to our own Americans from our own Chiefs of State. It is not enough to hear from Santa Claus.

Shall Mr. Churchill be convicted of deserting "the brave, new world" which is in all our dreams because he says "Stop. Look. And do a lot of listening." No indeed. He is guilty only of total candor in his practical loyalties.

Mr. President, when a trade agreement has been made under the original act, it is subject to termination upon due notice at the end of not more than 3 years. If not then terminated, it shall thereafter be subject to termination upon not more than 6 months' notice. In the absence of notice, it runs forever. Who gives the notice? The President. So long as any President wishes, the law, on its face, permits him to make any trade agreement perpetual. Congress never actually regains the power it has parted with. What difference does it make whether the act itself expires in 2 or 3 years? The agreements made under it never expire except at Presidential option. Therefore the agreements definitely involve our post-war commitments, and I shall undertake to demonstrate that they are intended to be used for this precise purpose. Thus America is doing exactly what Churchill warned the Britons not to do—

> Binding ourselves and our unknown successors in conditions which no one can foresee.

Therefore, as a matter of elementary prudence, as a matter of elementary constitutional fidelity, some of us are proposing that these agreements shall be revocable upon the order of a joint congressional resolution 6 months after the cessation of hostilities.

Please note that we do not propose actually to revoke them. If they commend themselves to our post-war judgments, they may be maintained. Please note that any revocation action is through a joint resolution which also requires the signature of the President. This is no assault upon the Executive. It is no assault upon trade agreements. We are simply adding the Congress of the United States—speaking for our whole people—to the authoritative power which can speak for America in respect to the ultimate peace formula. I doubt whether any totalitarian voice in Washington would be so bold as to assert that the President alone is entitled, under our form of Government, to write the peace without congressional approval. Yet if you deny us this amendment, Senators, you are subscribing to that amazing and totally un-American policy. If this is a people's war, the peace to follow certainly must also be a people's peace. This is still a representative Republic, and please God that it may always be.

Mr. President, there can be no question about the purposes for which the State Department is using, and intends to use, these trade agreements. I have great respect for the State Department. I have proved it many times. I have both respect and affection for Secretary of State Cordell Hull, who is one of the noblest characters who has risen to high public responsibility in my time. I testify, also, to his ingenuity in inventing a scheme to put his country as close as possible to free trade without running the adverse gantlet of a public opinion which never has, and never will, approve his total heart's desire. The State Department frankly says, in its Bulletin of February 20, 1943, that "this method was chosen as more practicable and more effective than general downward revision of the United States tariff alone." Apparently, we have to learn all over again by bitter experience each generation that legitimate tariffs, equalizing the honest difference in costs of production at home and abroad, are indispensable to the maintenance of our American wage and living standards, and our American way of life.

But when Mr. Secretary Hull and his Department deliberately propose to use their judgments—and not one of them holds an elective commission from the people of the United States—to influence now what shall be our economic decisions in the post-war world which has yet to disclose its form and challenge, I oppose their extra-legal, extra-constitutional activities with every protest of which I am capable. They use their trade agreements as a springboard from which to leap into post-war commitments pursuant to their ideas of what the post-war world ought to be. By this device, intended ostensibly for quite another purpose, they seek to tie our hands at the peace table. I do not presume to pass upon the inherent merits of their objective. That is beside the point. I comment only upon the obvious fact that they would—or at least they could—use their trade agreements now to prejudge and predetermine our place in the post-war economic world. I submit that this is without a shred of constitutional justification since not even they, in their wildest moments of bureaucratic power, could fancy themselves entitled to settle our peace commitments without the approval of the Senate, speaking under the Constitution for the American people.

I submit also that such a course is without a shred of economic justification, since no one can today foresee what America will confront in the international business of the post-war world. And mark this, Senators. Any such procedure is already categorically repudiated by the Senate itself in literal fact in connection with the recent report of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on the extension of the lend-lease law. It would be a sham, a delusion, and a hypocritical offense to international good will to sanction illegal post-war commitments here and now which, under directly related circumstances, have already been rejected by the unanimous, bipartisan voice of the Senate and its Foreign Relations Committee. This is not a question of whether reciprocal trade agreements are good or bad. It is solely a question whether the people of the United States of America, and their economic future in the post-war world, are entirely and exclusively at the mercy of Dr. Sayre, and the other distinguished gentlemen who actually manipulate these trade agreements to suit themselves. That is not democracy under law, and no one can tell me that it is.

Let us consult the record.

I again quote from the February 20 Bulletin of the State Department, at page 173:

> The agreements provide valuable insurance, now, against a repetition of the tidal wave of trade barriers and discriminations that swept over the world after the last war.

Perhaps there should be no such conditions after World War No. 2. I would agree that there should not. But this is the fundamental economic question at the peace table; and the men to settle it are the men who represent America at the peace table, subject to the ultimate approval of the United States Senate as provided by the Constitution. As between Dr. Sayre, in charge of trade agreements and speaking for the State Department, which, in turn, speaks for the President—as between him and the Constitution—well, I humbly confess to an unregenerate and unreconstructed loyalty to the Constitution.

I continue the quotation from the State Department Bulletin:

> An active trade-agreements program during the war strengthens the determination of the United Nations to win a victory that will be worth the cost; it inspires confidence that the United States will do its share in creating conditions favorable to prosperity and security after victory.

"After victory," Mr. President, God only knows what the global economic state will be. "After victory" we shall confront inevitable international responsibilities beyond anything which we have heretofore assumed. I do not run from them. But "after victory" we shall also confront the need "to create conditions favorable to prosperity and security" for our own America, as well as for our blood brothers in this inter-Allied conflict, all round the earth. As Timothy of Holy Writ once put it, "If any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel."

"After victory" it will be the responsibility of the then Government of this country to meet our full international obligations while equally—and always equally—protecting the enlightened self-interest of our own United States. It is all "after victory." I, for one, however wrong I may seem to some, do not intend to let this State Department decide now, in total ignorance of subsequent realities, what our post-war course shall be.

I know of no reason why we should be less realistic in this regard than is the magnificent Mr. Churchill, whom I have already quoted, in speaking for his Britons. After all—as was eloquently said 23 years ago in this same Senate Chamber—"Unshared idealism is a menace." I do not intend to send our negotiators to the peace table—there to meet free agents of every other power on earth—with their hands tied behind their backs by presently negotiated and permanently frozen trade agreements, no matter how nobly meditated.

But let us be even more specific. I quote again from the State Department Bulletin:

> In article VII of the lend-lease agreement, the Government of the United States and of the United Kingdom agreed that * * * the terms and conditions (of the final settlement) shall be such as not to burden commerce between the two countries * * * and shall include provision for agreed action * * * directed to the expansion * * * of production, employment, and the exchange and consumption of goods * * * to the reduction of tariffs, etc.

Now, Mr. President, please note that we are invited to view these long-range commitments under so-called trade agreements in the same light and to the same end as similar commitments in article VII of the master agreements under the Lend-Lease Act. All right. I accept the battle on the terrain chosen by the State Department. The Senate has already spoken on that subject and in no uncertain terms. The Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, by unanimous, bipartisan consent, has already notified the world where it stands in respect to this same article VII of the master agreements under the Lend-Lease Act. In its report of March 9, 1943, the unanimous Senate committee says—

> Article VII indicates the type of economic action which may be contemplated. It is not a commitment which binds either of the legislative bodies of this Government. For example, article VII does not authorize the reduction of tariffs or commit the United States to other measures which under the Constitution must be adopted by the Congress or by either branch thereof. * * * The committee believes that there is no authority in the Lend-Lease Act to warrant any general post-war commitments or post-war policies.

That, Mr. President, I repeat, is the unanimous, bipartisan, considered judgment of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. It is a historic reassertion of indisputable constitutional doctrine. It has already repudiated any attempts to commit the United States to post-war economic policies with particular identification of tariff policies, without the consent of Congress. Yet the State Department tells us in its official bulletin that such is the precise purpose of its use of the Trade Agreements Act. Shall we approve, in its new disguise, the very thing which we officially rejected 60 days ago? It is inconceivable to me that the Senate, speaking for the people of the United States, should be guilty of any such crass inconsistency. What we could not allow under cover of lend-lease agreements, we cannot condone under color of so-called reciprocal trade agreements. This is still our country. It does not belong exclusively to the State Department. It does not belong to the President. The Constitution is not just a nuisance. It is a God-blessed reality. The Senate did not hesitate to say so when it extended the Lend-Lease Act, with my entire approval. Why should it hesitate to say so again today in connection with the extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act?

Mr. President, let me be even more specific and I think this well identifies the thing I am talking about. In its agreement with Mexico—which, under the most-favored-nation process means an agreement with the whole world—we have agreed to bind guayule rubber on the free list. If they can do that with one kind of rubber, they can do it with all rubber. Indeed, they have already done it with crude rubber, in the British and Peruvian agreements. If that is to be our post-war policy, what, then, becomes of the vast synthetic rubber development which, at the expense of literally billions of dollars, the Government has fostered in continental United States in order to make us self-contained. The estimable and always philanthropic Vice President has indicated his hope that, in post-war days, we may again revert to our reliance upon imported rubber. That could mean the scrapping of our vast synthetic rubber development after the war, unless we can produce rubber cheaper than it is produced by the cheapest of all foreign labor elsewhere. Is that satisfactory to the American people? I doubt it, but I do not know. But this I do know: that question is for the Congress, speaking for the whole American people, to decide when we reach the post-war economic world. It is not for Secretary Hull and Dr. Sayre to decide now. Yet they use reciprocal trade agreements to prejudice the answer ahead of time—and without any authority whatsoever to speak, under the Constitution, for the ultimate American decision. It makes no difference what the decision ultimately may be. It may fully indicate the generosity of our amiable Vice President. That is beside the point. The point is that these estimable gentlemen, none of whom bears a commission from the people of the United States, are assuming to use trade agreements to bind us to these post-war commitments to suit their own unauthorized predilections.

They cannot do it, Mr. President, no matter how hard they try. This is still a free country in which the people have the last word, no matter how annoying it may be. It is an imposition upon the rest of the world to pretend otherwise. The world should know—in this instance as in the case of so-called master agreements under the Lend-Lease Act—that the Constitution still lives and that at least a prospective majority of the American people still intend that it shall prevail. And we should say so here and now lest unrequited hopes precipitate the worst of all post-war disillusionments. That is the purpose of the amendment for which I speak.

Please let it be understood, Mr. President, that I do not even remotely intimate any sinister purpose or motive on behalf of these splendid public servants in the State Department. The difference between us is solely one of a point of view. The Secretary of State was very frank to say, in his testimony before the Senate Finance Committee, that such subjects as the one to which I now refer, namely, the future of the synthetic rubber industry of the United States, ought to be in the hands, ultimately, of Congress for decision. All I am saying, Mr. President, is that, unless the post-war hands of Congress be untied it cannot be in the hands of Congress, except as we subsequently violate the moral obligation of having reenacted the Trade Agreements Act and sanctified again the agreements under it which, I repeat, so far as the face of the law is concerned, run perpetually except as the President of the United States alone may intervene.

Since we have already contracted these trade agreements with almost every power on earth, and since they can be indefinitely extended by the President without regard to Congress, it seems to me that as a practical proposition it is far less important at the moment to seek congressional ratification for future trade agreements than it is to make certain that a definite procedure is now provided to assure, if desired, an optional review of all trade agreements when we plan our part in the post-war world. But if any Senators, who heretofore have always asserted their conviction that these trade agreements are treaties constitutionally requiring Senate ratification, feel that they must reassert this opinion in the pending joint resolution, they certainly have the right and they may not be justly condemned as post-war obstructionists because they use it.

War does not suspend constitutional rights or the privilege of asserting them. That is fundamental in the American doctrine. To argue that a renewal of this act, without a constitutional reassertion of this constitutional belief, is necessary and essential to a proper disclosure to our allies of our post-war purposes, is to argue that our victory is to be at the permanent expense of our Constitution and that we must now thus tell the world.

Mr. President, if our actions here today are to be subjected to extraneous implications, I think it would be far fairer and far more honest frankly to tell the world that while we have every disposition to cooperate across the seven seas in greater post-war degree than ever heretofore contemplated, we have no disposition—now or hereafter—to ever depart from due process of constitutional law in implementing these fraternal objectives. We should not enlighten—we should merely deceive—the world to tell it otherwise.

We are not fighting this war to tear down our checks and balances. We are not fighting for the suppression of constitutional loyalties, no matter how controversial their discussion may be. We are not fighting for permanent surrender to government by executive decree. The proponents of the doctrine that we dare not here reassert our constitutional beliefs lest we thereby discourage post-war hopes leave its opponents with no alternative except to reassert their views. It is they, not we, who precipitate this situation if and when they try to brand our pending action as determinative of our post-war attitudes and patterns.

Be frank about it, Senators. What is it they ask? They demand that we here set the precedent, upon which the world may rely, to demonstrate our general post-war purposes in respect to international cooperation. What is the precedent? That we shall cooperate without regard to constitutional limitations and constitutional protections—as these limitations and protections are solemnly viewed by a large and constantly growing congressional minority and by millions of our people. That we shall cooperate without regard to the viewpoints of these great minorities—if they be in fact minorities—and that these minorities must now be suppressed! Is that the pattern of things to come? Is that the general rule of post-war settlements to which we are invited to commit ourselves? Is that the price of glory in this new and better world for which we die? If so, Mr. President, then in my humble conviction we could lose this war at home even before we have won it abroad.

Let us have no mistake about the issue I discuss. It transcends all lesser considerations. It has nothing whatsoever to do with a choice of tariff-making methods. It has nothing whatsoever to do with encouragements to greater export trade. It has nothing whatsoever to do with the economic interdependence of a foreshortened post-war world. It has nothing whatsoever to do with whether our reciprocal-trade agreement program has been good or bad. It has solely to do with the general pattern of our post-war settlements which we are told will be foreordained by this presently pending decision upon this little amendment, recommended by the Finance Committee. Shall it be a pattern which requires American citizens to forego their constitutional rights? Shall it be a pattern which requires Congress to forego a consistent reexpression of these rights? Is that to be the precedent and pattern of the peace for which we fight?

We are told that we shall destroy the hopes of men for a happier, better, freer post-war economic world unless we extend this Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act without changing the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t." Ah, Mr. President, how poignantly reminiscent that is of the tragic error made by the great President Woodrow Wilson in the aftermath of World War No. 1. Have we learned nothing from history? Why is it assumed that the mere existence of a constitutional congressional veto will destroy legitimate trade agreements? It is a very modest veto, because it requires either the signature of the President or a two-thirds vote in both Houses of Congress. Why is it assumed that wisdom and patriotism stop at the portals of the White House and the State Department? Why is it assumed that the direct representatives of the American people are no longer to be trusted? Why is it assumed that the people will not irresistibly dominate the thinking and the actions of their elected representatives? Why is it that this pending tariff act—for that is exactly what it is—suddenly expands to the magnitude almost of the Sermon on the Mount? When did the hopes of men for a happier, better world become estranged from a rugged assertion by any American citizen of his belief in the God-blessed Constitution of the United States?

No, Mr. President, this false hypothesis just does not make sense. So far as tariffs are concerned, I assert here and now that so far as I am concerned, I hope there is never another general congressional revision. It would be an imponderable mess. I hope we establish scientific tariffs under which an independent tariff commission writes the levies according to general standards laid down by general statute and subject only to a congressional veto upon major changes. So far as reciprocal foreign trade is concerned, I hope we pursue it to the last possible, practical degree which does not destroy domestic production essential to the preservation of American wage and living standards. I hope for continued legitimate reciprocal activity in this direction, subject only to the maintenance of final, constitutional responsibility in the Congress. But I hope, also, Mr. President, that I shall never see that dark day when world trade is dearer to our hearts than are constitutional rights, and when world planners, no matter how noble may be their cloistered meditations, can totally silence American planners—and that is the essence of this particular demand.

Mr. President, I do not intend to spend any time today on the inherent economic merits of the reciprocal trade agreements that have been negotiated since this Act was first passed on June 12, 1934. In my view, the value of these reciprocal agreements has been greatly exaggerated by their friends and the damage has been greatly exaggerated by their critics. As is usually the case, truth and wisdom are probably to be found somewhere between. I would be the last to deny that we want the maximum exports which we can profitably acquire; but I also would be the last to consent that exports are profitable if gained only at the expense of imports which displace essential domestic production and employment. I repeat that a rule of reason must balance these factors on a realistic basis.

A great and highly respected friend of mine in Detroit, who is one of the most enthusiastic devotees of this Trade Agreement Act, pointed out the other day—as if it were the last word upon the subject—that "800 industries in Michigan are engaged in exporting" and "in peacetime $1 of every $7 spent in this area is derived from foreign trade." Very well; let us ungrudgingly concede that this establishes the importance of exports and the complete desirability of fostering them—which I completely concede. But does it establish the automatic virtue of any and every device to foster export trade? Suppose I state his very same facts just as accurately but differently. Suppose I say it this way: "Every industry in Michigan except a very few engaged exclusively in exporting, is primarily dependent upon domestic orders right here at home for its existence; and $6 out of every $7 spent in this area is derived from domestic trade." Logically, using my friend's formula, I have made out six times as good a case for the rugged protection of domestic industry and domestic employment and domestic agriculture so as to preserve this rich domestic market for our home producers. But does it establish the automatic virtue of all tariffs, and does it automatically condemn all reciprocity? Certainly not. I repeat that a rule of reason must balance these factors on a realistic basis. I should say, in a word, that we want the widest possible international trade not inconsistent with the essential protection and maintenance of legitimate American domestic production upon which American standards of living, of income, and of wages irresistibly depend. A prostrate America, Mr. President, cannot richly aid a prostrate post-war world.

I am frank to say that I do not know—and no one else can know—what the post-war economy will demand of us in these respects. That is why I refuse to gamble with so tremendously vital a speculation involving the post-war livelihood of every man, woman, and child under the flag. We must see and know this post-war world before we can intelligently and prudently specify our economic part in it. If we are to level ourselves off to a common, global standard, it requires no seer to anticipate the complete demolition of traditional American wage and living concepts. I suppose none but a confirmed international communist would confess to any such aspiration. Yet some of our global dreamers, wittingly or otherwise, seem to face at least in that direction. Of course, the American people will never, allow such hari-kari. On the other hand, if we shall attempt to wall ourselves off into all but total economic exclusion, we shall, by our example, stimulate a world-wide economic nationalism which will make a pacific, happy world impossible. I repeat again that a rule of reason must balance these factors on a realistic basis.

But what is a post-war "realistic basis"? Who can say what will be the impact on our American economy of the utter demoralization of much of the balance of the world's economy? Who can promise that for years to come cheap foreign labor will not be cheaper foreign labor than ever before? Who can prophesy that with foreign production costs lower than ever, and our own production costs higher than ever—as they will be—who can prophesy that this rivalry will not unavoidably drive us to greater rather than less protections? And how can we sell abroad at all—trade treaties or no trade treaties—if we cannot compete in price? Who can say what Mr. Churchill's plans will be for the British in this post-war economic world—except that we know he will always and forever look out for Britain. That is not a criticism; it is a compliment. Who can anticipate Mr. Stalin's plans? No, Mr. President, when we contemplate these imponderables, and at the same time try now to chart the details of our American post-war economic course, it is like trying to see in a dark room; like trying to breathe in a vacuum.

I am perfectly willing, for whatever it may be worth, to tell the world in general terms that we have no wish to withdraw unto ourselves when this war is done; that we intend in suitable fashion to support whatever sanctions are necessary to prevent the criminal rebirth of military aggression; that we shall cooperate in the broadest possible economic society consistent with our own economic institutions. But, for myself, I am not willing to write blank checks now against the inheritance and the destiny of our children and our children's children.

Therefore, Mr. President, I am driven to the irresistible conclusion that our peace makers must face these ultimate realities with a free hand. They must not be hamstrung by commitments, no matter how warming to our hearts, which we might now forge for them in the absence of full knowledge. I am driven to the irresistible conclusion that these trade agreements should pass in review—or be eligible to do so—within 6 months or a year after the cessation of hostilities. Perhaps we shall then want more and bigger and better reciprocity. Perhaps, on the other hand, we may find some of these commitments highly irksome and embarrassing. I do not prejudge the issue. But I insist that no one else should pre-judge the issue either.

The idea that we must go ahead with this program, without limitations and without regard to the ending of the war; the idea that we must rubber stamp this particular and specific formula right now in order to guarantee the world's hope for peace and to prove our good faith in the things for which we fight is an utterly fantastic bit of frantic, self-serving propaganda unworthy of the merits of the cause in which it is pathetically invoked. It is just one more sample of the extravagance, of which I have previously spoken, with which extremists either praise or condemn the Trade Agreements Act.

We were solemnly told in 1934 that this act was the new charter of world peace. It was heralded by a symphony of doves. Of course, it was nothing of the sort. It did not produce peace at all. It was followed by the greatest war in human history. That was just a coincidence. The Trade Agreements Act did not produce the war; but certainly it did not stop it. It just had no conclusive bearing on the subject. And so it is with this current pretext that somehow or other the Congress casts the final dice of destiny when it deals with the pending act. Thus the distinguished Under Secretary of State, Mr. Sumner Welles, speaking on May 8 at Toledo, said:

> If the United States repudiates the idea of economic nonaggression, it will have destroyed the stuff of which peace is made. It will have struck a heavy blow at the hopes of mankind for ridding this world of the scourge of war and for creating a just, a workable, and a lasting peace.

Echoes of 1934 and 1937 and 1940. The same old line. Almost word for word what the State Department said when the Trade Agreements Act was born—

> To create the kind of international economic relations upon which a structure of durable peace can be erected.

The parallel suffices as a dismissal of the exhibit. Mind you, no one in his right senses is going to deny that economic pressures cause wars. Of course they do. But, Mr. President, the economic pressures which cause wars are of a magnitude compared with which this recommended cure in these trade agreements is not even a passing palliative. The Trade Agreements Act did not cause the juggernaut of war so much as to hesitate. Why fool ourselves into thinking it could do so again? It is a pigmy in the presence of Mars. It is ridiculous to try to make it seem a giant. Yes; it has its contributory usefulness in this good cause—and for what it is worth, it is entitled to plead this virtue. But to attempt to build it up to the paramount sanctity of the very Ark of the Covenant is to ridicule its realities. So I plead once more that we get down to earth in this argument; and that we base our contemporary decision on things as they are, both at home and abroad.

Now, Mr. President, I sum up. We are at war against the most malignant curse the world has ever known. Our paramount obligation is to win the war as swiftly and as completely as possible. At no point in this triumphant process should we needlessly disturb any of our existing inter-Allied relationships. The Trade Agreements Act is a small part but nevertheless an integral part of this relationship. But for the duration it is only an academic part. Therefore any disturbance of it is needless; and therefore I shall vote for its extension.

After we have won the war, we must win the peace. America must and America will cooperate in the post-war sanctions necessary to prevent the rebirth of aggression. We shall not "withdraw into our shells," if you want to put it that way. To the utmost limits of our own sovereign rights and our own unexpendable needs, we shall cooperate in establishing a better world economy. But we are entitled to look before we leap. We are entitled to assess our own position against the as yet undisclosed position of others. We are entitled to deal with realities instead of dreams. We are entitled to be free-handed at the peace table. Therefore, insofar as these trade agreements extend into and color our post-war status, we have a right to insist that they be revocable by joint action of Congress and the President in the post-war era; and therefore I shall vote for such an amendment to the resolution.

War necessarily involves a tremendous temporary expansion of Executive authority. The return of peace demands a faithful return to constitutional checks and balances in every aspect. The peace role—the broad, helpful and sympathetic peace role—which we shall play in this post-war world must and will be decided by due process of American law. Therefore, it can never be out of place for us to assert our constitutional fidelities.

The pending issue in the Senate is a very small part of this total climacteric. But my prayer would be that every part shall be governed by these principles, with the national—yes, the "national"—anthem in our hearts and with every reasonable international objective in our souls.

Mr. President, the pending issue is confined to the very narrow one submitted by a majority of the members of the Senate Finance Committee in respect to the pending amendment, which merely provides that, hereafter, 6 months after the cessation of hostilities, trade agreements shall be revocable not only by the President, as is the existing law, but also by a joint resolution of the Congress, which requires the signature of the President and which, therefore, would require a two-thirds vote of the Congress in the event the President disagreed. If the amendment is subject to legitimate attack it would be by those who believe that it is an inadequate expression of the constitutional duty and responsibility of the Congress in respect to revenue legislation. It is said that the amendment would destroy the act because no nation would be willing to make a 3-year trade agreement in the presence of the possibility of revocation within 6 months. Yet, Mr. President, we have already made 26 agreements which have already lived their full 3 years, and which at this good hour are subject to revocation upon 6 months' notice given by the President. Five more trade agreements—and making a total of 31—which have been made will have lived their full 3 years before the time arrives when the amendment would become effective. Therefore, every trade agreement now in existence is already subject and eligible, or will be before the proposed amendment could become effective, to revocation upon 6 months' notice; and I do not see that the existence of the 6 months' notice provision has ruined the entire purpose and advantage of reciprocal trade cooperation.

It is said that we shall scare our international neighbors by this expression of a very mild congressional constitutional right. Mr. President, they are not scared by the existence already of the right in the hands of the President to give 6 months' notice of revocation; and I submit that in their right minds they would not be scared by the existence of another 6 months' notice privilege which would be in the hands of the Congress and the President jointly, and which could not be exercised against Presidential objection except by a two-thirds vote of both the House and the Senate. I submit that if any trade agreement negotiated under those auspices is ever so bad that it wins the condemnation of two-thirds of the House and the Senate, speaking for the people of the United States, it must be the kind of trade agreement which should be denounced.

Just one word further: It is said that Congress already has the power to denounce these agreements. Probably that is literally true as respects domestic law. But, Mr. President, as the law stands, I think we have invited our international neighbors to believe that the right of 6 months' notice rests exclusively with the President. So far as concerns any intent on our part to use the congressional power at any time, under any circumstances, as we are told we are free to do if we wish, I think that if we have any such thought or purpose or objective in mind the way to establish successful international good neighborliness is to be totally frank and candid in our textual relationships with our partners around the world.

So, Mr. President, I submit that the action of the majority of the Senate Finance Committee is entitled to the approval of the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, in the latter part of his remarks the Senator from Michigan somewhat qualified some of his previous statements upon which he predicated much of his argument; to wit, that after a trade agreement has run 3 years it is not terminated by an act of Congress and that it can be terminated only by the President. I take very definite issue with the Senator on that point.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think the Senator misunderstood what I said. I say that that is the textual fact on the face of the Reciprocal Trade Treaty Act. I say that in fact we do have the right, but that, in my judgment, it would not be fair to exercise it without notice.

Mr. GEORGE. After 3 years?

Mr. VANDENBERG. At any time when notice is eligible.

Mr. GEORGE. I thought I understood the Senator's argument. I simply wished to make it clear that later in the debate I shall undertake to demonstrate, beyond all doubt, that after a treaty has operated for 3 years it may be terminated by the Congress

CONVEYANCE OF MINNESOTA LANDS FOR PARK, RECREATIONAL, OR WILDLIFE-REFUGE PURPOSES

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'DANIEL in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 629) to authorize the conveyance of certain public lands in the State of Minnesota to such State for use for park, recreational, or wildlife-refuge purposes.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. HATCH, Mr. WALLGREN, and Mr. GURNEY conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2346) making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes.

EXTENSION OF RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 111) to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, there is nothing new or revolutionary about the philosophy of reciprocal trade. The urgency and validity of this policy were recognized by President William McKinley many decades ago. I was a firm supporter of the policy of reciprocal trade as it was set forth by McKinley in its original form; and though the entire question of tariffs and international trade remains a question of serious and continued controversy, I am still convinced of the necessity and validity of a reciprocal trade policy among the nations of the world.

At this very hour this Nation and nearly every other nation in the world is engaged in a tremendous and worldwide armed conflict. The burdens cast upon the administration in the prosecution of this war are heavy indeed. It will require the fullest cooperation of every agency of our Government and every unit of our population to bring us through this hour of trial successfully. It is of the utmost importance, then, that the closest cooperation should exist between the legislative and executive branches of our Government in the definition and execution of the policies to which this Nation shall adhere during these emergent times. It would indeed be a helpful and encouraging sign if such cooperation between the executive and legislative branches of our Government could be reflected in the passage of a measure on the present question which would be mutually and completely acceptable to both these branches of the Government, for it would serve notice on the world that we in America are and will remain completely united on all major aspects of policy, both at home and abroad, during and immediately following this great struggle and in the prosecution of the great tasks which will face us in the momentous times which lie ahead.

Mr. President, the enactment of a measure which will be mutually acceptable to the executive and legislative departments with respect to this very vital matter of reciprocal trade is by no means an impossible task. Indeed, we are very close to such an agreement already. I know that I for one will find it possible to vote for the enactment of the joint resolution, provided the committee amendment is included. Certainly this amendment should cause no great controversy, for both Secretary Hull and Assistant Secretary Sayre, in their testimony before the committee, stated that the Congress possesses the very same powers which are announced by the committee amendment. It is not, therefore, a question of whether or not the Congress has this power. It is merely a question as to whether or not a statement describing such power should be written into the law. Surely the resolution of that particular question will prove no stumbling block to the Government at a time when unified action is the paramount need.

Mr. President, it lies beyond the province of any man or any group of men to foresee what the conditions of the world will be when the present hostilities come to an end. Indeed, a study of history shows us that every war is followed by a period of grave and far-reaching unrest. Unanticipated problems arise. Economic, social, and political difficulties occur. The resolution of such difficulties requires prompt and effective action. I well recall that when I became Secretary of Labor more than 3 years after the close of the last war, this Nation and every other nation were in the throes of violent and challenging post-war reactions. Millions of American men were unemployed. Industries were listless. Cheap foreign goods flooded our markets. That was indeed a dark hour—an hour which required prompt and thoroughgoing Government action.

It is true that we are laying plans to prevent a recurrence of these dreaded conditions at the close of this war; and well we should, for the lives and welfare of many millions of American citizens make such action imperative. But, again, Mr. President, how are we to know that the plans now being laid will prove adequate in the post-war world? Surely unforeseen events and unexpected developments may well pose problems for which no adequate provisions have been made. In view of the admittedly numerous and complex problems which we shall be called upon to face at the close of this war, it is imperative that this Government be prepared to face those problems on a realistic basis, and that we be in a position to take action if and when action is needed.

Mr. President, I submit that the American people should not go forward to meet the problems of the post-war period without a clear and frank statement of the policy to which their Government shall adhere—a policy which bears the approval of both the legislative and executive departments, and a policy which is clear, frank, and complete in all its terms and implications.

Mr. President, I submit that this country and its people are far too honorable to embark upon a policy which is not fairly and fully expressed. Yet that is exactly what we shall be doing if we enact the pending bill without including the committee amendment. In their testimony before the committee, both Secretary Hull and Assistant Secretary Sayre agreed that the Congress possesses the very powers set forth in the committee amendment. For us to withhold fair and frank notice of such powers from all the nations negotiating with us represents a type of duplicity and obscurity which may well serve to bring damage to our policies and disrepute to our name among the various nations of the world.

Mr. President, I submit that this Nation should enter into no agreement unless that agreement is prefaced by a full and complete statement of the terms by which such agreement shall be governed.

I submit that we should not enter into any commitments without first stating the terms under which such commitments may be adjusted or resolved. We should conceal no terms, when such concealment may serve to aggravate rather than to assuage the serious problems which we shall be called upon to face in the post-war world.

This sentiment of apprehension as to just what our position in the post-war world shall be is being reflected by every part and parcel of our Nation today. The farmer, the worker, and the merchant—yes, every citizen in our land—is greatly concerned with the matter of post-war developments. I do not wish to see this Government enter into any commitment which shall serve to bring distress, want, and unemployment to those able and patriotic citizens of America who are now striving to the utmost of their capacity to bring victory to our cause in this grave and pressing hour.

As I am a firm believer in the principle of reciprocity, so, too, am I a firm believer in and a stanch defender of American constitutional government. Inasmuch as any policy of international trade exerts a definite influence upon the economic and social development of the American Nation, and hence upon American agriculture, American industry, American wages, and American standards of living as well, it is my unalterable belief that any such policy should be entered into only in accordance with the fundamental constitutional precepts of our Government, and that the people of this Nation, through their duly elected representatives in the Congress, should exert a definite and constructive force upon any policy or agreement which this Government undertakes or enters into.

Mr. President, the American Government is like no other government in the world. It is a government of divided powers, a type of government which demands the utmost cooperation between its various departments if the utmost efficiency is to be attained. We must manifest such cooperation in the enactment of this bill today.

We are not a parliamentary government. In such a government the executive branch, drawn from the legislative branch, is dependent upon the support of the legislature for its official life. Mr. President, we all know what happens in a nation governed by a parliamentary form of government when any policy is entered into which does not have the majority support of the legislature. That government fails, new elections are held, and the entire policy is placed in the hands of the newly elected parliament. We have no such arrangement in our Government. Each of our functional departments is independent. The members of each branch hold office for a definite and stipulated time. Such an arrangement, therefore, requires the utmost cooperation among the various branches of the Government. We must, therefore, agree upon a policy which not only will reflect such cooperation but also reflect a respect for the constitutional framework of our Government.

Under this act we have negotiated trade agreements with 30 nations. Of these 30 nations, 26 have required some type of approval by the legislative bodies of their governments before the agreements became operative. Because of this requirement of legislative approval, we have not seen fit to denounce those nations as either protectionists or isolationists. Indeed, on the contrary, we have cited them for their neighborly and cooperative spirit. Why, then, would they, as has often been charged, lose confidence in us if we were fully to announce the policy which governs these agreements instead of leaving—as we now do—a major part of the policy unstated and unexplained. We do this when we fail to make clear to these nations the power which the Congress of the United States possesses with respect to this particular policy.

Mr. President, the acceptance of the committee amendment would not mean that the Congress is bent upon the destruction of our reciprocal trade policy. No Congress would be so rash as to countenance such a step. Indeed, it would require a majority of both Houses of Congress, together with Presidential approval, to take any effective action under the committee amendment. Should the President veto such resolution, it would require a two-thirds majority in both Houses to override the veto and make the provisions of the amendment operative. Obviously, only such an act as was in the best interests of the country, and supported by an overwhelming public opinion, could successfully emerge from such a wise and powerful mechanism as this. In view of the overwhelming majorities which the administration's party has enjoyed in both Houses of the Congress over the years, it is, of course, extremely doubtful that any action could be taken on this matter, unless such action bore the approval of the administration and its party.

The committee amendment only seeks to write into the law a constitutional power which now remains unwritten so far as this particular law is concerned. The committee amendment serves only to make clear the fact that the Congress of the United States is empowered to act, should a condition arise in the post-war world which would make it imperative that it so act in order to preserve and protect our people.

Mr. President, there is need in the world today, as there never was such need before, to restore full confidence and meaning to representative, constitutional government. The rise of totalitarian regimes and the recrudescence of undemocratic principles, have posed problems of grave concern for all societies of freemen, as well as the governments which function under them. This challenge cannot be met, and these problems cannot be solved by the abdication of representative bodies, nor by the shirking of legislative responsibilities. If constitutional government is to be maintained in the United States, and its forces strengthened throughout the world, it remains for the elected representatives of the people to maintain the balance of power, and to lay claim to and exert dominion over the powers granted them by the instrument of government under which this Nation functions—the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. President, the eyes of a troubled world are turned upon us today. They seek to learn whether a democratic government can continue to function as such in this new and involved area in which we live. We can reaffirm their faith in constitutional government if we but enact a law today which reaffirms the validity of those principles. The committee amendment to the pending measure is nothing more nor less than a restatement of a fundamental principle of American constitutional government. I say that we could make no more enduring contribution to the world than to enact this amendment, for by so doing we would make clear to all men everywhere that the United States of America, its people, and its Government, recognize and affirm the principles of constitutional government, and that they are capable of meeting all problems and developing all policies within the framework of such a government. If we do not succeed in meeting this problem within such a constitutional framework, we shall have dealt a heavy—yes, a mortal—blow to the forces of all constitutional governments, not only in our own Nation, but in every nation throughout the world.

Mr. President, I shall vote to sustain the amendment recommended by the committee.

Mr. MALONEY obtained the floor.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for the purpose of suggesting the absence of a quorum?

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I appreciate the thoughtfulness of the Senator, but I prefer not to yield for that purpose. However, I am very grateful to my colleague.

Mr. President, I very much enjoyed the eloquent, and articulate address of the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]. I believe his address was deserving of much more than that which he asked.

Three years ago I supported the amendment offered by the late Senator Pittman to a joint resolution similar to the one now being discussed. I have heretofore submitted an amendment in connection with the pending joint resolution. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEC. —. Effective on the date of enactment of this act, section 2 of such act of June 12, 1934, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) No foreign trade agreement hereafter entered into under the first section of this act shall take effect until the Senate of the United States shall have advised and consented to its ratification, two-thirds of the Senators present concurring."

Mr. MALONEY. When the Pittman amendment was defeated, I opposed the joint resolution then pending and voted against it, as I had done on two previous occasions. During that debate I set forth, at some length, my reason for opposing the extension of the law permitting so-called reciprocal trade agreements. My reason then, as it is now, was that I refused to abandon the provisions of the Constitution concerning the making of treaties with foreign powers.

Circumstances have changed greatly since that time. The changes, however, for reasons which I shall state, do not remove my objections to ignoring or bypassing the Constitution in order to accomplish admittedly noble objectives.

Three years ago I expressed to this body my opinion that the power to make trade treaties without the concurrence or approval of the representatives of the American people would be a dangerous concentration of power in the hands of a few men. The power to make trade treaties includes the power to affect or control the entire relationship of this Nation with other nations. I think that no sensible person will deny that those having the power to alter the economic relationship between nations will have also the power to influence profoundly their political relationships. To say that a treaty dealing with a subject of such basic importance is not a treaty but an agreement does not change the fact of the matter. It is the same thing as calling a war an "incident."

Just as the makers of so-called agreements, which are really treaties, can control our foreign policy to a large extent so can they greatly affect our domestic economy. The well-being of every American citizen can be influenced by those who control our foreign trade. One industry can be favored and another injured by these trade treaties. One section can be given an advantage over another. The manner and form of our entire national economic development can be altered.

Transcending in importance even the economic results and the effect on foreign policy is the effect on our American system if we continue this path away from representative government. No one denies that concentration of authority often seems attractive. It is easier to act in secrecy and without the interference of the representatives of the divers interests that constitute America. Other peoples have tried the easier and more expeditious way of the authoritarian government. They have avoided the inconveniences and annoyances of democratic methods. Yes, to be frank, they have avoided even some of the faults and failures of democracy. They have, however, found the easy path a dangerous one. They escape their relatively minor troubles at the expense of overwhelming disaster. Mussolini made the trains run on time and Hitler even abolished unemployment, but those peoples who gave up, who abandoned all power to the heads of their governments are paying and will pay a price terrible beyond imagination.

Mr. President, it does not seem to me to be necessary to review in detail the objections which I have to the extension, without restrictions, of this measure. In previous debates others have covered the ground with complete clarity and ample evidence. Nor do I think it necessary for me again to enlarge on what I have said concerning the integrity and nobility of purpose of the proponents of this program. I have said, and I repeat, that I do not fear a dictatorship of our present national leadership, nor do I fear that that leadership intends to use the powers here requested to the detriment of this Nation or of other nations. I take pleasure in again attesting to my profound respect for Secretary of State Hull. My objection is no narrow resistance to present policies or persons. It was expressed as well as lies within my power 3 years ago when I said:

> Never let it be said that each Chief Executive of this Nation, or any Secretary of State, is entitled to exercise and practice his philosophy of tariff and treaty making and his own ideas on the method of stimulating foreign trade, without adherence to the directional signs of the Constitution.

All this, in substance, was said when this program was discussed previously. I have purposely ignored, until this moment, the changed circumstances to which I referred earlier in these remarks. I would be less than frank if I did not agree that we have a new problem of vast importance. That problem is the necessity of planning today for the establishment of a lasting peace. I am completely convinced that no lasting peace is possible without a sound and equitable foreign trade policy. I will go further and say that our indicated intentions are of immediate importance to the successful prosecution of the war.

I make these statements, Mr. President, because I wish to answer directly the most powerful arguments which are being offered by the proponents of the pending joint resolution. They claim that its rejection or amendment would be a repudiation of the idea of economic nonaggression. They claim that the world would thus be discouraged in its hopes for creating a lasting peace. Let me say that I cannot agree. Let me say that I do not admit, in fact I deny, that opposition to the pending measure implies opposition to a fair, a just, and a workable program of trade among nations. Let me say further and with great emphasis, that if any foreign nation believes that the opponents of this joint resolution favor a destructive and selfish policy of economic aggression, the blame for such an interpretation will lie with those who have misstated our position.

Other nations require that these so-called trade agreements be approved by the representatives of their people before they become effective. Why, in the case of the United States, should a demand for equal protection be called economic aggression? Who makes this accusation? tion? Not foreign statesmen—but representatives of our own Government. The reason, of course, is clear enough. The proponents of this measure seek votes for its passage. They wish to make it appear that its opponents are voting against international economic cooperation. They, not we, say that this is the interpretation that should be placed on our positions. They, not we, are saying that we repudiate the idea of economic nonaggression. This is a common political stratagem. Used on domestic issues it is fairly well understood and not too damaging. On matters affecting our relationship with foreign powers such tactics are dangerous. The persons who have stated to the world that we oppose this joint resolution on a narrowly nationalistic basis will be responsible if the interpretation which they profess to fear is generally accepted.

I would suggest that the Members of the United States Senate who find it necessary to speak in opposition be permitted to express their own reasons for so doing. For myself, I very much resent the charges on the part of those downtown in the State Department who undertake to make a diagnosis or an analysis or an appraisal of the position of Members of the United States Senate.

Mr. President, I have outlined the reasons why I have consistently opposed this sort of extension of power. I have recognized the special atmosphere today. Because of this atmosphere I find it necessary as an opponent of this measure to state, in rather general terms, my own position on our foreign trade policy.

I am heartily in favor of the "idea of economic nonaggression." More than that I favor a policy of mutual helpfulness in the economic relationship among nations. I do not believe that a profitable foreign trade must be carried on at the expense of other nations. On the contrary, I believe that recent economic history has shown that trade which is not beneficial to all will certainly not be beneficial to us or to any other one nation.

The idea that we can consistently sell abroad more than we are willing to buy from abroad is simply foolish. To look at the matter, for a moment, only from the viewpoint of our own national economic interest, why should we want to sell more than we buy? It does not make much sense that we should want to deliver out of our own production every year a far greater value of goods than we receive in exchange for those goods.

If any nation were to propose such an arrangement on a barter basis, we would regard the proposal as an insult to our intelligence. And yet we call such a situation a favorable balance of trade. The very use of the words "favorable" and "unfavorable" has tended to confuse our thinking on this fundamentally simple question. Of course, when we have a favorable balance of trade we receive something in addition to the lesser quantity of goods or services which our people receive in return for their own exports. What we receive, in simple language, is a claim, for future use, against the goods or services of foreign nations. Such claims may seem to have a value. Actually, the value is so remote as to be practically nonexistent. If we want a favorable balance of trade we obviously cannot use the claims developed from the trade of former years, since in each year we insist on delivering more than enough to pay for what we receive in that particular year.

Of course, we can, and have, in the past, used some part of our accumulation of foreign exchange or gold to loan abroad. It takes little thought to understand that such a remedy cures the symptom while aggravating the disease. These investments are intended to be repaid. They must draw interest as well, so that our purchasing power or claim against goods produced in foreign countries grows at an accelerated rate.

Such a condition is an absurdity. It is as though an individual worked hard and sold his neighbor all his surplus goods, accepting in payment some token which could be used only to purchase goods in turn from that neighbor, and then refused year after year to make use of these tokens, lest he be forced to restrict his own activities and slacken the accumulation of an imaginary wealth which his own policies made worthless.

I know that this sounds like almost too simple a statement. I know that it seems incredible that our foreign-trade policy, when reduced to its essentials, could have been so completely unintelligent. Yet I must insist that it is completely true that we are giving away the goods which we are producing in our farms and factories when we persistently sell more abroad than we are willing to accept in exchange.

The mere loss by our own people of the goods making up our excess of exports is by no means all the damage which we here suffer from lack of an intelligent foreign-trade policy. Having built a false prosperity on a foreign trade, the basis of which was unsound and which could not possibly continue, we suffered a terrific depression partly due to the inevitable disappearance of that trade. Unquestionably, the severe contraction of our exports was a major cause in starting the downward spiral which has caused this country since 1929 unprecedented human and economic suffering.

Certainly, feeling as I do about the damage wrought by an unwise foreign-trade policy, I object most positively to any attempt to classify me as one who would wish this country to pursue any policy so stupid as that of economic aggression. The effect on our own country should be ample reason for all of us to wish to see a new and more intelligent approach to our economic relationship with the nations of the world.

Another compelling reason exists, however. That reason lies in the effect our policies will have on our hopes for peace and security. Certainly, I am not so foolish as to believe that a permanent peace is possible unless the nations of the world are permitted and even assisted to enjoy economic well-being. Fair and equitable trade among nations will be our greatest guaranty of a lasting peace.

The present war was not caused by our international economic policies. It was caused by the mad ambitions of the rulers of the aggressor nations. Sound policies on foreign trade would not alone have prevented the war. But it must be said, as we look back, that our policies did not serve in any way to lessen the danger of war.

As long as we persisted in selling more to other nations than we were willing to buy, it follows necessarily that the other nations of the world in sum total must have bought more than they were able to sell. As our unused claims against world production increased, theirs diminished. The lack of foreign exchange in many countries forced the adoption of various expedients which served only to aggravate an already bad situation. Devaluation of currencies, elaborate foreign exchange controls, barter arrangements, subsidies, and efforts to accomplish national economic self-sufficiency were evidences of an effort to secure artificially the foreign exchange which was lacking in every great nation except our own. The mistakes were not all ours. Certainly our policies were by no means the sole cause of the break-down of international trade, but I think we cannot deny that we contributed to that breakdown.

This is a pretty bad picture, so bad that it is a little hard to believe. One is forced to ask, "How could such a situation have been allowed to develop?" Of course, the general facts are pretty well known. During the First World War our heavy shipments abroad to our allies, our loans, and the liquidation of foreign-owned investments in this country, transformed us into a creditor nation. After the war we reacted to our new position in a perfectly natural way. We started to loan and invest money abroad in substantial amounts. Other creditor nations in the past have prospered under a similar program, but there was an important difference. Those nations had need of large quantities of goods which they could not produce and must obtain abroad, and it was advantageous to them to maintain and increase their claim on these goods in the form of foreign trade balances developed from their investments, as well as from their actual exports.

During the expanding prosperity of the 1920's the inherent danger in our unbalanced program was well concealed. The picture that was obscure then is very clear now, and no great credit can be claimed by anyone for recognizing at this late date the dangers which were generally ignored during that period.

Surely, however, no one who understands at all what led to disruption of international trade would be willing to assist in a repeat performance. The proponents of the pending joint resolution to extend so-called reciprocal trade agreements make a grave mistake if they assume that we who oppose are blind to the dangers of "economic aggression."

I have wanted to state my opinion of the results of our former mistaken policy, so that my opposition to this measure will not be misunderstood. I have stated before and I will state again that I believe that these "agreements" or treaties have been useful. I do not believe, however, that they are the whole answer to the establishment of a fair and balanced foreign trade policy. I think I have made it clear that I believe that our policy should be based upon a complete acceptance of the idea that we should be willing to receive in goods and services an amount approximately equal to the value of the goods and services which we provide to foreign nations.

Our policy must take into account the fact that any transaction in foreign trade is a dual transaction. It is a transaction between individuals or corporations in the different countries. It is also a transaction between the economic societies that exist within those different countries.

We have, until recently, operated on the axiom that the whole is the sum of the parts. That is, if we help each manufacturer and each farming section by tariff protection, the result will necessarily benefit our whole economy. Unfortunately this theory as applied to foreign trade has been proven false. It is true that tariff protection helps an individual manufacturer, other things being equal. It is likewise true that protection helps the farmer, other things being equal. But other things are not equal if the total of our tariff restrictions collapses our foreign trade and dwarfs our domestic economy.

Every foreign sale seems good. It brings to the seller pounds or pesos, to be exchanged for dollars. Every foreign purchase seems bad. It takes business from a farmer, or a manufacturer, and work from his employees. Taking the viewpoint of each individual producer, and taking the total of producer opinions, each as to his own product, as an opinion on a national policy, we arrive at an absurdity. Sell everything and buy nothing.

I have already attempted to show that such a policy makes no sense whatever on a national basis. The National Government must have its say in the dual transaction to which our national economy is a party. The interests of each of a large number of producers cannot be permitted to destroy the interests of our whole economy—yes, and destroy the very persons who have unwisely sought individual protection at the expense of the country as a whole.

We must have a balanced foreign trade. How great that trade should be I do not pretend to know. Certainly, it should be considerable, and with equal certainty I say that it should not be unlimited. We are potentially nearly self-sufficient. We could conceivably restrict our foreign trade to a very low figure. If we did so, however, we would certainly fall back, eventually, from our leadership in world production. We would sacrifice the comparative advantage of exchanging the goods which we produce most efficiently and cheaply for those which are most difficult and expensive for us to produce. We would, furthermore, turn our back on an opportunity to assist the rest of the world. Many countries produce goods which we need, and the same countries badly need our products.

I think that this country honestly wants to help other peoples in their efforts to raise their own standards of living. But even from a selfish viewpoint an extreme nationalistic policy would be dangerous and perhaps fatal. We might well find ourselves isolated in a world in which no nation will be safe from sudden and devastating attack as new and more terrible weapons are constantly developed.

When I say that our foreign trade should not be unlimited I mean that I do not believe in free trade for this Nation. We are fortunate. We cover a large and varied area. We have a great productive and a great consuming capacity within our own borders. We enjoy, therefore, most of the advantages which less fortunate nations could obtain from a completely free trade. Every section of this country grows or manufactures the products in which it enjoys an advantage. It distributes these products to the entire country and receives in return the products which each other section can produce most cheaply. Some additional advantage could be gained by free trade in that we would concentrate more completely on the goods in which we have an advantage over the rest of the world, receiving in turn at a very low cost the products of those countries. However, the relatively slight additional advantage to be gained by us would not justify the cost. We would immediately suffer a tremendous disruption of our economic organization. Sections and industries would be ruined while others would expand and prosper enormously.

The people of Connecticut, for instance, would not wish to be forced to raise cattle in the Southwest. Nor would western wheat farmers care to move into a greatly expanded steel industry if those moves happened to be the ones which would result from a complete readjustment of our economy to free trade. Furthermore, I do not believe that we would want to be completely at the mercy of world economic shifts which may take place. Certainly, this would be one of the results of a free-trade policy. No, I would not give up a large measure of protection for our great continental economic society.

Our society can, however, well afford a substantial volume of foreign trade. It can, in fact, considerably benefit from a large but limited volume. I believe that it will be the function of the Government of this country to develop policies which will result in our foreign trade being carried on in a manner which will be beneficial to us and to our friends and neighbors in other lands.

A determination must be made as to what volume of foreign trade in proportion to our total business is most beneficial to us. Within that volume it must be determined what goods we can most profitably accept and what goods we can most profitably ship abroad. The basis of decision must be the welfare of the country as a whole and not the narrow interest of any section or group. I say now that I will support such a program as long as I am a Member of this body. I have already said that I favor reciprocal trade treaties although I do not favor the abandonment of the constitutional rights of Congress to pass upon such agreements.

So, Mr. President, I find myself in the unusual position of being ever so anxious—I think as anxious as any other Member of this body can be—that the joint resolution be passed to the extent that we continue our present tariff-making policy. I would not return under any circumstances which I might control to the log-rolling practices of another day. I hope that such procedure is gone forever. But, Mr. President, as I said in a lengthy discussion of this subject in the Senate three years ago, and perhaps on earlier occasions, when I voted against the so-called reciprocal trade agreements measure, I will not yield an inch on this constitutional question.

When I started my discussion some little time ago I gave applause to the eloquent and splendid address made by the distinguished senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], who made an ardent plea that we protect the provisions of the Constitution, that we hew to the fundamental law, although it seems to me that after making that excellent constitutional address he asked ever so little. I can quite understand his position. I think that I might be willing to support the proposal of my distinguished colleague, Mr. DANAHER, which the Senator from Michigan advocated and supported. It does not go far enough for me, but even with the inclusion of the Danaher resolution and any of the other amendments proposed here, I would not support this over-all joint resolution unless and until it was so perfected as to keep faith with the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. President, it must be said, however, that in themselves these trade treaties do not constitute a policy. We could have an unbalanced trade in spite of reciprocal trade agreements. In fact, improperly used, these agreements could well cause the lack of balance. They could even be used as instruments of "economic aggression." Certainly, I do not believe that this administration would make any such use of the powers it now seeks. I merely point out that we are not here being asked—and I should like to emphasize this, Senators—to pass judgment on a policy. We are being asked to pass judgment on a method by which a policy—any policy—may be put into effect. I think we know, in general, the policy of this administration in respect to foreign trade, although I must say at this point, Mr. President, that the leaders of the party of which I am a member have changed their opinions and their attitudes to a considerable extent in recent years.

Mr. President, I said that I think I know in general the policy of this administration in respect to foreign trade. We may approve this policy. But my warning is that the method here sought can be used equally well to promote some entirely different policy, and I do not think that this is a case where the end can be said to justify the means.

There can be only one reason for an insistence on the extension without restriction of the Trade Agreements Act. That reason must be a lack of confidence in the intelligence and unselfishness of the Congress of the United States. I must repeat that the proponents of this measure are not urging the approval of a foreign-trade policy. They are not even requesting the approval of specific trade agreements. What they are asking is one thing and one thing only, namely, that Congress surrender its constitutional and traditional prerogatives to make tariffs and approve treaties.

True, it is proposed to set a time limit once again on the extension of these powers. I think that we should pay very little attention to the qualification. Extensions have previously been asked and granted twice since the powers were first bestowed. Now, more than ever before, we are warned that a refusal to extend the powers will disrupt an established policy. This argument will grow more and more formidable with the passage of the years. If Congress is to recapture its legitimate powers it must do so without further delay. In my judgment, Senators, it must do so now. The reason for that opinion is obvious to every Senator.

I have but one more thought to add to this discussion. I desire to point at what I consider to be the basic fallacy in the methods which we are asked to approve. That fallacy appears to me to be the idea that policies of overwhelming national importance can be carried on without the approval and acquiescence of the American people acting through their chosen representatives.

Can anyone believe that a foreign-trade policy which lacks the approval of the majority of the American people can actually endure and be successful? If an unpopular policy is put into effect, it is only fair to say that its eventual repudiation will create discord and disorder in the delicate field of international relations.

If it be said that the American people will approve the policy, but that their representatives cannot be trusted to reflect public opinion properly, then an argument is presented against the very basis of the democratic form of government of this Republic. Certainly, we know that democracies make mistakes. We know that representative government is sometimes cumbersome but we know, also, that the very necessity of securing widespread public support for all major policies is the final safeguard of a free people.

We have faith in democracy, and we are giving proof of our faith as we fight to defend it. This is hardly the time when we should show a lack of faith in our own democratic methods and an approval of any part of an alien philosophy.

I know that we have made mistakes in tariff-making and in our foreign-trade policies. There is no doubt that in the past our people have been misled and mistaken in this respect, but no more so than have the heads and leaders of our Government.

Today, I am convinced that this Government, and, I believe, any government which might succeed it, has a broadened and more intelligent understanding of the essentials of our foreign-trade relations. I believe we are mistaken, however, if we do not realize that the people of this country have also learned the lesson of the past twenty years.

I am not an expert on matters pertaining to foreign trade, but I believe I can understand the fundamentals. I have outlined my ideas on this subject in simple language, and I do not think that they differ greatly from those of our average citizen. I have expressed these ideas in an effort to make it as clear as I possibly can that I and other opponents of the joint resolution do not base our opposition on a selfish and nationalistic viewpoint.

I think it is not too much to ask that the people of this country be trusted to support a fair, sound, and intelligent foreign-trade policy. I believe that the Members of this Congress can be trusted in like manner, and that the welfare of this Nation does not require the surrender of our constitutional authority.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to consider executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RADCLIFFE in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations (and withdrawing several nominations in the Regular Army) which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received and nominations withdrawn, see the end of the Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following favorable reports of nominations were submitted:

By Mr WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs:

Sundry citizens and several meritorious noncommissioned officers to be second lieutenants in the Marine Corps; and Sundry midshipmen, graduates of the Naval Academy, to be ensigns in the Navy or second lieutenants in the Marine Corps.

By Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Military Affairs:

The following appointments in the Regular Army:

Thomas Matkins Johnston, to be second lieutenant, Corps of Engineers, with rank from June 1, 1943; and William David Lutz, to be second lieutenant, Field Artillery, with rank from June 1, 1943.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will proceed to state the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

UNITED STATES COAST GUARD

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Leslie G. Haverland, to be lieutenant (junior grade).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent that the postmaster nominations be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

THE NAVY

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I am advised that earlier today the committee on Naval Affairs reported some routine nominations of midshipmen at the Naval Academy to be ensigns in the Navy or second lieutenants in the Marine Corps. The chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I am also advised, is very anxious to have those routine nominations confirmed at this time.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, if the nominations are in fact entirely routine, I have no objection.

Mr. HILL. I am advised that they are. The nominations are those of midshipmen at the Naval Academy to be ensigns in the Navy or second lieutenants in the Marine Corps; and it is necessary that the nominations be confirmed in order that the midshipmen may graduate from the Naval Academy.

Mr. McNARY. Then I have no objection.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations be confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the nominations? The Chair hears none. The nominations will be read.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of midshipmen to be ensigns in the Navy.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

THE MARINE CORPS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of midshipmen to be second lieutenants in the Marine Corps.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

Mr. HILL. I ask that the President be notified forthwith of all nominations confirmed today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith.

RECESS TO THURSDAY

Mr. HILL. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 a. m. on Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Thursday, May 27, 1943, at 11 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 24, 1943:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, MAY 24, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Immortal Love, within whose righteous will all is peace and rest, have mercy upon us and cause all passions to cease. Into the chalice of quiet faith let us pour the sins and fears which doth so easily beset us, and make every tear a sacrament and behold the sign of the cross on human anguish. We rejoice in wonder that the Christian Evangel in a waiting world is the mighty pillar on which we build serene confidence. We do not dream nor suffer alone; the links to which we are bound are many and mighty.

Great God, teach us that Christian civilization is infinitely more than personal comfort; it is interpreted as another's need and right. We pray Thee to inspire us with care and diligence for others as we tread our easy ways. At the altar of complete dedication, make our souls to feel the challenge of a new vigor, beckoning us onward to the heights toward which the ages have been struggling. In the name of Him whose song surpasses all other voices, may we speak out of the depths of an invincible conscience, entranced by hope, faith, and love. Blessed Lord, in strength and wisdom do Thou abide with our Speaker and the Congress in the spirit of cooperation, and Thine shall be the praise in the name of our Redeemer. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, May 21, 1943, was read and approved.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 80]

Andresen, August H.	Fenton	Nichols
Boykin	Fulmer	Norton
Bradley, Pa.	Gale	O'Brien, N. Y.
Buckley	Gibson	O'Leary
Burgin	Gore	Reed, Ill.
Camp	Granger	Rivers
Cannon, Fla.	Guyer	Rockwell
Capozzoli	Hale	Rogers, Calif.
Clark	Hancock	Rolph
Cochran	Hart	Russell
Cole, N. Y.	Hendricks	Sabath
Cooley	Hinshaw	Shafer
Costello	Holifield	Sheppard
Courtney	Izac	Sheridan
Culkin	Judd	Smith, Ohio
Curtis	Kilburn	Smith, Va.
Dies	King	Stearns, N. H.
Disney	Kleberg	Taylor
Ditter	Lea	Vinson, Ga.
Eaton	McCord	Welch
Eberharter	McGranery	Whelchel, Ga.
Elliott	Maas	Woodruff, Mich.
Elmer	Miller, Mo.	Worley
	Miller, Pa.

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 361 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings, under the call, be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

ANTI-POLL-TAX BILL

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, under rule XXVII of the House, I call up the motion to discharge the Committee on Rules from the further consideration of House Resolution 131, pursuant to discharge petition No. 3.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That upon the day succeeding the adoption of this resolution, a special order be, and is hereby, created by the House of Representatives, for the consideration of H. R. 7, a public bill which has remained in the Committee on the Judiciary for 30 or more days without action. That such special order be, and is hereby, created, notwithstanding any further action on said bill by the Committee on the Judiciary, or any rule of the House. That on said day the Speaker shall recognize the Representative from Washington, WARREN G. MAGNUSON, to call up H. R. 7, a bill making unlawful the requirement for the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite to voting in a primary or other election for national officers, as a special order of business, and to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of said H. R. 7. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the Member of the House requesting the rule for the consideration of said H. R. 7 and the Member of the House who is opposed to the said H. R. 7, to be designated by the Speaker, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill, and the amendments thereto, to final passage, without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit. The special order shall be a continuing order until the bill is finally disposed of.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANKIN. Does that resolution refer to the Marcantonio bill?

The SPEAKER. It is H. R. 7.

Mr. RANKIN. Is that the bill introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO]?

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

The gentleman from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish today to discuss the pros and cons of this resolution or the bill whose consideration it makes in order. I do think, however, that the House should be informed of the legislative procedure involved so that we may all thoroughly understand what is going to happen on the bill and so that both sides can be heard and thus have a fair and equitable debate on the matter.

I am very glad my friend from Mississippi submitted the parliamentary inquiry he did.

Mr. RANKIN. I was trying to absolve the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I am very glad he did, because I think I should report to the House, and as the Members here know, that the poll-tax matter has been an issue in this body for a long time. It is not a new matter. Many of us have interested ourselves in it. I personally wrote a bill pertaining to the subject 3 or 4 years ago. I was away for some time, and the gentleman from California, Mr. Geyer, who is now dead, took the matter up. The last-session debates on the question are well known to all the Members.

At the beginning of this session several of us on both sides of the aisle agreed that we would get together and see if we could not work out a sort of a coalition in order to push this cause forward. That we have. It so happens, I may say to the gentleman from Mississippi, that I, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER], the gentleman from New York [Mr. BALDWIN], yes, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO]——

Mr. RANKIN. That is enough.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I decline to yield.

We all introduced identical bills. The pending bill is identical with the bill that left the Judiciary Committee of the Senate last session. It so happens that the immediate bill was one of many on the subject and introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO], but it is the same bill that I introduced, that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] introduced, that the gentleman from New York [Mr. BALDWIN] introduced, and that the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN] introduced. It is no one person's bill. It is the anti-poll-tax bill only. We have so all agreed.

We have 10 minutes of debate today on each side on the rule, and tomorrow the Chair will recognize someone in opposition and we will have an hour of debate on each side. I am sure we shall be very glad to hear the gentleman from Mississippi at that time.

Mr. RANKIN. Would the gentleman like to yield me some time now? I should be glad to give the House some information now.

Mr. MAGNUSON. The opposition will have 1 hour. I do not know who will have charge of the time.

Mr. RANKIN. I shall be glad to take some time now.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I decline to yield.

The situation today, under the rule, is that automatically after 20 minutes debate there will be a vote on the motion to discharge the Committee on Rules, and tomorrow we shall continue with general debate, and in order to be fair we have stipulated an open rule. So the debate will be followed by reading of the bill for amendments. Everyone will have a chance to present his case. I hope that the debate will proceed on that high plane and on the cold logic and facts—legal and otherwise—on both sides of this question. The issue does not involve personalities nor should it involve sectionalism. I know I shall not consciously yield myself in handling the bill for the proponents to any such tactics. I am sure my southern friends will do likewise.

The SPEAKER. Does any member of the Committee on Rules on the majority side desire time in opposition? If so, the Chair will recognize him.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I will take the time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to myself. Speaking for the Rules Committee, the committee has never seen this bill. Speaking for myself, I would say that it is the new despotism, interested in recreating man according to the superior plan of man's nev. vision that is sponsoring this measure. No one believes it to be constitutional, therefore, it somewhat surprises me that my Republican friends who claim that their party is now the constitutional or States' rights party, should be lending aid in the perpetration of this unconstitutional act. While you gave the Negro his freedom you lost him to those in the Democratic Party operating in the name of the New Deal who came along with more alluring promises and took him away from you, and where finding a large alien element talking about the great brown race of tomorrow. I think he will stay. This is a sorry bid for the Negro vote. Remembering what the Negro cost you following the Civil War, I am surprised that you want him back. He made it forever impossible that you should wield any sort of political influence in the Southern States as long as you hold to the name Republican Party.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. The New Deal tore a leaf out of your own book and licked you unmercifully. Have you forgotten that your party abandoned your name in 1862 and again in 1864? The name Republican Party did not go on the ticket, and if the New Deal persists in heaping indignities upon the States that have kept the Democratic Party alive in the years gone by, then you can imagine what might happen in those Southern poll-tax-ridden States, if the people should have the opportunity to vote for an American or for a constitutional party.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER].

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I wish it were possible for me to say something in these brief 3 minutes that would appeal to your reason. I know your political sense has already been appealed to and I wish it were possible for me to make a reasonable appeal, an appeal based on reason which would influence you. Our boys from the poll-tax States, and the boys from other States, are fighting and dying in Guadalcanal, in Africa, in Attu, and on the seven seas. Here at a time when unity is the most prized thing that we seek, we find the sad and sorry spectacle of the House of Representatives, a branch of the National Congress, bringing up an issue that is calculated more than anything else to bring about disunity. I know that you have gotten your orders from John L. Lewis, from Earl Browder, from the Association for the Advancement of Colored People, from the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO], and I know that you have gotten your orders from the First Lady of the land. I know that politically you feel you have to vote for this detestable thing, but in the name of the one objective of winning this war, for God's sake, one time let us rise above political expediency and vote to uphold the Constitution and the integrity of this Congress, and contribute to the national unity so necessary in winning this war.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BALDWIN].

Mr. BALDWIN of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am going to be very brief because we are not debating the bill. We are debating the rule; what I think is the American system of permitting this House to discuss important legislation. I do not think any one here has seen or heard from any of the people mentioned by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER], much as I respect his opinion. I do not think there has been any politics in it, so far as I am concerned, until it was injected by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER]. I sympathize entirely with the problems concerning some of my neighbors from the South. I would not be for this bill if I thought it was going to interfere with State rights, and their handling of their own State governments. That is their business. This is the national legislative body, and in the bill we propose national legislation affecting Members of Congress, the Federal Government, and only the Federal Government. The question of constitutionality will be handled tomorrow by people more competent than I am of handling it. That will be done by some of our legal friends on both sides.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BALDWIN of New York. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman says that he does not think it interferes with the affairs of the States. I wonder what the gentleman thinks it will do. Evidently he has not read the bill.

Mr. BALDWIN of New York. I have read the bill, and it affects Federal offices, and I hope there will not be injected into this debate personal questions, because it is not on a personal basis, certainly not as far as I am concerned.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 minute more.

Mr. RANKIN. Does not the gentleman from New York know that the Constitution of the United States provides that State election laws shall apply to the election of Congressmen and Senators, the same as they apply to the election of the members of the most numerous branch of the State legislatures? You are attempting to tear down not only the Constitution of the United States, but the constitutions of the various States.

Mr. BALDWIN of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am not a lawyer. I have studied the question and I think the gentleman is in error. That is my personal opinion.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, this so-called antipoll tax bill is sponsored by the Communist Party, which, according to press reports, Stalin has just destroyed, so far as Russia is concerned, by abolishing its governing body known as the Comintern.

While that was a fatal blow to the head of the tarantula, let us not forget that its poisonous tentacles are spread throughout this country, extending into various Government bureaus and wielding a pernicious influence upon some Members of the Congress of the United States.

Step by step Russia has been getting away from the Third International, as is evidenced by the fact that she not only has reopened the churches of Russia, but has put a stop to the persecution of Christianity, abolished the Commissars so far as the army is concerned, and has now dissolved the Comintern.

But the trouble is that communism still wields a powerful influence in this country, and in my opinion it is responsible for bringing this measure to the floor of the House, when everyone knows that it violates the Constitution of the United States as well as that of the various States affected.

Section 2 of article I of the Constitution of the United States says:

> The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

This measure would wipe out that section of the Constitution.

The seventeenth amendment to the Constitution, which provides for the election of United States Senators by the people, says:

> The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislatures.

This bill would wipe out that provision. Not only that, but it would open the way for congressional invasion of every State in the Union, and the interference, not only with its elections, but with its nominating primaries and conventions.

This is purely an attack on certain Southern States and an attempt to harass them at a time when their people are bending every effort in this war emergency and when their sons are fighting and dying all over the world in order to protect the very Constitution this measure would tend to destroy.

The appeals for this legislation did not come from the Southern States, but from communistic intermeddlers from other sections of the country.

The gentleman from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] while pushing this measure, that is designed to stir up race trouble for we people in the Southern States, might well remember that unless conditions change he is going to have a more serious race problem with the Japanese on the Pacific Coast than we have ever had with the Negroes in the South; and the only friends those people in the West have ever had in Congress who were willing to stand up for them under any and all circumstances on this Japanese question, were the southern Democrats whom he is now going out of his way to harass and annoy.

While communism is being driven from Russia under the scorpion lash of an outraged public opinion and patriotism of the Russian Army, it has been powerful enough in this country to force this measure to a vote, and probably to force its passage.

Let me remind each and every one of you who vote for this measure that you are not merely harassing the white people of the South, but you are setting a precedent that will likely commend this poison chalice to your own lips—and that particularly applies to the far western States that are now threatened with the Japanese menace.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MANASCO].

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Speaker, our Nation has been at war for almost 18 months and we are just beginning to get our heads above the water. Prior to the attack on Pearl Harbor by the Japanese, public opinion was divided into two camps. One camp wanted to do everything short of war to aid the so-called democracies. The other camp, commonly referred to as isolationists, wanted to play hands off and await our fate if the Axis Powers were victorious. There was great bitterness between the two camps. Untrue and unpatriotic charges were hurled from one to the other, but the bitterness was wiped out on December 7, 1941. No Nation in the history of mankind was more unified and stirred to concerted action to bring the terrible war to a successful conclusion. Capital and labor united to convert a peacetime economy to full war production. It is true, mistakes were made and useless delays occurred. But our production record today cannot but convince the most pessimistic that our country is producing more armament than all our enemies combined.

Our enemies are smart and have had years of experience in sowing the seeds of dissension among the peoples whom they would conquer. For several months an underground attack has been made against capital. To believe some of the rumors going the rounds one would soon reach the conclusion that capital intended to enslave all our people and return to feudal control. On the other hand, rumors have been spread throughout the land that labor was going to take control of the country and destroy capitalism. These rumors, unless stopped, will have dire results. All admit that our American system is the best, for where else in the world is the standard of living so high. Both capital and labor must have their virtues or we could not have accomplished in 18 months the greatest production miracle ever known.

There is another force working to destroy unity. All the advocates of racial equality lose sight of the immutable law that so long as the political and military power of a heterogeneous nation remains in the hands of one component part so long does that nation endure. When this control becomes diffused and minority groups given equal power, political dissension and territorial disintegration begins. China is an excellent example. We now know the reason for the anxiety of the people on the west coast due to the presence of Japs in their midst. In our Nation's Capital we are witnessing serious friction caused by pampering minorities. In a heterogeneous nation, one racial group must, by the law of nature, be the dominant group, or the nation will fall. We can keep our Nation intact only so long as the ruling power is held by a homogeneous group. It is for us to decide what group that will be. Unless we make this decision now, sooner or later the Republic will be destroyed by political parties catering to petty ambitions which will result in endless controversies and bids for votes.

What group in our country started this agitation? We do not have to look far to place our finger on the right group. It is the same group that urged strikes by W. P. A. workers; the same group that made organized marches on Capitol Hill when legislation was pending to strengthen our national defense; the same group that promoted slow-downs and strikes in defense plants prior to Russia's entry into the war; the same group that spread malicious propaganda among the youth of this country that they were to be sent to war to make more millionaires; the same group that coined the slogan "The Yanks are not coming"; the same group that termed the war an imperialistic war before Germany attacked Russia; and the same group that would sabotage our war effort tomorrow if Russia were to secure a satisfactory peace with Germany. It is needless for me to name the group, for we all know it to be the American Communist—the party that hates everything American and is too "red" for Stalin, who has just dissolved the Communist International.

The enemies of our way of life have been very cagey in spreading their vicious propaganda. Many Americans have innocently fallen for their line. The so-called isolationists were honest in opposing an increase in our armed strength. The enemies of our country took advantage of this honest position and spread all kinds of unfounded rumors. They printed leaflets asking the question "Why should we build up our Army and Navy? Whom are we going to fight?" This sounded good to the average American who was convinced that the two oceans constituted an impregnable defense. This same group of Communists who worked in season and out of season to prevent the training of men and officers to defend our country were the first to make violent demonstrations demanding a second front when it appeared that Russia was in close quarters. In a republic the military cannot long refuse the demands of an overwhelming public opinion. The Communists realized this and attempted to influence public opinion to demand the opening of a second front in Europe. To have acceded to these demands would have resulted in the cold-blooded murder of thousands upon thousands of our boys. It would have been nothing short of slaughter to send untrained troops and untrained officers against a military machine the like of which the world had never seen.

Soon after the war is over this same group of Communists will advocate disarmament, knowing full well that we will be the only country to do so. They will find their way into our churches and schools, the press, and the radio. They will foster all kinds of organizations under the guise of patriotism. Many Americans will be misled and will bring pressure on the Congress to carry out a program that will result in the destruction of America as a world power. Twenty-five years from now, or probably sooner, there will be another war. With the rapid advance in the production of machines of destruction, it is highly probable that we will again be attacked by a ruthless enemy who will not give us 18 months to train and equip our forces.

The Communists who are so active in behalf of the anti-poll-tax bill say they want to rid the country of the southern Members of Congress. They accuse us of being domestic Fascists. They accuse us of being feudal barons. They do not tell you who these southern Members of Congress are. If a check were made I think it would be found that over half the southern Members of Congress are sons of tenant farmers, sharecroppers, or small landowners. My father was a tenant farmer and I know that all the Members of the Alabama delegation are sons of people who were considered to be in the low-income group. The Communists are not nearly so anxious to extend voting privileges as they are to replace southern Members with Members of their own ilk. Fortunately for our country, there are not many southerners who would fall for communism, regardless of their economic status.

The sponsors of the bill make the appeal that we must pass it now to show that we are for the Atlantic Charter and to prevent some of our allies from withdrawing from the war. Could any intelligent American fall for this tripe? Every sane person knows the reason China is fighting is to protect her own homeland, not ours; every sane person knows that Russia is fighting to protect her homeland, not ours; every sane person knows that Great Britain is fighting to protect her vast empire, not ours. We seem to be the only member of the United Nations who is fighting for the interest of others, but I have an idea that we would not be in the fight if we had not been attacked by the ruthless Japs and I still believe that we are fighting to protect our own homeland and to preserve our way of life instead of attempting to force our system of government on the other nations of the world. I do not object to being called a chauvinist for thinking my country is the greatest Nation on earth.

Failure to pass the anti-poll-tax bill will not make Stalin want to stop resistance and leave the Germans in possession of some of the richest land on the face of the globe. It will not cause the British to sue for a separate peace The gallant Chinese are just as anxious to annihilate the Japs as we are. I doubt if failure to pass the bill will cause Gandhi to go on another hunger strike.

Every organization, every leader in America, is urging unity on the home front. Are we bringing about unity by terming 15,000,000 people in the South traitors? Some day some smart politician will come to realize that there are 120,000,000 white people in this country. He will organize a political party composed only of whites, and some of you today would be scared out of your political hides if you know how many followers he could muster. I hope we never see the day in this great country of ours when anyone will be mistreated because of his race, color, or creed, but such action is not at all improbable. There are millions of Americans who do not want to see this country mongrelized. When we attempt to force an employer to employ a person against his will, we are treading on dangerous grounds. Sooner or later there will be so much resentment of this invasion of rights that serious trouble will ensue.

The unconstitutionality of this measure was very ably pointed out in a brief by Hon. Abraham P. Staples, attorney general of Virginia, and placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by Senator BYRD on September 22, 1942.

Our founding fathers in their wisdom saw fit to reserve all powers, not specifically granted to the Federal Government to the several States. They delegated to the Federal Government the duty to defend the Nation; to coin money and regulate the value thereof; to conduct relations with foreign governments; to regulate commerce between the several States and foreign governments. They reserved to the States self-government in domestic matters, for they feared control from the Federal Government.

Our courts have recognized for over 100 years the rights of States to fix electoral qualifications for all officers, national as well as local. Until a few years ago the Congress has recognized this right, for when any change in suffrage has been attempted, it has been done by submitting a constitutional amendment.

If we can repeal the poll tax as a requirement for voting, we can also invade the rights of the States to fix qualifications of voters, and can abolish by an act of Congress all the State laws requiring registration of voters. We could also establish voting qualifications by Federal statute. We could provide that any person who was a property owner could not exercise the right to vote; we could provide that a member of a labor organization could not vote; we could provide that only men with college educations could vote. Sooner or later this procedure could result in complete Federal control of all our States.

Some States have provisions in their constitutions prohibiting paupers from voting. If this bill is constitutional, we could change this limitation by Federal statute.

Representation in Congress is based on population. Representation in the New York Legislature is based on citizenship. If this bill is constitutional, we could say to New York that it must base its representation in the legislature on population, thereby giving New York City firm control over the legislature.

Some Western States prohibit Asiatics from voting. Today there is a strong movement to break down all our immigration laws and let all the peoples in the earth come to our fair land. If the States are not given the full control over their elections, we might awaken some day and find our Congress controlled by aliens.

There is no denying the fact that this measure would never have reached the floor of the House if it had not been for the two major political parties playing for votes. There is a petition on the Clerk's desk to bring to the floor a bill that will pay to our old people a mere pittance to keep them from hunger. This bill would help thousands of Negroes throughout the Nation. Have you seen a parade of Members to sign this petition? No! But, if it would help in a political way instead of a humane way, the Sergeant-at-Arms would have difficulty preventing a stampede of would-be signers. I make the prediction that both major parties will be left at the switch if this bill passes and that the Communist Party will take the ball from here out.

If you want to destroy private enterprise, if you want to turn our country over to those who openly admit they hate everything American, if you want to open the gates to all the peoples of the earth and destroy our immigration laws, if you want to destroy our Republic, if you want every heartbeat controlled from Washington, vote for this bill.

On the other hand, if you still believe in the principles of States' rights, if you still believe that our country is the greatest Nation on earth, if you still believe a republic is the best form of government, vote against the bill.

Our military forces will win this struggle, but we hope that our boys will not return home to find that we have lost the war on the home front. Will you preserve by your vote what our boys are trying to preserve with their lives?

I appeal to you as a lover of America to vote for the best interests of our country. If we can keep unity on the home front, our goal, complete victory, will surely be ours.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, the resolution for which the pending motion blasts the way might well be entitled "A resolution to invite the Members of Congress to forget their oaths of office; and to prevent the Senate from functioning as a legislative body for an indefinite time, possibly months, in this most critical period of our Nation's history, when the highest duty of Congress and every citizen is to make every moment count toward the furtherance of our war effort."

These are solemn words, but as God is my witness, I believe them to be literally true. I invite your attention to this resolution from those two aspects. It is indisputably unconstitutional. This last fortress of States' rights, the control of the ballot, is the only vestige left of the original pattern of States' rights.

Once upon a time there was in our fair land an omnipotent queen—the States. The whole empire of sovereignty was hers. But in her wisdom she felt the need of a prince consort who could fight her battles, protect, defend, and guard her from foreign foes, and serve her constituents in those manly ways ill-befitting a queen. So she created such a prince, joined him to herself by sacred vows in holy wedlock, made him king in the sphere she had allotted him, and with him shared her throne. By their vows he was to be supreme in the field of power she delegated him, she in all else. It was to be a perfect partnership.

He had his scepter—the Army and Navy. She had hers—the army of her intelligent, virtuous voters selected by her.

From time to time, as desirability became apparent, she gave him more and more of her power. He kept all of his and ever exercised more.

In spite of the beneficence of his queen, he became jealous of her scepter. He never asked her to surrender it to him. This he might have done, for it was an important part of their agreement that he might propose any amendment of the constitution of the government at any time. His yearning for his queen's scepter grew out of the knowledge that without her scepter she would be but his chattel. The more clearly he came to realize this the more desirable it seemed. But he never once proposed, in the agreed way, that she give it him Now, however, this king of her creation, this beneficiary of her generosity, is trying to take her scepter by force.

The defeat of this effort to deprive our queen of her scepter is the only hope left for American democracy. It is the only chance of preserving the dual system of government which the States created when they wrote their constitution. The bill about to be brought to the floor is a clear threat of invasion of the rights of every State, not simply of the seven or eight States that have the poll tax as a condition precedent to voting, but of the four other States that have the poll tax without such a condition. If the Federal Government can overstep the bounds, if we as Members of Congress can violate our oath of office to uphold the Constitution, there is absolutely nothing which cannot be done here in Washington to draw all power here, and emasculate the power of every State.

Read the excellent article by Mark Sullivan in this morning's Washington Post.

But in the immediate future the pressure for the passage of this bill will deprive our Nation of its Senate.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS], who has just addressed you, implies that gentlemen in the other Chamber may filibuster to prevent the passage of this bill in the event that we fearlessly and courageously adopt this rule and finally adopt the measure. If the gentlemen on the other side of the Capitol wish to filibuster and fail to invoke cloture, the crime is at their door and not ours.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Just a moment, please.

I am one of those who feel, after mature study, that this act will be declared constitutional by the Supreme Court. I urge those who wish to study the question further to peruse the most recent decision on the subject of elections and primaries issued by the Supreme Court of the United States, United States against Classic, volume 313, United States Reports, page 311. That case holds that there are limits beyond which States' rights cannot go. The implications and reasoning of that decision are that States' rights cannot be stretched so far as to disenfranchise millions. There are National or Federal rights, too. Is it fair that New York, New Jersey, and California be legislated for—their national interests administrated by Representatives and Senators elected by undemocratic franchise? If States like Mississippi, Alabama, Tennessee, and Texas go too far, as they do with poll taxes, and disenfranchise vast segments of our people by unfair, unjust exactions, the Congress must step in and interfere. The Federal power must step in to protect a "republican form of government" as guaranteed by the Constitution.

If a State can impose a poll tax of $1 or $2 as a condition precedent to voting, then indeed a State could impose a tax of $1,000 or $10,000. There must be some limitation, runs the ruling in this Supreme Court case of United States against Classic, with the majority decision written by Chief Justice Stone.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. In just a moment.

As a matter of fact, in one of the poll-tax States the cumulative tax runs as high as $47.47. If the State can go to any extremes, as the advocates of poll taxes say, then a State could say one could not vote because the prospective voter did not go to church every Sunday; could say, "You cannot vote unless you give proof that you paid all your private debts." "You cannot vote unless you wear a red necktie." Any kind of arbitrary standard could be laid down as a prerequisite to vote. The Classic case overrules the famous Newberry decision. It gives us plenary powers to act to prevent fraud and corruption and unjust exactions in primaries as well as in general elections.

Chief Justice Stone holds that by section 4 of article I of the Constitution we have ample authority to act. The section 4 reads:

> The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

The words "manner of holding elections," according to the reasoning of the Chief Justice, go far and affect not only the periphery but also the core of the subject matter of elections.

He says not only does said section 4 of article I authorize the "manner of holding elections, but article I, section 8, clause 18, gives Congress power "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers," and so forth. "This leaves to the Congress the choice of means by which its constitutional powers are to be carried into execution.

I maintain the pending measure is an authorized "means" of carrying out the right of Congress to regulate the "manner" of electing Members of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER].

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I had no letter from John Lewis. I did not hear from Earl Browder. Nor did I have a letter from Eleanor Roosevelt in support of this measure. I say this in reply to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER]. However, I received hundreds of letters, from organizations and individuals everywhere in support of this measure.

As was stated by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], this comes before you as petition No. 7, introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO]. He presented a bill similar to five other bills introduced. Four of the Members who introduced like bills, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], the gentleman from New York [Mr. BALDWIN], the gentleman from New York [Mr GAVAGAN], and myself, joined together and agreed on a course of action. This bill comes before you as a result of that coalition.

I had among others a communication signed by 250 clergymen from almost every State in the Union. Among these names are the following: Rev. H. P. Almon Abbott, bishop of Lexington—Episcopal—Lexington, Ky.; Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, of New York City; Rev. Wilbur C. Allen, Ebenezer Presbyterian Church, Kimball, W. Va.; Rev. Benjamin V. Andrews, Presbyterian, Indianapolis, Ind.; Rev. Eugene M. Austin, Tioga Baptist Church, Philadelphia, Pa.; Rev. Sam H. Franklin, Jr., Presbyterian, Cruger, Miss.; Rev. Edward G. Ernst, Congregational Church, Troy, N. Y.; Rev. L. E. Grubaugh, superintendent, Colorado Congregational-Christian Conference, Denver, Colo.; Bishop Francis J. McConnell, the Methodist Church, New York, N. Y.; Rev. John Paul Pack, Disciples of Christ, Chattanooga, Tenn.; Rev. F. E. Reissig, Washington Federation of Churches, Washington, D. C.; Rev. D. F. Putman, Lutheran, Gettysburg, Pa.; Rev. S. D. Press, Evangelical and Reformed, St. Louis, Mo.; Rev. Robert Murray Pratt, Unitarian, Quincy, Ill.; Rev. J. Barnard Walton, Society of Friends, Philadelphia, Pa.; Rev. O. M. Walton, Cleveland Church Federation; and several hundred others.

Mr. Speaker, there is one issue before the Nation today—to win the war in which we are engaged with the utmost speed.

The American people are for every step that will win the war and that will strengthen our national morale.

The existence of any restriction on the suffrage or on the exercise of any democratic right cannot but materially weaken the will of the American people to fight this war. For it is democracy, the right of freemen to select their own form of government and their representatives, for which we are fighting. Donald Nelson, prior to the elections of last November, urged every worker to go to the polls, because, he said, "The right to vote is what this war is all about."

The Federal Government has the duty, the responsibility, and the power to protect the Federal franchise. At no time in our history has it been more important than today that the Congress protect the purity of the ballot and guarantee the free democratic right of every citizen to vote. Last year we enacted legislation to permit our citizens in the armed forces to vote. Many people today urge that we enact legislation to permit 18-year-olds to vote.

How can we deny to millions of our own citizens at home a free ballot when we are asking them to give their lives for the defense of this Congress, this country, and our free institutions?

I urge the House to adopt the motion before it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired, all time has expired.

The question is on the motion to discharge the committee from further consideration of House resolution 131.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MAGNUSON) there were—ayes 183, noes 83.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAGNUSON. This roll call is on the adoption——

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington is propounding a parliamentary inquiry, he said, and the Chair has to pass on that after he propounds the inquiry.

The gentleman from Washington will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MAGNUSON. My inquiry is whether or not this roll call is on the motion to discharge or on the resolution proper.

The SPEAKER. It is on the motion to discharge.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 268, nays 110, answered "present" 1, not voting 53, as follows:

Mr. Boykin with Mr. Kilburn.

Mr. Disney with Mr. O'Brien of New York.

Mr. Hendricks with Mr. Treadway.

Mr. Russell with Mr. Cole of New York.

Mr. Elliott with Mr. Welch.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Speaker, I had a pair with the gentleman from New York, Mr. CAPOZZOLI, who if present would have voted "aye." I therefore withdraw my vote of "no" and vote "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the question recurs on agreeing to the resolution which the Clerk will report:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That upon the day succeeding the adoption of this resolution, a special order be, and is hereby, created by the House of Representatives for the consideration of H. R. 7, a public bill which has remained in the Committee on the Judiciary for 30 or more days without action. That such special order be, and is hereby, created, notwithstanding any further action on said bill by the Committee on the Judiciary, or any rule of the House. That on said day the Speaker shall recognize the Representative from Washington, WARREN G. MAGNUSON, to call up H. R. 7, a bill making unlawful the requirement for the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite to voting in a primary or other election for national officers, as a special order of business, and to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of said H. R. 7. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the Member of the House requesting the rule for the consideration of said H. R. 7 and the Member of the House who is opposed to the said H. R. 7, to be designated by the Speaker, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill, and the amendments thereto, to final passage, without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit. The special order shall be a continuing order until the bill is finally disposed of.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, this roll call now is on House Resolution 131; is that correct?

The SPEAKER. Yes; the resolution just read.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 265, nays 105, answered "present" 1, not voting 61, as follows:

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Speaker, I have a general pair with the gentleman from New York, Mr. CAPOZZOLI. Had he been here he would have voted "aye." I voted "no." I withdraw my vote and vote "present."

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, how am I recorded?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recorded as not voting. Was the gentleman in the Hall?

Mr. DINGELL. I was in the telephone booth and listening.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman was not in the Hall and failed to hear his name called?

Mr. DINGELL. I was in the cloakroom. Is not that a part of the Hall?

The SPEAKER. No; that is not a part of the Chamber. The gentleman does not qualify.

The result of the vote was announced, as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. EATON, for 24 hours, on account of official business.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks in the RECORD on the resolution just adopted.

Mr. RANKIN. I object, Mr. Speaker.

PERMISSION TO COMMITTEE TO SIT DURING SESSIONS OF HOUSE

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the committee established pursuant to Resolution 98 be permitted to sit while the House is in session throughout the week.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask what committee is referred to?

Mr. BOREN. The committee established under House Resolution 98.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What was the request?

Mr. BOREN. I ask unanimous consent that the committee may sit throughout this week, during the general debates, when the House is in session.

The SPEAKER. The request is made only for the period of general debate?

Mr. BOREN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The SPEAKER. This is District of Columbia Day. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

EMPLOYMENT OF FEMALES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 777) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the hours of employment and safeguard the health of females employed in the District of Columbia," approved February 24, 1914, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, lines 9 and 10, and page 2, line 1, strike out "existence of the present war in which the United States is engaged and 6 months thereafter" and insert "period ending June 30, 1945, or such earlier date as the Congress by concurrent resolution may determine."

Page 2, line 7, strike out "or more than 6 days."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 2115) to amend the District of Columbia Unemployment Compensation Act to provide for unemployment compensation in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 6, line 3, strike out "effective January 1, 1936."

Page 6, line 9, strike out all after "individual" down to and including "legislation" in line 12.

Page 6, line 14, strike out "an" and insert "any other."

Page 44, line 3, strike out "an" and insert "any other."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. EBERHARTER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the gentleman from West Virginia tell us something about this measure.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I am delighted to have the gentleman from Pennsylvania ask about this legislation, because it is of great importance to the District of Columbia that the bill be passed.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania and other Members will recall that this measure passed the House several weeks ago by a unanimous vote. It passed the Senate last week by a unanimous vote. In the Senate four amendments were added. They are found on pages 6 and 44 of the House bill.

The first amendment would strike the words "effective January 1, 1936," from the bill; in other words, under the House measure we would have made the contribution period retroactive for 7 years. The Senate felt that that was unnecessary because it went to a provision of the bill which had to do with certain organizations that were charitable, religious, scientific, literary, and educational.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Under the bill as it passed the House, these institutions and business concerns would have gotten credit for all the money they paid in since 1936?

Mr. RANDOLPH. It would have made the provision retroactive; that is, the contribution requirement.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The contribution to the unemployment compensation fund?

Mr. RANDOLPH. No, not the contribution to the unemployment compensation fund.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The contribution to which fund?

Mr. RANDOLPH. It would have moved back the period of contribution to 1936 of the organizations I have outlined.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. It refers only, of course, to the definition of employment. In that definition of employment we carried, for instance, the inclusion of those who work for charitable, religious, scientific, and philanthropic organizations. That is the only place where this amendment applies. We had not collected from them before. Why that particular date was put in there I do not know; as a matter of fact, I never did find out. I think it was inserted in the House bill in the first instance only to satisfy the corporation counsel. The Senate, however, went into it far more thoroughly than we did and they could find no particular reason for having that date in that paragraph of the bill. It does not relate to taxes, however, but a definition of employment that comes within the purview of the bill.

Mr. EBERHARTER. In other words, we have the gentleman's assurance that it does not have anything to do with the contributions already made to the compensation fund?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Absolutely; it has nothing to do with those contributions.

Mr. RANDOLPH. That is right, although I do want to say in further response to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that in some instances certain amounts, small, to be sure, have been paid in by such institutions as are referred to in this section of the bill but have been returned.

The second amendment that was made by the Senate is in the same paragraph (g). These words carried in the House bill, "No substantial part of the activities of which is carrying on propaganda or otherwise attempting to influence legislation," were stricken by the Senate. The minority and majority Members have discussed the matter, and believe we can readily accept the Senate provision because, after all, where can we draw the line when a literary, scientific, or religious organization is interested, and properly so, in legislation pending before this body?

The third amendment would simply insert the two words "any other" so that the phrase would read "any other employment." It is simply a perfecting amendment. I may say that it is also found on page 44.

I appreciate the gentleman's inquiry.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The main purpose of this bill is to reduce the amount of contribution by employers to the unemployment compensation fund, is that correct?

Mr. RANDOLPH. That is one of the main provisions.

Mr. EBERHARTER. How much does it reduce the employer's contribution to the unemployment compensation fund, by what percentage?

Mr. RANDOLPH. It will approximate a saving of $3,500,000 to $4,000,000 a year.

I know the gentleman's interest in this legislation and his discussion of its provisions when it was on the House floor earlier. May I also call to his attention that we are stepping up the rate of payment to the unemployed in the District of Columbia as well as reducing the amount of contribution by the employer. We are also including a provision whereby the law will act more quickly than it has in the past.

We have at the present time a surplus of approximately $34,000,000 in the unemployment compensation fund of the District. We feel that that is top-heavy, that it is tying up funds that should be used for the legitimate purposes of business. By and large, we find not only the employers but the employees of the District of Columbia, with certain exceptions, to be sure, favorable to this legislation. The merit rating, a feature embodied in the bill, has been adopted, and successfully so, in approximately 35 States of the Union.

Mr. EBERHARTER. How much does it reduce the contribution by the employer? Does it reduce it from 2 percent to one-half of 1 percent?

Mr. DIRKSEN. No. It is put on an automatic basis, depending on the amount that the employer will have in the fund. Every employer has to have so much in the fund to maintain its solvency. When he has a percentage of that amount in the fund, then of course his payment goes automatically down until it can get as low as one-tenth of 1 percent. Normally, however, he must pay more whenever the residual amount in that reserve fund is below a certain safe line that has been determined under this formula. So the thing works out automatically under this experience formula.

Mr. EBERHARTER. In other words, the employer that has a steady pay roll and does not have seasonal employment gets a great advantage under this bill?

Mr. DIRKSEN. It is meant to stabilize employment and create an incentive for stabilizing employment.

Mr. EBERHARTER. But it does not stabilize insofar as the employer who has seasonal activities is concerned. He is penalized at the expense of the person who happens to have the type of business that can keep the same number of employees all the time.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yet oddly enough, those who are engaged in seasonal employment in the District were among the first to come up and put their support behind this bill.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I know that was not true a couple of years ago.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That was true this time.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The gentleman says that the representatives of the employees are in favor of this legislation.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I said with certain exceptions. We did have testimony against the bill in the House hearings, and also in the Senate hearings, but I point out that the legislation was reported unanimously from the House committee before being brought to the floor, and unanimously also by the Senate committee before it was brought before that body, even after certain objections had been raised. I come back for a moment to the matter of the progressive payments. The contribution by the employer ranges from a top 2.7 percent to one-tenth of 1 percent, and that feature of the measure was gone into very thoroughly, and it was believed that it is equitable. I say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER] that I know his interest in this legislation from the standpoint of a proper reserve fund for the employees, and yet we must realize that the conditions within the District of Columbia are not as they are in other States, particularly perhaps in the State of Pennsylvania, because from time to time, by and large, we have the same employment in Washington year in and year out, in peacetime and under the impact of war, and that is different from the situation in other States, particularly, perhaps, the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Will the gentleman tell me what representatives were before the committee objecting to this? Who appeared in opposition to this measure, and what organizations did they represent?

Mr. RANDOLPH. They represented certain groups within both the C. I. O. and the A. F. of L.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Certainly.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. The important feature of this bill is that it does away with the tremendous revenue each year from the pay rolls, which in 1942 amounted to over $8,000,000, with an expenditure of only $1,157,000. There is a surplus of $34,000,000 in the fund today, and at the end of this year it will be over $40,000,000. With a collection of $8,000,000 and an expenditure of $1,150,000, obviously something should be done about it this year.

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. While there were certain groups that objected to this bill, the majority of the workers involved are well satisfied with it.

Mr. RANDOLPH. That is correct, and I want to make that plain to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that there were certain groups within the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O., who objected. We made a very careful canvass, and we were interested in the employee as well as the employer.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Would the gentleman be willing to let this go over for a little while? This is important legislation.

Mr. DIRKSEN. These are only clarifying amendments. There is no reason to go to further conference. If we did, we would only come back with the same report, and it will be privileged. I see no reason why there should be delay.

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. And ought it not to be explained also, to those who are interested in the rights of labor, that this legislation increases the benefit payments to labor?

Mr. RANDOLPH. It does.

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. And increases the period during which they can receive compensation.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON of New Mexico. And it does everything that labor wants to have done.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes. The gentleman is correct. I sincerely hope that the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not insist upon delaying the matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PAYMENTS UNDER NONMINERAL LEASES OF PUBLIC LANDS, ALASKA

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 328) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior, because of military operations, to defer or waive payments under nonmineral leases of public lands in Alaska, with a Senate amendment thereto and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 7, strike out "during the present national emergency" and insert "occurring prior to the end of 6 months after the termination of hostilities in the present war as proclaimed by the President, or such earlier date as the Congress by concurrent resolution may prescribe."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WAR DEPARTMENT CIVIL FUNCTIONS APPROPRIATION BILL, 1944—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill (H. R. 2346) making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2346) "making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 4, 5, and 6, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "and, in addition, $3,000,000 of the unobligated balance on June 30, 1943, of the appropriation 'Maintenance and improvement of existing river and harbor works', is hereby made available for the execution of detailed investigations and the preparation of plans and specifications for projects heretofore or hereafter authorized"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "and, in addition, $3,000,000 of the unobligated balance on June 30, 1943, of the appropriation 'Flood control, general', is hereby made available for the preparation of detailed plans and specifications of authorized flood control projects, and for rescue work or the repair or maintenance of any flood-control work threatened or destroyed by flood, pursuant to section 5 of the Flood Control Act, approved August 18, 1941, for reimbursement to the city of Hartford, Connecticut, as authorized by the Flood Control Act, approved August 18, 1941, and for construction of the flood-control projects heretofore authorized for the Mermentau River, Bayou Teche, and Vermilion River, Louisiana,"; and the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2346) making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

Amendment No. 1: Appropriates $1,230,058, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $605,643, as proposed by the House, for "Cemeterial expenses."

Amendment No. 2: Makes available $3,000,000 of the unobligated balance on June 30, 1943, of the appropriation "Maintenance and improvement of existing river and harbor works," for detailed investigations and the preparation of plans and specifications for river and harbor projects heretofore or hereafter authorized, instead of $2,000,000 for such purposes, as proposed by the House, and such an amount as the Secretary of War might determine to be necessary, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 3: Makes available $3,000,000 of the unobligated balance on June 30, 1943, of the appropriation "Flood control, general," for (1) detailed plans and specifications of authorized flood-control projects; (2) for rescue work or the repair or maintenance of any flood-control work threatened or destroyed by flood, pursuant to section 5 of the Flood Control Act, approved August 18, 1941; (3) for reimbursement to the city of Hartford, Conn., as authorized by such Flood Control Act; and (4) for construction of the flood-control projects heretofore authorized for the Mermentau River, Bayou Teche, and Vermilion River, La. The House proposed the amount of $2,400,000 for projects 1 and 2, and the Senate proposed projects 3 and 4 and such an amount as the Secretary of War might determine to be necessary for all four projects.

Amendments Nos. 4 and 5: Makes a transposition of an amount.

Amendment No. 6: Makes a reappropriation in connection with the Sacramento River flood-control project of the appropriation "Flood control, general," as proposed by the Senate, instead of the appropriation "Maintenance and improvement of existing river and harbor works," as proposed by the House.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield first to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Speaker, the bill now before us is the kind of legislation to which, in my opinion, we should be giving our time and attention, today, rather than to bills which no one expects to become law at this time.

Now, I am not in favor of poll taxes. I shall vote for passage of the anti-poll-tax bill when it comes up for passage tomorrow under the rule adopted today. I have voted for similar legislation on previous occasions. I did think, however, that when we have a big war on our hands, and when we have such problems as those created by the gigantic flood in the Missouri and Mississippi Valleys that we might use our time better than by arguing over a bill which can only stir up race feeling and will not become law at this time. The House is on record on the subject of poll taxes; nothing is gained by going over the subject again, until there is a prospect of passage in the other body.

We have here, however, a bill that deals with the civil functions of the War Department, embracing appropriations for emergency river work as well as flood control generally. Today's papers report that millions of acres of farm lands are under water or are threatened with inundation, and that thousands of people are homeless. And very recently we had a flood higher up, in the main valley of the Missouri river, that caused great damage. This would be an appropriate time for a thoroughgoing review of our river and flood work. We should be studying the comparative effectiveness of various forms of flood control.

The battling of floods is important to the war effort, itself. Every acre of farm land that is washed out now means reducing the food harvest next fall. Much of the land will be ruined not only for this season but for many seasons, gouging and washing on the one hand, deposits of sand and gravel on the other. Every industrial plant that is cut off from power, every mine that is flooded, reduces the production of metals and machines needed for victory.

It would appear today, Mr. Speaker, that the building of levees in the long run, often has worked against solving the very problem to meet which they are designed. When levees are built and channels are straightened, the velocity of the water increases. While true that levees are the quickest way to meet one flood, over a period of time, the real solution seems to be the construction of flood-control reservoirs; and in my opinion, the best way to get the greatest return on the money expended, is to put the stored water to beneficial use by the construction of multiple-purpose reservoirs. Then we harness the floodwaters and make the forces of destruction become agents of good.

A month ago I visited a town in my district, Fort Pierre, where the Missouri's unexpected flood had put 3 feet of water into the electric-power plant and endangered the city's water supply. Fortunately the town escaped without an epidemic but the peril was there. The Army's division engineer, the regional engineer for the reclamation service, and the Governor of the State participated in that inspection. We also looked at lands that only need water to produce tremendous crops. I do not want to anticipate the recommendations of the engineers, but I think it is in order to say that all of us were impressed by the desirability of eliminating floods by upstream reservoirs that would put the water to beneficial use.

The people of the Middle West and Northwest have their minds on these problems, Mr. Speaker. Last Friday in Omaha, delegates from 8 States formed a permanent organization to cooperate with other bodies and to coordinate the activities of individuals working for a permanent and statesmanlike solution of the flood problems on the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers. From time to time, you will hear of their work.

Next week the House Committee on Flood Control will conduct hearings on this subject. I urge Members generally to attend. These floods on the principal inland waterways and river valleys in the heart of the continent constitute a national problem.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, the statement of the conferees is sufficient explanation of the matter, and I move the previous question.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. With respect to amendment No. 3, the conferees have agreed substantially on the language as it was carried in the House bill, except that the amount of $2,400,000 has been increased to $3,000,000.

Mr. SNYDER. That is correct.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. To provide for reimbursing the city of Hartford, Conn., and to provide for the initiation of some projects in Louisiana.

Mr. SNYDER. Yes; made necessary by the war effort.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. My question is this: By the substitution of $3,000,000 for $2,400,000 carried in the House bill, it is not contemplated that any of the funds made available in the House bill for rescue and emergency work under section 5 would be reduced?

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The full amount carried in the House bill would be available for that purpose?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I think that is very important in view of the threat of floods now in the Midwest.

Mr. SNYDER. That will be taken care of in a similar way.

I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS].

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, it is being brought home to us in the most cruel and costly way that the weather is indeed a treacherous ally. Right at the time when we must exceed all previous agricultural production records by a large margin if our own people and those of our allies dependent upon us are not to suffer actual want, we are experiencing widespread and devastating floods which inevitably are destroying a serious percentage of production in the great Middle West, the very heart of American agriculture.

Millions of acres of our richest farm lands are under water and tremendous acreage of early crops is totally destroyed. The farmers may still get to their land to plant the later crops, but at very best such important crops as corn cannot be expected to return a normal yield. Even if the farmers manage to get their corn in the ground soon, the crop is going to be a month or more late, and must depend upon ideal weather much later into the fall than usual to produce something near normal returns.

The devastation is by no means, of course, falling only upon agriculture. It just happens that the damage to farm production is the most serious because it is irreparable. The damage and loss to industrial production, transportation and communication facilities, and the suffering which the people are sustaining generally is certainly most critical. We can work without regard to the seasons, in restoring these losses, but when a planting and growing season passes, it is gone forever.

My own State of Indiana, and the district which I represent are suffering most seriously. The Wabash and White Rivers and their tributaries are ravaging great expanses of land as productive as any in the world.

Nature is beyond our power to predict and control, even though the frontier planners, who for 10 years have tried to order and regulate American agriculture, may not yet be ready to admit it. Much more could have been done, however, to minimize the losses. If the money which has been wasted by this administration for a thousand and one kinds of boondoggling, social experimentation and planless planning had been used to forestall just this sort of a disaster, countless lives and an inestimable amount of property and potential production could very well have been saved.

I made persistent efforts during those wasteful years to promote the flood control work in my district which has long been acknowledged as necessary and desirable.

I offered a bill, which was promptly enacted, authorizing urgently needed work on the Wabash River and its principal tributary in my district, the Mississinewa. Year after year these rivers and the small streams which feed them overflow that fertile valley. Even though the damage is usually localized, it is recurrent and it is serious. In bad years such as this, the devastation is widespread.

The shame is that the loss in ordinary years could be almost wholly prevented and the terrible damage in such extreme instances as this could be greatly reduced at such comparatively small expense. It is principally just an ordinary project of channel dredging and straightening at the outset, and a modest job of maintenance thereafter. Unlike so many projects undertaken in recent years, it is one which would have paid large annual dividends indefinitely.

My proposal, along with numerous other equally worthy flood projects, was approved long ago by Congress but, unfortunately, it has been tied up in surveys and administrative red tape.

It may do little good now to criticize the ineptitude and shortsightedness which squandered billions on all kinds of cloud-walking schemes and neglected the practical, constructive work that cried to be done. I fervently hope, however, that the lessons of this crisis will remain with us, and that we will keep high on the calendar of work which must be done a comprehensive program of flood control and protection which will make these terribly costly disasters impossible.

I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES].

STORAGE RESERVOIRS ARE NEEDED FOR FLOOD CONTROL—LEVEES AND FLOODWAYS ARE NOT ENOUGH

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, once more disastrous floods have demonstrated that levees and floodways are not enough to guarantee protection against the torrents of unruly rivers. Those safeguards are effective only when they supplement a system of control by storage reservoirs which hold the waters back on main streams and on tributaries until their force can be released with safety and usefully employed.

We have been slow to learn that lesson, although on one river system the effectiveness of such a plan has been proved in practice. On the Tennessee a system of multipurpose dams operated under unified control gives us almost complete protection now and makes feasible erection of the additional protective works required to give total safety to every community. When the plan was outlined by the Congress in 1933 it was opposed by traditionally minded engineers, who put their faith in higher levees, larger floodways. But when T. V. A.'s tenth birthday was recognized last week this system was praised throughout the world. It will not only give protection to the valley of the Tennessee in times of flood, it will hold back the surging waters which would otherwise rush to join Ohio floods and threaten greater desolation on the lower Mississippi. In the flood of 1937 we learned how effective the system on the Tennessee would ultimately be.

That flood resulted almost entirely from high flows on the Ohio River. Paducah was almost inundated by its raging waters. Fortunately, because stream flows on the Mississippi above Cairo, in Illinois, were below normal, as were those on the Arkansas and other rivers below Cairo, the flood on the Mississippi itself was kept within existing main-line levees, although the Birds Point-New Madrid floodway had to be used for the first time. From Cincinnati to Cairo, however, the flood exceeded all previous crests by 10 feet, and at Cairo the entire city was surrounded by water, held back only by the levees which encircle it. At its crest the water topped stretches of the concrete sea wall forming a part of the levee system and was held back from the city only by means of mud boxes hastily erected on top.

At the time the T. V. A. had only two reservoirs in operation, Norris and Wheeler, which had been completed in 1936. Norris, which had the largest reservoir space, was more than 700 river-miles from Cairo. Yet the two dams were operated to reduce the flow of the Tennessee at the time of the flood crest by 32,000 second-feet, lowering the level by 5 to 6 inches, enough to hold the narrow margin of safety provided by the mud boxes improvised to save Cairo.

If the Ohio threatens safety on the lower Mississippi again, the system created by the T. V. A. will be prepared to give a greater measure of protection. For since the 1937 flood, T. V. A. has added about 42,000,000 acre-feet of storage on the Tennessee River system of which about 700,000 acre-feet in Pickwick Landing and Guntersville Reservoirs are in the lower half of the river.

Next year Kentucky Reservoir will make available 4,500,000 acre-feet of additional flood storage and at a strategic location for control on the lower Ohio and Mississippi Rivers. The Kentucky Reservoir alone is capable of reducing flood heights by 2 feet at Cairo, and the benefits will extend downstream two-thirds the distance to New Orleans, or to the mouth of the Red River. Kentucky Reservoir, plus the upstream storage provided by other T. V. A. projects, would enable the T. V. A. to reduce a flood of 1937 proportions by at least 3 feet, probably more. The T. V. A. system of reservoirs will make it possible for the levee systems on the Mississippi to protect some 6,000,000 acres of cultivated land, now jeopardized by every high water flow.

With storage reservoirs upstream, those levees will be effective. They cannot do the job alone. Since 1927 this has been obvious, but change in settled habits comes as hard to engineers as any other profession.

Early in 1928 reports were submitted to Congress by the Mississippi River Commission and the United States Army engineers—after the disastrous flood on the Mississippi which inundated 12,000,000 acres, drove 700,000 people from their homes and caused $220,000,000 damage. Both reports proposed diversion floodways down the west side of the Mississippi River to relieve the main channel from the mouth of the Arkansas River to the Gulf, and the United States Army engineers report suggested an additional floodway from the mouth of the Ohio about 30 miles downstream to lower flood stages at Cairo, Ill.

The Flood Control Act of May 15, 1928, adopted the Jadwin plan, submitted by Maj. Gen. Edgar Jadwin, Chief of Engineers, to construct floodways and raise levees to take care of a 25 percent greater flood than 1927 at an expenditure of $325,000,000. By 1936, all but $53,000,000 of the sum had been appropriated.

Recognizing that these protective measures might be insufficient, section 10 of the Flood Control Act of 1928 directed the Secretary of War, through the Corps of Engineers, to—

> Prepare and submit to Congress * * * projects for flood control on all tributary streams of the Mississippi subject to destructive floods which projects shall include * * * the effect on the subject of further flood control of the lower Mississsippi River through the control of flood waters in the drainage basins of the tributaries by the establishment of a reservoir system.

In response to this provision, the Secretary of War on July 29, 1935, submitted a report—House Document No. 259, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, Comprehensive Report on Reservoirs in Mississippi River Basin—outlining two plans for reservoir systems, one aimed chiefly at protection on the lower Mississippi, the other chiefly at control of the tributaries. The second plan was recommended by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors and by the Chief of Engineers.

The recommended plan based on the conviction that operation of the reservoir system for control of floods on the tributaries would lower the floods on the main stream to controllable levels, proposed 151 reservoirs, including 81 on the Ohio—excluding the Tennessee—14 on the upper Mississippi, 7 on the Missouri, 4 on other tributaries above Cairo, 26 on the Arkansas and White Rivers, 7 on the Yazoo, and 12 on the Red and Ouachita, providing a total of 98,677,900 acre-feet of storage for $1,125,807,000.

The Chief of Engineers reported that "the group of reservoirs on the Arkansas and the White are by far the most effective in controlling the floods on the main stem of the Mississippi."

With that recommendation the Chief of Engineers abandoned the earlier contention that levees and floodways would give adequate protection. The experience on the Tennessee supports that theoretical position. Those vast reservoirs will make complete protection feasible by the addition of a modest expenditure for local protective works. They assure us a constant channel for navigation, and they give us further vast amounts of electric power.

The plan Congress adopted for the Tennessee in 1933 has almost been completed. We know it works. The distinguished engineering staff of T. V. A. are enthusiasts for multipurpose structures. Not much has been accomplished to carry out the plan submitted by the Army engineers. Norfolk Dam, one of the most important recommendations, was authorized in the Flood Control Act of June 1938. According to the annual report of the United States Army engineers for the fiscal year 1941, "the office and garage, access road, and construction railroad are complete. Construction of the dam was 5 percent complete at the end of the year." About 5 percent of the reservoir area—14 tracts—had been purchased. The report estimated that the project will be 59 percent complete at the end of the fiscal year 1943.

Things move more slowly when a labyrinth of contracts and subcontracts must be let, when there is no integrated regional agency to vitalize the program. But we are moving in the right direction when we build storage dams to hold the water in the tributary streams.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DOMENGEAUX.]

Mr. DOMENGEAUX. Mr. Speaker, we have before us a matter of utmost importance to my section of Louisiana and one which also has a very close bearing on the war effort. It is a matter in which the people of my District are looking to their national Government for long-needed relief and their cause is most deserving and just.

I refer to the appropriations asked for the Teche-Vermilion and Mermentau waterway improvement projects in south Louisiana. Efforts have been made for some time to secure the necessary funds for this purpose. Our people have been patient and long-suffering in waiting for these improvements, and they are surely entitled to assistance without further delay. They are deserving of this aid not only for themselves, but because they seek the opportunity to develop properly one of the richest and most productive areas of our Nation; a section which is in a position to contribute much to the food program and other phases of the war effort.

The people of my section are progressive and industrious. They are most patriotic and loyal to their Government. Thousands of their sons and daughters are in military service while the folks at home are lending every aid. Everyone is doing his or her part to help win the war and they will meet every sacrifice asked of them. All they are seeking from their Government is the opportunity to be of still greater assistance and particularly to be given the chance to grow the many crops which that area can produce under favorable conditions.

For the past 50 years, my section of Louisiana has been visited at frequent intervals by floods caused by lack of proper drainage facilities. Several of these floods have been of major proportions, such as those of 1940 and 1941. The United States Department of Agriculture estimates that the 1940 flood alone caused more than $10,000,000 in damages.

These floods are due to the streams becoming clogged by the accumulation of silt, preventing normal drainage. The country is flat, with rich alluvial lands. Because of the stoppage of normal flow, even a comparatively small rainfall, under present conditions, is sufficient to inundate thousands of acres adjacent to these streams. In the flood of 1940, the water ran upstream for some 4 weeks, while fertile farm lands were inundated for 2 months.

The solution to this trouble is the cleaning of these streams, which is a simple matter. The cost is small, in fact, a paltry sum when the great benefits to be derived are considered.

Army engineers estimate the cost of the Teche-Vermilion project at $1,390,000, and the Mermentau at $970,000, or a total of $2,360,000, a fraction of the many millions of dollars in losses incurred by our people through these many years and the probable greater loss that will result in the future unless this situation is remedied.

The area affected by the projects covering improvements for the Vermilion and Mermentau Rivers and Bayou Teche involves all or parts of 12 parishes, having an area of 9,904 square miles and a population of approximately 450,000. It contains more than two and one-quarter million acres of farm lands, and, as previously stated, this area is one of the most productive in the United States.

More than a third of all the rice produced in the United States is grown in the area drained by these streams. My section is also a sugarcane-producing center, growing most of the sugarcane in this country with the exception of production in Florida. It is one of the leading cotton regions, while corn, sweetpotatoes, and vegetable crops are grown on a large scale. The livestock and poultry industries are making great strides. The sea-food industry is extensive and within my district are found the larger number of the world's supply of muskrat furs. Untold mineral, oil, and chemical resources are available.

Steady progress has been made in the development of agriculture and livestock production and in the utilization of the natural resources of this section. However, it is only the beginning of the possibilities that are waiting to be realized. Our people welcome the opportunity to develop this area as they know it can be developed if unhampered by the threat of floods that can so easily be eliminated.

Our citizens, through their own efforts, have done much to improve drainage, but their industry and initiative will be of little avail unless the major problem is solved. Large numbers of drainage districts have been created, and more recently several parishes have voted, or have prepared to vote, large bond issues for parish-wide drainage programs. These bond issues total into the millions of dollars. Despite this readiness to do their part, however, our people hesitate, and rightly so, at spending this money unless the Teche, Vermilion, and Mermentau are improved in order that the necessary outlets can be assured. To spend this money, unless the principal source of the difficulty is removed, would be practically useless.

I have spoken of the agricultural possibilities, and I wish to stress the importance of permitting full production of crops as a means of helping the war effort. I know of no section that can do more to help relieve the food shortage than the one in which the Teche, Vermilion, and Mermentau are located. But production will necessarily be curtailed as long as drainage conditions remain as they are. From this standpoint alone the improvement of these streams is more than justified. But there are other considerations.

Louisiana has many Military Establishments and defense plants, a number of which are situated in the southern part of the State. Adequate transportation facilities are required. Highways must be kept open for moving of troops and equipment and for other military operations. Floods have on several occasions inundated highways of south Louisiana, including U. S. 90—the Old Spanish Trail, transcontinental highway—and the Lafitte Cut-Off, from New Iberia and Lake Charles into Houston, Tex. We all realize the extreme necessity of keeping the highways open for military purposes. We can picture the disaster that might result if military movements by highway are halted in an hour of crisis. If for no other reason than this, the threat of frequently recurring floods and the blocking of these arteries of traffic should and must be eliminated.

Oil production is another important item in national defense. Oil development has been extensive in my area and one of the most productive fields is at Anse la Butte, 8 miles from my home town of Lafayette. During these floods this field, as well as others, has been under water for as long as 3 weeks and in fact these floods have tied up the whole oil industry of that section for long periods.

The major factors to be considered in the Teche-Vermilion and Mermentau projects are their importance to the safety, health, and economic welfare of the people I represent, and the importance of these projects to the war effort. Also worthy of much consideration is the matter of navigation. Improvement of these streams will offer transportation facilities which mean much to the commercial progress of the area. It should also be borne in mind that these facilities could serve, if need be, for military purposes.

Army engineers have made an extensive study of the necessity for these waterway projects and have approved them. It is certain that every cent spent under these appropriations will be spent wisely and well. No investment could yield greater returns and Federal funds could not be spent to better advantage.

The Army engineers advise us that these projects can be completed within a year. They also state that very little critical materials will be required. The work will be largely dredging. A number of dredge boats are already in that vicinity, working on the intracoastal canal, and several others are expected to be sent there this year. Dredge boats of the type necessary for this work are becoming more and more available, and there will be no difficulty in getting the equipment as soon as funds for the projects are available.

The Chief of Engineers recommended more than 2 years ago that these improvements be made. At the present time there is an unobligated balance of existing appropriations heretofore made for flood control, general, of some $36,000,000. The War Department and the Office of the Chief of Engineers approve the use of $2,360,000 of that amount for these improvements, along the lines of the original recommendations. In other words, these vital improvements will not involve the appropriating of new money, but only the use of a small portion of the unobligated balance of the flood-control funds.

When we consider the matter of national defense, the needs of the people of this rich and productive area, and the numerous other factors involved, there can be no doubt of the wisdom, necessity and justice of providing these improvements. The finest food area of America is being jeopardized for lack of the expenditure of an insignificant sum.

My people are entitled to these improvements and the Nations is entitled to the gains that will result from opening the way to full development of this outstanding section, abundant in beauty and tradition as well as in resources; a land famed for its friendly and hospitable citizens; truly a garden spot, offering the best in life to all who are privileged to share in its wealth of possessions.

Our cause is most worthy; our appeal most urgent. I am confident my colleagues appreciate the need and will meet the situation by approving these projects. In so doing they will receive the heartfelt thanks of an appreciative people and the reward of knowing they have faithfully and conscientiously performed their duty.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MOUNT VERNON, ALEXANDRIA & WASHINGTON RAILWAY CO., A CORPORATION

Mr. McGEHEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. EXTENSION OF REMARKS

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BURCH].

Mr. BURCH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include therein a letter written by me to the Postmaster General and a reply to the same, in reference to the Postal Service personnel.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

(Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CRAVENS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] may extend his own remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Mark Sullivan appearing in this morning's Washington Post.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the State of Michigan Chronicle.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 30 seconds.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, just because we sometimes forget, may I further remind those who have sons or daughters in the service that we are trying to meet this afternoon at half past 4 in the room downstairs opposite the barber shop.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article written by E. R. Ziff, as published in the Washington Daily News.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

O. P. A. AND DAIRY PRODUCTS

Mr. COMPTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COMPTON. Mr. Speaker, the newspapers this morning are full of more dire predictions by the O. P. A. Such phrases as "our indicated short supply of milk" and "our limited supply of milk" and the extension of cheese rationing are evidently meant to prepare us for rationing of milk throughout the country. And yet, Mr. Speaker, this same O. P. A. has so disturbed, by directives and interferences, the milk market in New England that it has already put out of business 7 percent of the milk producers of that area.

Why the O. P. A. is so intent on bringing about conditions throughout the Nation and certainly in New England to so curtail milk production as to make rationing necessary is beyond my comprehension. This is one of the questions that could be settled to the satisfaction of the people generally and certainly of this Congress if my resolution, No. 238, now in the Rules Committee, for an investigation of O. P. A. could be reported out and approved by this body. I strongly urge every Member here to prevail upon the Rules Committee to begin hearings at once on my resolution.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article published in the New Orleans Picayune regarding the Teche-Vermilion-Mermentau flood-control project.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. NEWSOME. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include two short resolutions from the Alabama Federation of Women's Clubs.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

(Mr. KEFAUVER asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. GATHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter from a soldier.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD on the subject of merchant marine personnel and to include therein a statement by the President of the United States, certain quotations pertinent to the subject, and certain editorials.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein a letter from Governor Black of the Farm Credit Administration.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ROWE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from a newspaper in my city.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DEWEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the four-hundreth anniversary of the death of Nicholas Copernicus, the great Polish genius.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include a radio address I recently made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNETT of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENNETT]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUSBEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include an editorial by Frank Waldrop appearing in this morning's Times-Herald.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUSBEY]?

There was no objection.

(Mr. HOEVEN asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.)

Mr. MERROW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend by own remarks in the RECORD and to include a joint resolution on the United Nations of the World, adopted by the Legislature of the State of New Hampshire.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. MERROW]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include therein two editorials.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SMITH]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today after all other special orders have been concluded, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRADLEY]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an address I made to the women of the county and city of New York on Saturday, and I also ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial taken from the Washington Post.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY]?

There was no objection.

THE LATE MRS. ALLEN T. TREADWAY

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to violate any of the traditions of this House, nor to establish any new precedent, but I think that when the wife of the dean of the minority of this House lies dead in the city it ill becomes us not to express to him as Members of the House our sympathy in his bereavement.

So, unrequested and on my own responsibility, I say to you, ALLEN TREADWAY, the membership of the House extends to you and yours in your bereavement its heartfelt sympathy.

That loss is common would not make
My own less bitter, rather more:
Too common! Never morning wore
To evening, but some heart did break.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the other special orders for today I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN]?

There was no objection.

JOINT CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE TO ATTEND SESSIONS OF INTERNATIONAL FOOD CONFERENCE AT HOT SPRINGS, VA.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, 10 days ago I was assured by the gentleman from Illinois, Chairman SABATH, of the Rules Committee, that he would call a meeting of the committee last Monday or Tuesday to consider the Bradley resolution (H. Con. Res. 18) creating a joint committee to attend the sessions of the International Food Conference at Hot Springs, Va., and that it is the sense of the Congress that three major press wire services, the Associated Press, the International News Service, and the United Press, shall be permitted to be represented at any and all sessions of the conference by one representative from each service.

Since then I have been unable to reach the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], and have been informed that he was away from Washington. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRADLEY] has by his diligence and perseverance shown the necessity for action by the Congress. Time is of the essence.

The officials of the International Food Conference at Hot Springs have virtually destroyed the freedom of the press, and are deliberately withholding from the American people information vitally affecting their interests, which they are entitled to have.

The tactics pursued by the Food Conference are patterned on Nazi and Fascist totalitarian systems. Free speech and a free press are the foundation stones of our Republic. Without them free America ceases to exist, and the sacrifices made by the American people in the war will have been in vain. It is more important that, while fighting for the "four freedoms" all over the world, we maintain them in America.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I have a special order to address the House on Wednesday next for 15 minutes. I have discovered since making the request that that day will be devoted to memorial exercises for our late colleagues. I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes on Monday next, 1 week from today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HAGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the subject of making iron without coke.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. HAGEN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a short article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a press release.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN]?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER] is recognized for 50 minutes.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS] asked me to yield when we had the conference report up for consideration. I did not want to disturb the continuity of that debate and I told him I would yield 10 minutes of my time to him at this time. I therefore yield to the gentleman now.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Friday next, May 28, at the conclusion of the legislative program and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPARKMAN). Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a speech delivered by Hon. Francis Biddle, Attorney General of the United States, before the Swedish Colonial Society at Philadelphia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SUPERHIGHWAY

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, 7 years ago, in 1936, I introduced in the House of Representatives my first transcontinental or superhighway bill. It was on February 2, 1937, that I first addressed the House, giving a brief outline of what I had in mind with reference to a superhighway system for the Nation. Many Members of Congress, on both sides of the aisle at that time, and since that time, have given me encouraging support. In fact, the entire Nation has been interested in such a system of highways.

You will find in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of 1938 excerpts from many of the leading newspapers throughout the Nation—newspapers such as the New York Times, the Chicago Tribune, the San Francisco Times, the Atlanta Journal, the Pittsburgh Press, the Washington Star, the Washington Post, and scores of other papers, commenting favorably on such a procedure at that time.

But since that time they have not only commented favorably, but they have become emphatic in their statements that such a Nation-building highway system must be constructed in order to take care of the future needs of the Nation. Only through such transportation can we hope to meet the needs of our democracy in the future.

I want to quote from my own remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 2, 1937:

Mr. Speaker, as long as we have a nation we will have economic, social, and industrial problems to solve.

As we drift from an agricultural nation into an industrial nation, our problems become more complex and each generation finds that new procedures must be set up in order to take care of the needs and the activities of the people in their generation.

Among the problems that will always confront the people of the United States, are the problems of (a) transportation, (b) unemployment, (c) national defense.

It is believed by many of our best engineers and farsighted nation builders that we can, in a large measure, solve the three problems mentioned above, by building a national system of highways.

The first act of Congress relative to the building of national roads was a bill passed by Congress during Jefferson's administration and signed by him March 29, 1806. This bill carried with it an appropriation of $30,000 for the preliminary survey running from Baltimore, Md., via Cumberland, Md.; Uniontown, Pa.; Wheeling, W. Va.; Columbus, Ohio. This road was known as the National Pike; now we speak of it as the Old National Pike or Route 40. I might say at this point also that Congress for 40 years thereafter appropriated each year money for the improvement and upkeep of the Old National Pike; the sum appropriated totaled $6,324,919.33.

It was President Polk who vetoed the appropriation in 1846. The history of this phase of road building is very interesting and I will insert at this pont a copy of the first public document authorizing the beginning of work on the Old National Pike, now Route 40. I hold in my hand a photostatic copy of this public document in Thomas Jefferson's own handwriting.

I further quote from my remarks of February 2, 1937, because I think they are appropriate today, the same as they were at that time. I quote:

The two major things that I have briefly mentioned as to why these highways should be built, namely transportation and absorption of the unemployed, would be sufficient. However, the most outstanding and the one feature embodying the greatest saving in dollars over a period of years, is the use of these highways in our national defense scheme.

We all agree that the type of national defense equipment that we need today and will need in the future is not the same national defense equipment that we needed 10, 20, 30 years ago. I further assume that everybody believes with me that our first line of national defense is made up of our homes, our schools, and our churches.

However, as long as other nations fly at the throats of each other, so long must we provide adequate defense to protect our shores and our possessions in case a foreign foe should choose to disturb our people.

Just as our rubber wheeled units in our national defense equipment are replacing our horses and mules, so large mobile units on rubber wheels and other large and small units with wings, will take up the major load of our national defense in the years immediately ahead of us.

I mean, Mr. Speaker, that if we had these roads built as set forth in this bill, completed at this time, we could and would save millions of dollars on national-defense expenditures each year and at the same time have greater strength, efficiency, and flexibility in our national defense set-up.

I quoted from my remarks from this floor in presenting this bill 6 years ago. Each year since then the horizon expanded. In 1939 and 1940 when I presented my bill here on this floor, I said it would cost in the neighborhood of $8,000,000,000 to build this 16,000 miles of highway.

My bill called for then, and calls for now, highways eight lanes wide or 100 feet, to be constructed of concrete or other material just as durable, if not more so. It also calls for the right-of-way to be at least 600 feet—leveled off on level with the highway—that is 250 feet on either side of the highway proper shall be leveled off except at such places where it would be absolutely unwise or unprofitable because of cost and usability. It also requires that there shall be no grade in the highway greater than 3½ percent. It also stipulates that these highways should be built so as to be equipped with electric light equipment from end to end—this equipment to be at the outer edge and not higher than the curb itself.

This equipment would enable us to have three main streets across the Nation and six up and down across the Nation. These highways would be spotted with radio stations every so many miles. They would be divided off in sections like railways. There would be landing strips across the Nation for any type of airplane 24 hours a day, just as the pilot today radios from the vicinity of Baltimore, we will say, stating that he will land at Bolling Field, in 10 minutes, and Bolling Field in turn clears the runways for that landing, so the pilot if he would get in trouble and wish to land any place on these highways, night or day, would merely radio to the station nearest to him, that he would land in section so and so in 5 minutes, or 3 minutes, or what not, and the ground crew at this radio station would stop all traffic both ways immediately and you would have your two 3-mile runways for a safe landing.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HOCH. The gentleman will agree that if the other gentlemen who are listening to him do not understand what a superhighway is, that his Commonwealth has built a highway which demonstrates just what the gentleman is talking about.

Mr. SNYDER. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. I want to say that in Pennsylvania we are very proud of that highway and its contribution to the war effort at this time, especially in the transportation of commodities by trucks.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. I want to compliment the gentleman for being consistent in his program for "dream" roads all down the line. The gentleman will recall that he and I went before the House Committee on Roads in 1935, 1936, 1937, 1938, and 1939.

Mr. SNYDER. That is right.

Mr. STEFAN. At the time the "dream" roads were under discussion.

The gentleman just referred to the Pennsylvania turnpike, over which many of us travel frequently. It is known as Highway No. 30 to us in Nebraska. I notice the gentleman has a map here demonstrating his ideas as a basis upon which the gentleman would proceed.

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. STEFAN. I notice the highway as projected misses the Pennsylvania turnpike going west, and, of course, the gentleman does not want to tell us that this is the proposal which he is submitting for the construction of a four-lane highway; that is, it does not represent an accurate picture of the proposal?

Mr. SNYDER. No; this is not an accurate map. As previously stated, my bill provides that there should be a commission appointed by the President of 10 people, 5 of whom must be Army engineers with at least 10 years' experience. Under such a plan, when the war is over, we could immediately put 3,000,000 men to work in building these desired highways.

Mr. STEFAN. Of course, the gentleman knows I agree with him.

Many of us recently attended the annual convention of the American Road Builders Association, which was held in Chicago, where there was discussed the post-war road-building program. There were approximately 1,500 people attending that convention, people who represented manufacturers of road-building machinery, contractors; engineering people from all parts of the United States were gathered at that convention to go into the fundamentals of a road-building program as a means of solving our economic problems which will devolve upon us in the post-war period. They agreed there that the construction of highways was of first importance in the solution of the post-war economic problem.

I want to ask the gentleman, however, whether, in his treatment of the four-lane highways of tomorrow, he has given consideration to this fact.

Mr. SNYDER. This happens to be an eight-lane proposal.

Mr. STEFAN. It was my privilege a little more than 3 years ago to travel over many hundreds of miles of the four-lane highways of the German Reich. I noticed, and I would like to call to the attention of my colleagues, the fact that in the construction of the highways in that country they did not forget, first of all, the construction of farm to market roads.

Mr. SNYDER. That is correct.

Mr. STEFAN. That is, secondary highways in order that raw materials could be brought to market more quickly, and to the superhighways for rapid transportation.

In the program of farm-to-market roads and secondary highways in Germany, they took into consideration the military expediency, and in building the farm-to-market, or allegedly secondary roads, north of what we might call the Maginot Line, from which they made their attacks on the Allies.

I would like to ask the gentleman if the plans which he has set up in his program calls for a farm-to-market road system or secondary highways as a part of his four-lane highway system?

Mr. SNYDER. I thank the gentleman very much for his splendid contribution. My plan calls for an eight-lane highway clear across the Nation, as indicated on this map, with a roadway 700 feet wide. These rights-of-way to be cut down level with the road, so that all across and up and down the Nation, on 18,000 miles of road, wherever you would be, you would have a landing field. We are talking about landing strips. There would be no obstructions for 700 feet, 350 feet on either side of the middle of the highway. The lighting system would be no higher than the curb. No longer would there be any planes diving into the hills around Salt Lake City or in Pennsylvania. They would have a main street across the Nation here and here and here, and up and down at all times.

Mr. STEFAN. Will the gentleman be generous enough to yield further?

Mr. SNYDER. With pleasure.

Mr. STEFAN. The House Committee on Roads has under consideration the planning of roads for the post-war period. In that plan they are taking into consideration landing strips.

Mr. SNYDER. That is right.

Mr. STEFAN. I call the attention of my colleague to the fact that in Europe, in connection with planning superhighways and landing strips—the gentleman, coming from a mountainous section of the country, may be interested to know this—they began constructing their hangars under the hills, in caves, and there they stored their airplanes.

May I ask the gentleman if his bill has been looked over by Mr. MacDonald and by the Chief of Army Engineers, who are also interested in this plan, and by Charlie Upham, of the American Roadbuilders' Association?

Mr. SNYDER. They looked over my former bill. The one I introduced today is approximately the same.

With reference to the airports my bill calls for an air base at each of the 18 intersections, to be at least 2 miles square, it to be left to the judgment of the War Department and the Navy Department whether they should be underground or above ground.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE. I know that the record that has been made by the turnpike in Pennsylvania has been an inspiration to the entire country. The gentleman who is speaking has certainly followed this idea and this dream tirelessly and is deserving of commendation for the vision he has shown.

Mr. SNYDER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. CASE. I hope the gentleman will explain in connection with the possible use of these highways for landing strips his idea about radio control for the clearance of the highways when airplanes want to come down.

Mr. SNYDER. May I make that statement right now?

As we know in connection with railroads, they have a section every so often for the running of trains and a section for the care of tracks. This highway would be laid off in sections, starting, we will say, at New York. I would not know and you would not know whether a section should be 20 miles, 50 miles, or what not. In each of these sections there would be a radio station to communicate both with those in the air above them and those involved in the regular traffic, serving 24 hours a day. Those of us who know something about radio equipment in planes, trucks, tanks, and what not today know how efficiently such a system could be operated.

In case a plane should be flying over that section, just the same as has been done in Germany since the war started, and that plane got in trouble, it would merely radio down to station 17 or 640 or whatever station it happened to be over, "Land in section 6 in 3 minutes." Then traffic would be stopped at both ends of that section, and you would have a runway there 100 feet wide, made of concrete or black top, whichever would be used for building there, and 700 feet wide, so there would be no interference with the plane's landing. In other words, you would have an emergency landing field 18,000 miles long.

I may say that three different planes, one of them a B–18 bomber, have been forced to land on the Pennsylvania Turnpike or near by, and they took off again on the turnpike; and the Pennsylvania Turnpike is only four lanes wide. An 85-foot-span plane could not take off from that highway at all points, but on the highways which I suggest that could be done.

Let me say this about the Pennsylvania Turnpike which will be of interest to you in connection with the war effort. I was up there a couple of weeks ago. If we had not had this war, that turnpike would have paid for itself in 10 years—that is, it would have paid the $40,000,000 we borrowed from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It is paying for itself and much more today, and there is hardly anything on it but truck traffic. The truck traffic comes on at Pittsburgh and runs to Harrisburg, 162 miles. Instead of having just one truck carrying, say, 10,000 gallons of gasoline toward the east coast, it will hook on a trailer and take another 10,000 gallons along. If they would go over Route 30 and go up and down the mountains, they could take only one truck at a time. While it takes 10 hours to go up and down the mountains, it takes only 5 hours for the truck to go over the superhighway, where the grade does not exceed 4 percent or a fraction thereof.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE. May I ask the gentleman if it is not true that commercial truck lines are finding that they can pay the cost of the tolls and use the turnpike and save as much again as the tolls cost them?

Mr. SNYDER. A very splendid contribution.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JONES. I am wondering if the gentleman has any estimate of the amount per mile this highway would cost, and how many miles of construction is contemplated. Has the gentleman made a study of that matter?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes. It is contemplated to build 18,000 miles of highway. It would cost $12,000,000,000 to build it now, but if we had built it in 1937 it would have cost $8,000,000,000. That is $500,000 a mile.

Mr. JONES. Is the bill authored by him, to which he is referring, the one that the Committee on Roads has been considering and is going to report out?

Mr. SNYDER. I suppose the Committee on Roads has in its bill many features the same as this. If I recall correctly the recommendation of Mr. MacDonald when he submitted his road program, it sort of "turkey-footed" into the different cities. My bill states that all cities shall be bypassed on these highways.

I have been studying and getting information from all parts of the civilized world, and I believe it ought to be left to the States and municipalities to get these highways to the cities. It may pass close to Philadelphia and close to New York, but it would not run through, and this one pointing to the Eastern Shore should run from the shores the whole way through, from a national defense standpoint, so the Army could use it, and would keep in from the shore, say, 30 to 60 miles.

Mr. JONES. In the report that the Roads Committee is going to bring out, does it contemplate these 18,000 miles of highway?

Mr. SNYDER. I cannot answer the gentleman. I started this in 1937.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to my distinguished colleague from Texas.

Mr. THOMASON. Can the gentleman at this time advise as to the attitude of the Department of Roads and likewise of the War Department in respect to his bill?

Mr. SNYDER. No and yes. They are both in favor of the system of superhighways across the Nation of this general plan, and I know that Mr. MacDonald would not favor this sort of squared-off system plan here, according to their report.

Mr. THOMASON. I know that the gentleman has done a lot of hard work on this matter and that he has and deserves the commendation of his colleagues in the House and likewise of the people of the country. In connection with this whole program, I ask the gentleman whether he has borne in mind the matter of air freight after the war, because that will be a big factor along with highways.

Mr. SNYDER. May I answer my friend from Texas, who has contributed so much to the war effort? I have great faith in our country. Think of the population back 40 or 50 years ago and then attempt to visualize 50 years from now what will be the population of our country, and what are going to be its demands. I may say that I believe within 10 years after the war is over we will be flying planes leaving New York with 200 tons that will reach San Francisco or Los Angeles within 12 hours, but I still believe that there will be ample use for all of this highway procedure at the same time our population grows. I want to say this further about bypassing cities. We can make all the laws that we want to and still you will have slums in cities. I heard a preacher say last Sunday that man made slums, while God made trees. I go out here toward the Soldiers' Home, and I see that they are building whole rows of houses. To me in 40 years from now those will be slum districts. It is only natural, if I may state it, that in Baltimore, Pittsburgh, New York, Cincinnati, and wherever else big cities exist that the railroads came into the town close to the river front, where the railroads were obliged to go along the river level, and it was there that they built factories adjacent thereto, and all other business houses.

Naturally they had no transportation in those days, and the men walked to work, and it was natural they should build their homes in there. That is now your slum district in every city. If you build these roads bypassing the cities, with the electric power we have these days, and thinking of the percentage of manufactured commodities made from electric energy, you will find that automatically these factories would move away from the crowded river fronts, and the slum districts, and move out along these highways half a mile back or so.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Gladly.

Mr. STEFAN. Is not that the objective of the House Committee on Rules, and the Army engineers, and Mr. McDonald, that when you start building these networks of great highways and connect them up with the farm marketing and secondary highways, you will eliminate slums and bring the processing of raw materials closer to the source of production?

Mr. SNYDER. That is correct.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes, indeed.

Mr. WHITE. Did I understand the gentleman to say that this would be under the supervision of the Army engineers? Is that right?

Mr. SNYDER. No. I said the Secretary of the Interior and the Army engineers and others. There will be a commission of ten.

Mr. WHITE. Does the gentleman not think that the Bureau of Public Roads is better qualified than the Army engineers to take charge of this.

Mr. SNYDER. No; not necessarily.

Mr. WHITE. The gentleman recognizes the fact that in building the Alaska Highway, it was built by the Army men, but was under the supervision of Mr. McDonald.

Mr. SNYDER. Surely, and it should be under his supervision. The Army engineers laid it out. I believe they know more about the engineering work in building highways and waterways than any other group.

Mr. WHITE. Does the gentleman think that they are superior to the engineers of the Bureau of Roads?

Mr. SNYDER. No, but I think they are their equals.

Mr. WHITE. In laying out roads?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. WHITE. I notice there has been a little change in that northern route, crossing my State of Idaho. There is no road now where that road is supposed to go. Is it contemplated to use the famous old Lewis and Clark Trail, or does the gentleman know about that?

Mr. SNYDER. This does not say that it goes between this point or this town and that town. This is a general plan and it may vary 50 miles or 100 miles

Mr. WHITE. Does the gentleman appreciate there is a place in the United States over 500 miles long where there are not any access roads, and this road contemplates the crossing of that section, which will be 200 miles either way to the nearest east and west road?

Mr. SNYDER. That would be fine.

Mr. WHITE. That will be down the Lewis and Clark trail, as I understand it, one of the strategic defiles across the Rocky Mountains. Is it contemplated to use that?

Mr. SNYDER. I assume they would look into it at least.

Mr. BROOKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to my distinguished friend from Louisiana.

Mr. BROOKS. I have seen the gentleman year by year working on his good roads program. I felt prior to the beginning of the war that he was making substantial progress in putting over the superhighway program. The war is going to be over some day and as the gentleman has said, we want a program to begin on again. I know nothing closer to the hearts of the people of America than good roads. I want to ask the gentleman this question: The gentleman referred to the fact that people would be inclined to move their homes away from the cities.

Mr. SNYDER. From the slum parts of the cities.

Mr. BROOKS. Do you not think also from the standpoint of industry that industry would be inclined to more or less decentralize, get away from the hot spots of industry, you might say, so that in time of war as well as in time of peace, they would be better protected and better able to carry on?

Mr. SNYDER. A very acceptable thought, indeed. I am sure that would follow.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. Referring to your main strip east and west, even allowing 50 or 100 miles' variation as to where it would go, why did you choose to cross the Rocky Mountains at that particular spot?

Mr. SNYDER. Well, I did not know the Rocky Mountains, so I just left it for them to choose. Of course, you understand there will be a great many tunnels in this, just as in Pennsylvania. In 162 miles we have seven tunnels.

Mr. CURTIS. Of course, those tunnels are different from tunnels through the Rocky Mountains.

Mr. SNYDER. That may be so.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Most assuredly.

Mr. STEWART. I notice that these two northern east and west routes are near together. There is a great white space farther south. Is it your intention that it be designed that way?

Mr. SNYDER. No. My thought was that all this region around the Great Lakes, the manufacturing center, starting at New York, going through Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, is densely populated. The population from New York to Chicago is greater than the population farther south.

Mr. STEWART. That is not the case around Oklahoma.

Mr. SNYDER. That may not be the case there.

Mr. STEWART. Because it is just the reverse. The population starts there.

Mr. CASE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield.

Mr. CASE. Is it not entirely possible that if some concept like this developed there would be another east and west highway demanded, which would supply that condition down there, reaching the gentleman's State of Oklahoma?

Mr. SNYDER. I thought of that before I presented this map, but that is a new angle of it that would come in as the Nation grows.

Mr. KEEFE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield.

Mr. KEEFE. I notice a white strip on the map. Has that any particular significance?

Mr. SNYDER. No. That just happens to be a defect in the map.

Mr. KEEFE. Did you formerly have a strip across there? That crosses my State.

Mr. SNYDER. Oh, is that it?

Mr. KEEFE. You have eliminated that from your plan?

Mr. SNYDER. No; not necessarily so.

Mr. CASE. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes, indeed.

Mr. CASE. Is it not entirely possible that Wisconsin will receive the same consideration as Oklahoma?

Mr. SNYDER. That is right.

Mr. KEEFE. If the gentleman will yield further——

Mr. SNYDER. I gladly yield to my distinguished and able colleague from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. Those strips that extend out into the Pacific Ocean and down into the Gulf do not mean anything particularly, do they?

Mr. SNYDER. I do not imagine so. I think the secretary that pasted that on just forgot to clip them off.

Mr. MILLER of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield.

Mr. MILLER of Missouri. I understood the gentleman to say a moment ago that the average cost of this highway would be about a half million dollars a mile?

Mr. SNYDER. In 1938 it would have been that. Now it would be about $750,000.

Mr. MILLER of Missouri. About $750,000 a mile?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Missouri. What would be the average cost of a railroad? About $140,000 a mile?

Mr. SNYDER. I do not know.

Mr. MILLER of Missouri. The economics of it appealed to me. I thought perhaps if you could build a railroad for $140,000 a mile and subtract the difference between $140,000 and $750,000, you could take that money and invest it and permit everybody in the country to ride free on the railroads and use the facilities for freight free.

Mr. SNYDER. Well, I have not figured that out. At least, that is interesting.

Mr. BROOKS. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield.

Mr. BROOKS. Has the gentleman given any thought to the idea of financing the project or do you care to go into that at this time?

Mr. SNYDER. I would say that immediately after the war it could be built in a number of different ways. Perhaps the way Pennsylvania built its highway, by getting a loan from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and paying it back over a space of years by tolls. I was not in favor of tolls, but since we have the Pennsylvania Highway and since we have educated our people the way we have educated them to be 5-and-10-cent people, we have done that for 20 or 30 years now in a big way, and we find that the people do not object to paying the toll. If a man in Pittsburgh has $5 in his pocket, and that is all he has, and he wants to go to Harrisburg, he can go over the William Penn or the Lincoln, parallel routes, and not use his $1.50 to go 162 miles on the superhighway, but he will go over the superhighway just so he can drive 60 or 70 miles an hour. I believe we have so educated our people in their spending of nickels, dimes, and quarters for all kinds of "gadgets" that that could be considered a reasonable way to pay for such a project. I do not say it should be the way to pay for it, but at least it seems to me it would pay for it within a reasonable time.

After the war—we hope it will be next month, or 3 months—but whether it is 6 months, a year, or 5 years, we must have something for our boys to do. Nobody knows how long the war is going to last. I heard someone say recently that it all depended on morale, whether or not we could break the morale of the other nations. Seventy-five percent of the influence in all war is morale. When the war is over, as I say, there will be millions of the boys who will not have anything to do. As was so well said, I do not know of anything more valuable and worth while on which we could put men to work than a Nation-wide road-building program similar to this which would create something of so much value for the generations yet to come. I do not confine my thinking of post-war programs entirely to this one road plan I have proposed; I know there will be many changes in it at the time we start to survey it; but these boys will come back home looking for work and we should have work to give them. It was said of Germany that had she had nation-building work immediately after the other war for her soldiers, at reasonable wages, there would have been no Hitler.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. After the other war Germany, of course, did a lot of foolish things, but one thing was doubtless a very wise policy, and that was to require every employer of labor of more than 100 persons to employ at least 1 percent of the personnel who were veterans of that war, that is men who had lost maybe an arm or a leg, but who were still not incapacitated to do many of the duties which had to be performed. They did not have any large rehabilitation program. Does not the gentleman believe we could very well commence now to make arrangements to take care of these men after this war is over, not necessarily in that particular way but in some similar way? There should be post-war planning and I presume the policy which the gentleman is outlining would be one of the ways of taking care of a large number of these men.

Mr. SNYDER. Absolutely. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. I may say that our committee, of which my friend, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] is a member has already set aside, and the Army engineers are at work making plans and blueprints for projects to the extent of $800,000,000. They will be ready. That is what I call planning.

This matter of getting up on the floor and making a talk or giving out a newspaper statement from one's office is not planning; that is just talking. But when the Army engineers and other governmental agencies get to work and make blueprints which they have in their files, that is what I call real constructive planning to put men to work after this conflict is over which we hope, as I said before, will be soon. My committee is starting to hold hearings on a war budget that calls for quite a few billions more and I am sure we all feel that we have got to take steps to prepare for the future regardless of whether the morale of our enemies is broken down in 6 months, a year, or 2 years; we have got to go at this big-scale program that we have already started out on.

Mr. NORRELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield.

Mr. NORRELL. I want to compliment the gentleman from Pennsylvania for bringing this matter to the attention of the House, and also for the record I want it noted that in my judgment this plan discriminates against the Middle West, for three of the north-south highways are located in what might be considered the east coast. It seems to me those roads out to be a little farther apart so that the Middle West and the West would share in the program a little better than it does.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the special order of the House, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, since the beginning of this session of Congress, I have tried—at times with some difficulty—to maintain a discreet and admirable silence. No doubt this has been pleasing to some people who differ with me, and perhaps it has been a bit disappointing to those who concur in my views. I trust that my reluctance to speak will not be interpreted as cowardice on my part, but rather a willingness to go along with the party in power and to cooperate in every possible way in prosecuting to a successful termination, the terrible war which now engulfs us and threatens civilization. When our house is on fire there is no time for us to quarrel among ourselves, but it is imperative that we forget our minor differences and join in one courageous and determined effort to defeat the common foe. Perhaps we have had too much talk and not enough action. If I have made any mistake it is that I have bent over backward to go along with the administration and voted for some measures, about the wisdom of which I entertained certain pronounced doubts. One of the first things a man learns in politics, and certainly in time of war, is: He must do some things that he does not personally want to do.

Nevertheless, as Thomas Jefferson said, in effect, we need the Constitution as a rallying point and need to adhere to it more in times of storm and stress than in times of ease and peace. And it was Woodrow Wilson who said that, "We need more criticism in time of war, not less." If what I have to say this afternoon shall be interpreted as criticism, I want to assure my colleagues that it is offered only in the spirit to be helpful and constructive.

Mr. Speaker, sinister rumors are spreading all about Washington that somebody is trying to play politics with the conduct of the war and the armed services. I do not like idle rumors and I despise curious gossip. At this critical hour when barbarism is riding roughshod over the world; when the liberties of freemen are placed in jeopardy; when small nations are robbed, raped, and murdered by ruthless marauders; when all the spiritual values of life are challenged and assaulted by the unconscionable force of might and materialism, it is too bad that we have to pause to turn our scrutiny on such rumors as are now threatening to divide our efforts, disturb our unity of action, and that will, unless stopped, lead us inevitably to catastrophe. It is inconceivable, sir, that when we are spilling our blood and pouring our treasure on every continent and on every sea for our own survival that anyone in our own country would dare play politics with the conduct of the war and the armed services. Whether or not such rumors have any foundation in fact, I do not know. I cannot deny nor affirm the truth of any of them, but I certainly do not like to hear them. They are dividing our people at home and creating doubt among our allies abroad. If this be the work of the enemy, it ought to be uncovered and stopped. If the rumors are unfounded, their very falsity, when revealed, will put an end to them. If, on the other hand, there is any element of truth in these rumors, the fathers and mothers of the men and women who are fighting and dying on battle fronts all over the world in this tragic hour, should be apprised of it. The only way to stop such ugly and dangerous rumors is to uncover the reasons for them, be they true or false, and the people who are fighting this war and who are paying for it should know the facts.

Mr. Speaker, if we imagine for one moment that these rumors can float all around Washington, in Congress and out of Congress, in clubs and hotel lobbies, on the street corner, and practically every place else, and not reach our Allied command, we are wrong. Our allies are shrewd and intelligent. If any high command officers are going to be removed from the theaters of war in order to preclude a premonition they might become politically dangerous, that is a damnable thing and is breaking faith not only with the people back home but also with the sons and daughters of American fathers and mothers, out on the fighting line. If any high command officers at home are going to be shelved, sidetracked, or replaced because they will not be rubber stamps for the Rasputin of the White House, or because they will not heed the rustle of the silken robes of a Richelieu, it should be known. In order to maintain unity of purpose and strength of action to win this war these rumors, if false, should be spiked, branded a lie, and buried, and those who purvey them ought to be punished; if true, the causes for such rumors should be revealed and the persons responsible properly dealt with.

Mr. Speaker, usually where there is a lot of smoke, there will be found a little fire. There is a suspicion among many of our citizens, perhaps not wholly without grounds, that some exalted, appointed politicos in Washington are more concerned in spreading their strange social doctrines and perpetuating themselves in power than they are in immediately winning this war. Is it possible that certain social reformers and professional uplifters should form a conspiracy to remove some of our ablest commanders merely because they do not accept their strange social theories, and to supplant these tried and true men with others who would perpetuate a military dictatorship after the war? Can it be that a little coterie of self-seeking and cunning conspirators would take advantage of the present crisis and under the pressure of war attempt to make America over in such a fashion as they could not do in times of peace? Would the followers of the Rasputin, close to our Executive, and of our silken robed Richelieu—and there are many of their disciples sitting in high and important places of our Government today—would these apostles of the Tugwellian philosophy, which would roll up its sleeves and make America over—use this war as a smoke screen to saddle upon America a type of government and a kind of economy entirely foreign and contrary to those we have ever known? Representatives, you duly elected servants of your people, it is an inexpressibly dreadful thing when a nation's peril is used as a veil to hide from a free people the political machinations and socialistic schemes of these modern Machiavellis.

If there be a dark plot to remove any commanders from the theaters of war or to replace any high command officers at home by these professional politicians who get their power by appointment, rather than by election of the people, the American people would like to know. The American people are entitled to know. Mr. Speaker, the American people are disquieted by these disrupting rumors. It is no difficult or long complicated task to still these rumors. A forthright statement from any one of several persons in high places would, at once, resolve this whole situation. If our people seem to be uneasy, and lacking some of the enthusiasm of the First World War, could it be because they feel that some motive besides a single-minded will to win this war quickly and conclusively may exist in some quarters?

Mr. Speaker, the causes for these rumors must be removed. Back of any successful effort of a free people in war must lie the absolute and unbounded faith in those who are directing that war. Nothing could so quickly shatter the spirit of the phalanxes of freedom as the destruction of morale behind the lines on the home front. Shot and shell, bomb and bullet, are material. They inflict physical wounds. Morale, confidence, courage, the will to win—are things of the soul. When you injure these, you have grievously wounded the spirit and a wounded spirit never wins a struggle. Faith and courage win wars; munitions are merely implements. Anything, including these rumors, which can wound the soul of America must be stamped out and unity of the people must rest upon their confidence in those who are directing the war efforts. Mr. Speaker, the causes for these rumors must be removed.

Mr. NORRELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. NORRELL. I want to compliment the gentleman for his sincere and outstanding interest in maintaining unity at this special time and I want to concur in what he said. But in further pursuance of that thought I would like to have the gentleman express his sincere idea as to the advisability at this time of creating additional disunity by bringing up the kind of a bill that we had here today. Does not the gentleman believe that that will also contribute to disunity in this country and to the happiness and peacefulness of the Axis Powers?

Mr. SHORT. I think perhaps there is more truth in what the gentleman has said than most of the Members would be willing to admit.

Mr. NORRELL. I thank the gentleman.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include the text of the message from the President of the United States to the delegates to the Conference of the United Nations on Food and Agriculture and to include also the text of the address of Hon. Marvin Jones.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House tomorrow afternoon for 15 minutes at the conclusion of the business of the day and other special orders.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ELLSWORTH]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MILLER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a telegram.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MILLER]?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HERTER] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. HERTER. Mr. Speaker, earlier in this session the minority leader was good enough to appoint me to the Republican Congressional Food Study Committee and asked me to take the chairmanship of the subcommittee dealing with the distribution and rationing of food. In the last few weeks a large part of my time has been devoted to study of this subject, and I have asked for the opportunity of addressing you today because there are certain observations with respect to the way in which the Nation's food program is being conducted that should, I believe, be made at this time.

My home State is the State of Massachusetts—a State in which the citizens are dependent for three-quarters of their entire food supply from outside of the State. In addition, my own district is completely urban, being without a single commercial farm of any importance within its boundaries. It is only natural, therefore, that I should concern myself with the consumer angle of the food problem.

At the outset I should like to make one observation which I think applies to every consumer in the United States. The consumer would much prefer to have some food at any price than no food at a fixed price. This statement may sound cynical, but its purpose is to convey the impression that a consumer's first concern in the food problem is to be assured of an adequate supply and to be assured that the producers of the Nation will produce the maximum that is possible under existing conditions.

The second observation I have to make is that the black market exists only because of the inability of the consumer to obtain food through legitimate channels, a situation in which he is an unwilling victim.

The third observation is that if the consumer were assured of sufficient nutritive food in sufficient variety at a reasonable price, he would not be greatly concerned in regard to high prices on unnecessary or fancy food commodities.

What is actually happening to the consumer today? He finds that certain articles are rationed. He has no complaint whatever to make in regard to the rationing of scarce articles of food, such as meat, or butter, or cheese, or certain categories of canned goods, but he is very seriously concerned when he finds that the rationing coupons which are his purchasing medium frequently cannot buy for household use the foods to which he is entitled. He is faced with shortages and prices which, in spite of hundreds of regulations, seem to have gotten out of hand entirely. He is also faced with a psychology among all of his neighbors which is the very antithesis of a proper psychology with respect to sacrifice and the winning of the war—a psychology resembling closely that of the prohibition era. Everywhere the talk is of food, and everywhere neighbor is telling neighbor how, by this means or that, he or she has been able to obtain some food item which has disappeared from the regular markets. This attitude of mind is not due to plain cussedness on the part of the American people. It is due to confusion, distrust, and complete bewilderment.

Let me be specific. The story of potatoes has been told so often and experienced by so many of you that it need not be gone into at length here. However, there are certain aspects of the potato problem that require repetition. A few days ago the gentleman from Connecticut, CONGRESSMAN MILLER, a member of our committee, introduced into the RECORD a statement with respect to the O. P. A. price regulation on Idaho potatoes sold in the New York market, which indicated quite clearly that, if there were potatoes available, they would cost the consumer 35 percent more than they need cost him without the O. P. A. regulations, provided they had been handled through the regular channels of distribution and with the cooperation of the distributing trades. The margins which the O. P. A. was allowing in the handling of these potatoes to two sets of wholesalers were an absurdity, as the wholesalers themselves have been the first to point out. In contrast, milk sold in the large centers of population has been priced in such a way that hundreds of middlemen or independent distributors are being destroyed. Similarly, the small packer of meats and the meat jobbers are being squeezed completely out of the American system of economy. The rule of ordinary common sense in pricing seems to have been forgotten completely.

Our committee has received testimony from the President of the National Poultrymen's Association to the effect that 75 to 90 percent of all poultry is today in the black market. Two weeks ago, for the first time in 115 years, not a bird could be purchased in Boston's historic Faneuil Hall market. There have been many days when not a bird was available in Washington to the ordinary householder, yet more than the usual number of birds have been slaughtered and marketed somewhere. Hotels and restaurants have been serving chicken and turkey regularly, because of the excessive demands on them to substitute this form of meat for red meat.

Even had chickens been rationed, the consumer would have had no chance to buy at any price. Lunch meats for the industrial worker are prohibitive from the point of view of coupon value. Red meats, and particularly choice cuts, are prohibitive in point value for small families. Among unrationed commodities, prices have borne little relation to published ceilings, and an army of enforcement officers would have had great difficulty in trying to pull them together. Only recently the Department of Labor announced with some pride that in the areas where the coal miners were living, prices of food were only 5 percent above ceilings—the first frank admission that in figuring living costs, ceilings in most foodstuffs are a most ineffective guide.

Behind the consumer, the last line of distribution is the small grocery store. We have learned, on excellent authority, that 35,000 to 50,000 small grocery stores have gone out of business in the last year. Some of these, of course, represented normal casualties. The greater number, however, representing perhaps 10 percent of all the grocery stores in the country, have thrown up their hands, because multiple regulations have made continuing operation impossible. Back of the retailers stand the wholesalers. As I have indicated, in some lines wholesale margins have been absurdly excessive In others they have not allowed the industry to survive, but most difficult of all the problems of the whole set-up has been the question of operating legitimately at prices approved by the O. P. A., regardless of the spread allowed. The wholesaler has had to buy from the country shipper or from the farmer. The farmer has sold at whatever price he could command, inasmuch as, with the exception of a few commodities, his prices were never ceilinged. The country shipper and the wholesaler, however, were told what prices they could pay, and in many lines those prices could not compete with the prices which were being offered directly to the farmer by black-market operators. Here the machinery of distribution began its complete breakdown—a break-down which has now assumed such serious proportions as to come close to being a major catastrophe not alone from the point of view of its injury to the morale of the American people, but even more so from the aspect of the uneven and unfair distribution of the foodstuffs available. Probably the most serious aspect of the whole situation is that the break-down has occurred at a time when the Nation has had the largest crops in its history, and can hardly hope that providence will repeat the miraculous weather of the last 3 years.

Anyone who tried to prescribe all the remedies in this situation would be foolish, but it seems to me that there are certain obvious things that can be pointed out at once. In the May issue of the Atlantic Monthly there appears an article by Ambassador Winant, in which he discusses very frankly the British success in the handling of their food problem. Two of his statements are of special significance in relation to our own policies. After commenting on the fact that food rationing, pricing, and distribution is an outstanding success in the British war economy, he makes these important statements:

1. Control of supplies, control of prices, and rationing are placed in the same hands.

2. British administrators have little faith in price ceilings with legal penalties for violations unless at the same time government control is established for supplies and distribution and is administered through the department which controls the prices.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERTER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman is doing a very splendid job on the committee to which he has been named and the membership of the House is deeply grateful to him for the extra time he is putting in on the work he is doing in order to bring about a better situation in food distribution. I wonder if the committee is giving any consideration to our next year's food supply with thousands, yes, millions of acres of our best land under water? As a result of ceilings beet sugar planting is down 35 percent and vegetable planting is down 40 percent. I am wondering where it is all going to lead. Does not the gentleman fear we are headed for a serious food shortage in this country?

Mr. HERTER. I agree with the gentleman, we are headed for a very serious food shortage from the point of view not only of rationing but production and distribution, all of which need a very complete overhauling.

The British unified control policy to which Ambassador Winant attributes their success in dealing with their food supply, contrasts with the multiheaded and divided controls that have featured the handling of the food supply problem by our own Government. I believe we should adopt the unified control method. That view is shared by all the members of the Republican Congressional Food Study Committee. It has found expression in a bill, H. R. 2739, which was introduced in the House on May 18 by the gentleman from Ohio, Representative JENKINS, the chairman of our committee, and which proposes to place entire control of food in a single agency. That bill is now before the Committee on Banking and Currency, and I hope that in the interests of making a constructive beginning in bringing order out of the present chaos, it will be given a hearing at the earliest possible date.

Let me review briefly the principal features of that bill. It provides for a Food Administrator who shall be the Secretary of Agriculture and who shall have control of the entire problem of food production, distribution, pricing, rationing, and governmental purchasing. The need for such centralized and responsible control is only too obvious. Mr. Chester Davis, who carries the title of Food Administrator, has been given control over four Divisions of the Department of Agriculture. However, Mr. Wickard, Secretary of Agriculture, still has control of the rest of the Department, is still a member of the War Production Board, and is still the food representative on the Combined Food Board. Insofar as rationing and price ceilings are concerned, responsibility is divided three ways. Mr. Prentiss Brown, of the O. P. A., is supposed to ration and fix prices after consultation with Mr. Davis, but apparently neither of them is able to operate without the sanction of the Economic Stabilizer, Mr. Byrnes. Responsibility is shuffled from one to the other, and the results have been satisfactory neither to the producer, the processor, the distributor, nor the consumer. I am also firmly convinced that the result has not been satisfactory to any one of the individuals who has to share responsibility with the others. The fixing of responsibility under one man is absolutely essential as a first step.

The bill specifically provides that once responsibility has been fixed, it cannot be reshuffled by the President. The bill likewise provides for a single purchasing agency in the hands of the Food Administrator, which shall control, either directly or indirectly, all purchases of foodstuffs for account of the various agencies of this Government, for Lend-Lease, and for foreign governments. It likewise places in the hands of the same Administrator control over all exports and imports of food. No one who is familiar with the competition between the Army and Navy in the purchase of foodstuffs and who realizes what a tremendous stabilizing factor a single governmental purchasing agency can become, both with respect to supply and price, can deny for a moment that this centralized authority is absolutely essential.

Next, the bill provides that in the fixing of prices, wherever it is found necessary to fix them, this shall be done after consultation with the industry affected.

Mr. JENKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERTER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS. I wish to say to the gentleman that since we have introduced the bill the gentleman refers to it has had an almost phenomenal interest all over the Nation, with the result that you cannot get a copy of the bill from the document room. I think we put our finger on the right spot when we decided it was the proper thing to correlate all of these widespread and far-flung activities of government. As they operate now the consumer is the man who suffers the most and the next man the real producer. In the wide scope in which these agencies have operated the result has been that things are practically chaotic, and from the information I have today it indicates the O. P. A. is about to scatter and they will have to repose that activity in someone's hands.

Mr. HERTER. I thank the gentleman.

The principal complaint which is today levied, and properly levied, against the administrative practices of the O. P. A. comes from the fact that many of the individuals who fix prices and draft ceiling orders are completely unfamiliar with the practices or trade customs of the particular industries affected. The bungling on poultry orders, on meat orders, and so forth, of which example after example could be given, are only too clear proof of this fact. Furthermore, section 5 of the bill lays down a general policy with regard to stabilizing of prices, in order to protect the consumer, and at the same time safeguard the existing channels of distribution. Theoretically the latter were supposed to be safeguarded under the terms of the Price Control Act, but in actual administration, as I pointed out before, thousands of retailers, wholesalers, and processors have been forced to the wall. It is worth while at this point to quote the pertinent section of that act, section 2 (h):

The powers granted in this section shall not be used or made to operate to compel changes in the business practices, cost practices or methods, or means or aids to distribution, established in any industry, except to prevent circumvention or evasion of any regulation, order, price schedule, or requirement under this act.

In view of what has happened in the last 6 months, this particular mandate of Congress seems to have been forgotten altogether.

There is no mention whatever of subsidies in the Jenkins bill. Under the existing powers which have been transferred to the Food Administrator, subsidies may still be granted in accordance with existing law. Subsidies may be necessary because of the severe dislocations in our economy which have already taken place. But if subsidies are undertaken, they should be undertaken in such ways and in such amounts as the Congress itself prescribes, after receiving the benefit of the recommendations of the Administrator. I was shocked to learn in our debate last week that the administration was contemplating the utilizing of lend-lease appropriations for subsidy purposes. I was even more shocked to find that suggestions have been made that the existing appropriations of lend-lease, the War Department, and the Navy Department might be drawn on to piece out Reconstruction Finance Corporation funds for subsidy purposes, at the very same moment that Mr. Chester Davis was appearing before a congressional committee to ask for an additional billion dollars for subsidies through the Commodity Credit Corporation. Just what form subsidies would have taken from these other Government agencies I do not know, but perhaps they would have taken the form indicated in the recent Department of Agriculture release, which showed that the War Department was paying 10 cents a hundredweight over ceiling prices for potatoes in the State of Maine, and 5 cents per 50-pound sack over ceiling prices in the State of Texas, thereby creating in this scarce commodity a governmental black market. Is it any wonder when the Government itself is allowed to pay higher prices in open-market operations than are the legitimate trades, that hoarding should result and that farmers should feel entirely free to sell to the highest bidder, whoever he may be?

The creation of a single control over food administration, as provided for in the Jenkins bill, does not guarantee a solution of our problem of food supply and distribution, but it certainly represents the first and basic step in our approach to a solution of this problem. The bill would allow of an administrative set-up which could function. The present set-up cannot function, even though it were manned by the greatest experts in the world. The Jenkins bill is a stable base from which unified policies could be directed. It is quite possible that the major pricing policies of the O. P. A. will have to be reconsidered as a whole. It is quite possible, in accordance with the British and Canadian experience, that the Government will have to take complete control of a few essential foodstuffs and carry them from the farm through to the consumer, with or without subsidy, in order to insure even distribution and a noninflationary price to the consumer. No one can be didactic, as no one knows with certainty as to what the supply of foodstuffs in this country will be after the coming crop season. The British experience is not necessarily a criterion for our own administrative policies, because the British begin with the fundamental knowledge that they must count on shortages in all foodstuffs. We hope that our situation will not be as drastic as this. We do know that there will be shortages in meat and dairy products. We do know that we shall probably have some surplus of cereals, but even the latter are being eaten into rapidly and a poor crop season might well wipe out the accumulated stocks on which we had counted as our principal background for the feeding of starving populations in the liberated countries. However, there are some things that we can foretell with accuracy now.

As long as the O. P. A. keeps a ceiling price of $1.05 on corn and a ceiling of between $13 and $14 a hundred on hogs, just so long will all the corn stay on the farms and be fed to the hogs. With a ratio of this kind, corn fed to hogs is worth $1.40, and no form of compulsion can force a farmer to ship it to the dairy herds of the East while it brings that price fed to the hog. The dairy farmer in the East cannot get the requisite feed for his dairy herds. He is told that he must produce milk at a price which, in my State at least, returns him no more than 89 percent of his cost of production. In the face of these disparities, to mention only one glaring example, the consumers of milk, including the hospitals and our children, may soon find themselves faced with acute shortages—shortages which a more intelligent administration and distribution of our food supplies could easily have avoided.

In the brief time at my disposal it is obviously impossible to cover the whole field of rationing and distributing of foodstuffs. I hope soon again, either in person or with the aid of my colleagues of the Food Study Committee, to bring to the attention of the Congress the vital need of our making a start at once in the direction indicated by the Jenkins bill. We as Congressmen cannot administer—we can only point out faults in administration and suggest remedies. We can, however, legislate, and legislate quickly, to create a sound administrative set-up, which is the first requisite at the present time.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert my own remarks in the RECORD at this point with regard to the Copernicus quadricentennial.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL]?

There was no objection.

NIKOLAUS COPERNICUS

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, this day of May 24, 1943, marks the passing of the great Polish scientist and astronomer Mikolaj Kopernik, known to the world under his latinized cognomen as Nikolaus Copernicus.

This day Mr. Speaker is known as the Copernican Quadricentennial, in which hundreds of colleges and universities throughout the United States and Canada upon the initiative of the Kosciuszko Foundation are taking part. All scientific men and women throughout the world pause today to pay tribute to his memory.

It is unfortunate that at this time the crafty and boastful Germans would blasphemously claim this great Polish scientist who established the heliocentric system and who became the father of modern astronomy.

In spite of any attempt to rob the Polish people of the glory which the world bestowed so gratefully upon the name and person of one of her many great sons and daughters throughout the ages, the world of science does not recognize the spurious claim of the Germans and rejects it as worthless and without foundation.

I should like to quote excerpts of tribute, so eloquent and forceful which I garner from—

[From Elbert Hubbard's Little Journeys to Homes of Scientists]

Nicholas Copernicus was born of Polish parents in the quaint old town of Thorn, February 19, 1473.

The portraits of Copernicus reveal a man of most marked personality—proud, handsome, self-contained, intellectual.

Copernicus at 21 was teaching mathematics at Cracow, and by his extraordinary ability in this direction had attracted the attention of various learned men. Copernicus invented the science of trigonometry. A college professor from Bologna traveling through Cracow met Copernicus, and, greatly impressed with his powers, invited him to return with him to Bologna and there give a course of lectures on mathematics.

Copernicus accepted, and at Bologna met the astronomer, Novarra. In listening to lectures by Novarra, he perceived at once how mathematics could be made valuable in calculating the movements of the stars.

He knew what all other great astronomers had taught, and out of them all he had built a science of astronomy that he knew would stand secure. For 40 years he worked at his book, The Revolution of the Heavenly Bodies. For 27 years, he himself says, not a day or a night had passed without his having added something to it.

He was stricken with fever and died on the day that he received a copy of his printed book. He died May 24, 1543.

And again let me quote:

[From the introduction of Three Copernican Treatises by Copernicus]

Copernicus was competent in canon law; he practiced medicine; he wrote a tract on coinage; he served his cathedral chapter as an administrator and diplomatic representative; he painted his own portrait; he made many of his own astronomical instruments; and he established the heliocentric system on a firm basis.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Friday, May 28, at the conclusion of the legislative program and following any special orders heretofore entered I may address the House for 1 hour on the Republican Food Study Committee objective.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON] be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I also ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. DILWEG] may extend his own remarks in the RECORD and include therein some letters.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROWAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein an article from the Chicago Herald-American and containing a prayer by the Most Reverend Samuel A. Stritch, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Chicago.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by inserting a report by Hon. Henry Morgenthau, Jr., Secretary of the Treasury, on the recent bond sales.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BRADLEY] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

UNITED NATIONS FOOD CONFERENCE

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, to say the least, it is a matter of record that I was admitted to the United Nations Food Conference last Wednesday evening, and, as I fully expected, very graciously received officially by the Chairman of the Conference, our friend and former colleague for 24 years, the Honorable Marvin Jones.

When I was ushered into Judge Jones' room I was likewise very cordially received by Mr. Michael J. McDermott, of the State Department, who has been duly designated as the chief press relations officer for the conference.

Both of these gentlemen, in addition to extending their cordial greeting to me on behalf of the conference, went out of their way to express to me their personal regret at the unfavorable press comments upon this historic conference and indicated to me their earnest desire that it be clearly known that there was nothing to conceal from the American public in this conference and expressed their concern that perhaps the hostile press, which had developed by reason of the unfortunate, and, in my opinion, very ill-advised limitations imposed upon the press from the highest authorities in Washington, was, to say the least, not only detrimental to United Nations' unity, but was, in fact, bringing aid and comfort to the enemy, more particularly in the person of Herr Goebbels of the Nazis.

Mr. Speaker, very frankly, I was so impressed by the apparently obvious sincerity of the gentleman who received me, that I felt it my unbounded duty not only to the conference and those in responsible charge of the conference, but to the American people to do my utmost to clarify this confusion. In making this statement, may I make it perfectly clear to this House, that I have always been taught from babyhood by my parents to take everyone's statements at their face value until those statements were proven false, and to thereafter discount their statements. I believe in playing fair with everyone at all times. That is why I am making this speech today, because I want to play perfectly fair with the Congress of the United States and especially my colleagues in the House.

As a result of my conference with the chairman and the chief press-relations officer, I returned to Washington and on Thursday afternoon, May 20, when the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] was good enough to yield to me, I clearly explained to the House my appreciation of the cordial reception I had received and conveyed to the House my understanding of a very clearly expressed invitation extended to the membership of the Congress by the chairman of the conference.

Let me repeat several of the statements which I made.

First of all, I referred to a resolution—House Concurrent Resolution 18—introduced by myself in the House and by my colleague the junior Senator from Michigan, Hon. HOMER FERGUSON, on April 13, which was "designed to permit the Congress to have full knowledge of all discussions, all transactions, and all decisions which may be arrived at during the course of the sessions * * * of this conference." If I may, I want to verbally underline the several words "all" and for purposes of reference thereto later, let me underline the word "sessions."

I went on to explain in my remarks that our resolution not having been acted upon in the House since April 13, I addressed a letter on April 27 to the chairman of the Rules Committee, requesting immediate action on our resolution and stating that in effect "If everything was aboveboard, that there was no harm in Members of Congress being able to obtain any and all such information by attendance at any and all sessions of the conference," and likewise that the press should be given an opportunity to have reasonably full coverage of this conference.

Not having had even the courtesy of an acknowledgment from the chairman of the Rules Committee up to the convening of the conference on May 18, and in fact not having had any since, I was determined to find out whether I, myself—as a Member of Congress—might be permitted attendance at this conference, and hence my trip to Hot Springs.

As previously noted, I was cordially received and as a result of this cordial reception, and on my return to Washington May 20, I made this statement:

I returned to Washington for the purpose of repeating to my colleagues in the House the warm assurances of Judge Jones that all Members of Congress were welcome at any time to attend any and all sessions of the conference and that nothing whatsoever will be kept from them.

Again I want to verbally underline "any" and "all" sessions of the conference.

In my humble opinion, it is most imperative that the Members of Congress accept this invitation whenever their time permits and sit in on these historic meetings. After all, I have been told that this conference is but the first of a number of such international conferences that it is expected will be held between now and the peace to follow this devastating war. These conferences are looking toward the post-war period and it seems to me that we as Members of Congress are woefully remiss in the discharge of our duties if we fail to profit by our mute attendance at these conferences and get the viewpoints of the international delegates who are thus assembled. It seems to me this is a golden opportunity for the Members of Congress to interview these delegates—statesmen and economists—from all over the world and get their outlook on the post-war world, in order that we may be in a better position to pass upon the various questions that will be presented to us and thus render decisions which in our humble opinion will be for the best interests of our Nation and the post-war world in general. Furthermore, we are more than remiss in our duties if we do not indicate by our presence that we are alive to our responsibility as the people's representatives by being willing to keep ourselves thus informed. Obviously, if we do not attend this conference in some numbers, it seems to me that it is perfectly logical for the administration officials, charged with the responsibility of arranging for future conferences, to feel that Congress is disinterested and, therefore, there is no reason to issue any invitation to Members to attend any future conferences which may be held. In other words, this conference might well be regarded as setting a precedent and it is up to us in the public discharge of our duties to see to it that Congress is actively included—not necessarily as voting delegates—but certainly as observers in any and all of these future conferences.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I tried to be eminently fair in this matter and I have tried to be eminently conscientious in the discharge of my duties as a duly elected Representative in Congress of my constituents and as a Member of the Congress of the United States. I have no intention nor desire, I assure you, of casting any reflections personally upon either our former colleague, Judge Jones, or Mr. McDermott or anyone else who is fulfilling an official capacity at this conference, I care not what their name be, because in addition to being duly appointed servants of the American people they are at one and the same time serving as duly selected and responsible officials of the United Nations Food Conference. Based upon the assurances which had been given to me and which, as previously noted, I transmitted to this House—and with which the chairman of the conference told me on Saturday morning, after his personal examination of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, he found no fault whatsoever—I returned to Hot Springs by train Thursday evening. I was accompanied by my colleague from Ohio, the Honorable FREDERICK C. SMITH, who is intensely interested in this entire subject and who, because of his professional experience, is not only interested but extremely capable of scientifically considering what we are told are among the paramount problems being presented to this conference—namely, the questions of nutrition and malnutrition.

By virtue of proof that my statements on the floor Thursday, May 20, were made in all good faith, let me quote from an article which appeared in the New York Times of Friday, May 21, written by one Russell B. Porter, in which he said:

A blanket invitation was extended today to Members of Congress to come down to this fashionable pleasure and health resort in the Allegheny Mountains, stay overnight in the luxurious Homestead Hotel, and even attend executive sessions of the United Nations Conference on Food and Agriculture.

Judge Marvin Jones, permanent president of the conference, made the invitation public with the comment that it proved there was no secrecy or concealment about the conference. He said that Members of Congress who attended executive meetings and talked with delegates in the hotel lobby, which was barred to the press by armed soldiers except on stated occasions, would not be pledged to secrecy. The hotel manager, he added, had been asked to take care of any congressional visitors, although the building was crowded.

I do not have before me, as I prepare this speech, any copy of the official press release of the aforementioned press statement which I understand Mr. Jones made to the press following my departure from Hot Springs Thursday morning, but I will say that Mr. Porter has quoted substantially the statement which has been repeated to me over and over again by other members of the press in attendance. I will go further, Mr. Speaker, and say to you that the president of the conference did not deny to either Dr. SMITH or myself that he had issued, or intended to issue, any such statement. On Friday, he excused the statement by saying that perhaps he had gone "too far" in extending his invitation.

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, Dr. SMITH and myself were, to say the least, very much taken aback when we arrived in Hot Springs on Friday morning; where we were again cordially received by the president of the conference and were again assured that we could attend any and all sessions of the conference—and again I want to verbally underline "any and all sessions of the conference." We were, however, in a matter-of-fact manner, casually informed "that the Friday sessions were all executive committee sessions and, of course, we were not permitted to attend them." From later inquiry of the executive secretary of the conference, we learned that indeed all business of the conference would hereafter be transacted in executive committee sessions. Indeed, this very interesting fact was later substantiated by the president when he told Dr. SMITH and me personally on Saturday that the only two sessions of the conference that had so far been scheduled were plenary sessions to which we were cordially invited and which were indeed the opening and closing sessions. Now again I want to underline the word "sessions."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly frank to confess that I am a "babe in the woods" when it comes to splitting hairs in politics and statesmanship, but I am firmly convinced that I am not entirely a "babe in the woods" when it comes to a matter of ethics, honesty, and sincerity.

On Friday night Dr. SMITH and I sought a clarification of this previously cordial—and I quote the word "cordial"—invitation to Members of Congress to attend any and all sessions and to repeat the words of Russell Porter:

The permanent president of the conference made the invitation public with the comment that it proved there was no secrecy or concealment about the conference.

Now, gentlemen and ladies of the House, I regret exceedingly that I feel it necessary to take the floor today and inform you that I was apparently intentionally or unintentionally misinformed last Thursday. It has been my understanding from reading the press since my return that several delegations of Members will be going to Hot Springs in the near future, and I think that is fine. I want to say to them that you will see a beautiful resort hotel, possibly the finest in the land; you will be well fed at a dinner, in the presence of food rationing in America, and served such foods as half grapefruit, maraschino; fresh sea-food cocktail russe; cream of tomatoes; consomme paysanne; baked fillet of sole, bonne femme; broiled breast of guinea hen, maitre d'hotel; braised prime beef Canadienne; roast baby lamb, currant jelly; cold fresh lobster remoulade; puree of broccoli; wild rice in butter; stewed tomatoes; steamed new potatoes; heart of lettuce; pear pie; homestead ring, chocolate sauce; fresh strawberries; peach ice cream; Camembert cheese; coffee.

Or perhaps if you are hungry at lunch you can feast on this menu: Chilled tomato juice; grape juice cocktail; potage cressonniere; consomme vermicelli; broiled sea trout, hoteliere; half chicken saute, home style; fresh spareribs with sausage and sauerkraut; roast milk-fed veal with chutney; cold Philadelphia capon salad; fresh string beans; macaroni au gratin; buttered carrots; whipped potatoes; chef's salad; chocolate chiffon pie; hot diplomatic pudding; fresh cherries; marshmallow sundae; cottage cheese; coffee, tea, or milk—all this for $5 a day, with Uncle Sam paying the difference between that and the usual rate of $14, which I noted posted on the door of my room.

Mr. BUSBEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. BUSBEY. Did I understand the gentleman from Michigan to say they had potatoes at the conference?

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. They did, nice new potatoes.

Mr. BUSBEY. That is something we have not had in Washington for some time.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Do I understand that my good friend ate all those things?

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Not all of them.

Mr. McCORMACK. But you partook of them?

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. I certainly did; I just made the statement that I did whatever I considered necessary in the discharge of my duties. After all, one does have to eat—be he delegate or even a lowly Member of Congress.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Can the gentleman advise the House as to the number of delegates enrolled and what nations were represented at the conference?

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. There were 43 nations who have accepted the invitation to attend the conference. There were 44 nations all told including the United States. There were about 220 delegates and about the same number of advisers or assistants with them; about 500 altogether.

Mr. DONDERO. Did you obtain any information as to the real reason or purpose of the conference that you might be in position to divulge to the House?

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. There is a published agenda, but I am sure the published agenda did not cover everything that was under discussion, and which I will bring out a little later on.

But for your committee it remains that after you have had a wonderful day at Hot Springs you will have had a glorious show put on for you, staged by the State Department; you will come away with a full "tummy" and a fully satisfied feeling that everything is hotsy-totsy; but let us not kid ourselves.

We Members of Congress some day in the not too distant future are going to be called upon for heretofore unheard of appropriations to make good on the commitments or the veiled promises to which we have committed ourselves in this conference and in the dozens to follow. The whole world looks to America as the Promised Land, and you Members of Congress will be called upon to vote for the appropriations to substantiate and make effective those promises, and I personally am not going to face my constituents and pass my approval on those promises unless I know how they were arrived at; and I have sought for and been denied the access to what we are told are the free discussions from which those promises will be forthcoming.

Being a "babe in the woods" in politics and statesmanship, I have suddenly awakened to the fact that there is decidedly a distinct difference between "any and all sessions" of a conference and "any and all sessions of the committees," which go to make up that conference.

How long are we going to continue this obvious attempt to kid the American people? How long are the American people going to stand for this sham and delusion?

Furthermore, may I say to you this: That I have personally talked with the members of several delegations of our fighting allies in this present conflict, who not only have been most cordial in their reception of us and desirous of exchanging their views but who have at the same time expressed their personal astonishment at the fact that we as Members of Congress, who will be asked to pass upon the appropriations necessary to put into effect any programs which may either be arrived at or have their inception at this historic conference, are not permitted to have free and open access to all the deliberations which bring these decisions or these recommendations to a head. Mr. Speaker, let us not kid ourselves, nor kid our constituents—the American people. It is openly said in Hot Springs that this is but the first of many, many such international conferences that will be held on various post-war and, indeed, during-the-war problems. When this House passed the lend-lease appropriation the other day, it became obvious that we are being called upon—and, if necessary for victory, we are willing—to expend appropriations which exceed the total of those of our Allied Nations. I am not raising that issue here excepting to say this, to remind this House and you, Mr. Speaker, that we as Members of this House have a very grave responsibility to our constituents. We should seek to know any and every reason behind the demand for these appropriations; and if my observation is correct, and I have sought to approach the matter with a strictly open mind and with all fairness and honesty, then I say to you that a Member of Congress, attending the Hot Springs conference today is nothing more than a glorified news reporter whose only distinction, as a duly elected representative of the people of the United States, is the privilege of eating and sleeping in the famous Homestead Hotel, if he is lucky enough to find a room, and to interview the delegates when they are at leisure in any part of the hotel, and even to have the privilege of being invited to their rooms or inviting them to his room. There is no other distinction whatsoever and yet it is we who have the responsibility of approving the appropriations which will make this post-war world Utopia possible—if possible.

I feel a very grave concern over what decisions or what recommendations may be arrived at in this conference. I was told by newspapermen that last Wednesday night when Mr. Paul Appleby, Under Secretary of Agriculture, held a press conference he stated that our present food rationing is not a temporary matter; that our present difficulties with food rationing are not a matter simply confined to the duration of the war but rather that in assuming our responsibility in the post-war world and in contributing to the feeding of other nations, the American people might just as well make up their mind that they are in for the rationing of food and other essentials of life for many years to come in the post-war world. I am not so sure that the American people are going to take that with any too much grace, and one thing is certain, in my opinion, the American people are going to expect their representatives in Congress to have something to say about arriving at any such decision or in making the appropriations necessary to pay for this food which apparently it is proposed to give to other nations.

I am not so sure either that the American people approve of the holding of such an international conference, to the delegates of which is denied free access to the daily press of America when such papers might be critical of the administration or of the conduct of the conference itself; and this was done at least temporarily and was still being done to some extent even Saturday. For instance, one newspaperman told me that en route to the conference he happened to meet a newspaper distributor from that area in whose car were stacked up in considerable quantities the editions of several leading papers of this country, such as the Washington Times-Herald, New York Journal-American, the Chicago Tribune, and others, which had been taken off the newsstand in the Homestead Hotel. We questioned the chairman about this matter and he said no papers were barred from the press stand; and on Saturday that was perfectly true—these papers did make their reappearance because I happened to be at the stand when the stacks of morning papers were unwrapped and placed on sale. It was inescapable, however, to notice that in the case of several of these papers—as, for instance, our Washington Times-Herald—the edition placed on sale was limited to less than a dozen copies, whereas its contemporary Washington morning paper was stacked up in considerably greater volume, and this was true of various other competitive papers from different sections of the country.

Indicative of some of the broad aspects of the subjects under consideration in Hot Springs are a few statements taken from the official press release of the British delegation this morning. They effect the formulation of an international production program and the maintenance of some kind of machinery for the coordinated purchase, allocation, and transportation of such commodities. Then after discussing the various differences in the dietary habits of the various nations occasioned by difference in climate, soil conditions, and so forth, and their normal habits of life, we find this statement which could well be applied to our own country:

> In highly industrialized countries, on the other hand, where the consumer buys practically everything he eats, much can be done by subsidizing the production and consumption of protective foods like milk, by the provision of hot communal meals for school children and factory workers, and by price adjustments which encourage the consumer to buy nutritionally desirable foods. Further, it is possible to improve diets considerably by applying minimum standards of quality and nutritive value to staple foods, as for instance, by adding vitamins to margarine. * * * Hence, education and persuasion are essential components of any better food program.

Later on in referring to proposals of dealing with the variations in yield, we find this statement:

> A method of getting over this difficulty which we believe would be most effective in many cases is the creation of an internationally held balancing or buffer stock which could be increased when production for the time being outruns demand, and drawn upon when it falls short. * * * It should be possible to achieve this aim through variations in the prices at which the authority controlling the buffer stock is a buyer and a seller.

It looks to me like they might be effecting some kind of a superworld state and I wonder just how far we may be going in committing our Government to such programs because later we read this:

> We believe the authorities responsible for the regulation of the various commodities should keep in close contact and should be subject to the policy direction of a representative international coordinating body.

Then later, again referring to some international organization, we find:

> We believe that the most appropriate mechanism for dealing with such cases would be an international body with funds to purchase the commodities in question and give them to populations in need.

Then, lastly we find that it is the British view that this conference must take on a very broad scope because we find:

> Food and agricultural policy are therefore closely interrelated with international economic policy—that is with monetary arrangements, with commercial policy and with the future of international investment. All these things are parts of a single whole and we cannot tackle one of them satisfactrily without paying some attention to the rest. We believe that the study of food and agricultural problems at this conference must include reference to these wider economic problems and that if the conference reaches sound conclusions on the specific questions raised in its agenda, it will have simplified, and provided a valuable introduction to, the consideration of those economic problems to which the United Nations will have to devote their urgent attention in the near future.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is most imperative that whether or not some action is taken by the Rules Committee or passage is gained on our resolution—House Concurrent Resolution 18—nevertheless it is the duty of Members of Congress to pay very careful attention to what is going on down there at Hot Springs.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think this matter can well be looked into carefully by the Congress. Therefore, the gentleman from Ohio, Dr. SMITH, and I had intended introducing a resolution today authorizing the creation of a special committee for that purpose. However, in reading over House Resolution 102, setting up the committee known as the Smith committee, I am frankly convinced that this existing committee has full authority to look into this entire matter and, therefore, I am hereby filing a complaint with said committee that by their actions, rules, regulations, procedure, orders, or directives those American officials, charged with the conduct of this conference, are acting beyond the scope of the power or authority granted to such department or independent agency by the Congress or by Executive order in that they are invading the constitutional rights, privileges, or immunities of citizens of the United States, by denying freedom of the press.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. I gladly yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I wonder if the gentleman would not like to have read into his remarks at this time the official statement of the American delegation, which I have obtained and which has been made public but not carried fully in the press reports that I have seen, and I quote:

> The conference should create a continuing commission (and provide for the designation of its membership by the member government) charged with the duty of carrying on functions and securing action in support of the declarations and recommendations of the conference, and particularly with reporting on the coordination and expansion of existing forms of international organization in the field of food and agriculture and the possibilities of new types of international collaboration. The conference should also recommend to the member governments that they take appropriate national action to carry out the recommendations and declarations of the conference.

That is the end of the quotation. So, it is quite clear that the American delegation has in mind long and continuing international action which will require action by our Government, and therefore the official statement on the part of the American delegation bears out the gentleman's contention that commitments are being made which will require action ultimately by our Government.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. May I say that in my own personal opinion, without a question of doubt, some members of the American delegation are whole-heartedly in favor of, and I believe it is true, would be more than glad to advocate a super-world state.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman's contribution. May I announce very briefly, and it is in connection with food, that tomorrow I hope that each of my colleagues will go to the House restaurant downstairs and have some very choice and very good Florida-grown new Irish potatoes.

They are not black market potatoes either. They were given to me by Mr. Earl Brown, of De Land, and by Mr. Z. D. Holland, of Bunnell, Fla., and they come from the famous Hastings potato section of Florida. They are free.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. I assure the gentleman I will be very glad to accept that invitation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

FOOD CONFERENCE NOT A PART OF THE LEGISLATIVE BRANCH OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the address delivered by the gentleman from Michigan. I shall not criticize the gentleman from Michigan, neither shall I at this time or ever criticize any Representative of the Congress, because I feel that each Representative has an individual responsibility to his own constituents and is answerable to them and not to me or to anyone else.

This question of the Food Conference is a matter of great concern. The question the gentleman brings up is especially a great one at this time, because he says it is intended as a precedent which he expects to establish for future conferences and future deliberations.

The gentleman stated that he wanted Members of Congress to be privileged to attend all sessions of the conference, to interview delegates if they wanted to, to get information about questions that come up, that we as Members of Congress should be alive to our responsibilities, that we should attend each conference in such numbers that it would not be presumed that we are disinterested, that we should be observers at this conference and all future conferences, that Judge Marvin Jones is a duly appointed servant of the American people, and that the menu down there is quite enticing and appetizing. I am glad the gentleman from Florida made that announcement because after he told us we would have potatoes down here tomorrow, probably we will not all try to go down to Hot Springs to have potatoes down there.

Mr. GREEN. It will all be free.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman stated we should discharge our duty by attending these conferences.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. No matter how one feels about the conference, the fact is that these various nations have sent distinguished citizens of those countries to this conference, and they are the guests of the United States.

Mr. PATMAN. I concur in the statement made by our distinguished majority leader [Mr. McCORMACK].

JUDGE MARVIN JONES

Who is chairman of this conference? Judge Marvin Jones, one of the finest and best men in all America, one of the most honorable legislators I have ever known. I do not know of any man who has the respect of the Members of Congress with whom he served more than Judge Marvin Jones. The President of the United States could not have made a better selection. He could have looked this country over, the 135,000,000 people, and he could not possibly have found a person to be chairman of that conference who would meet with more universal approval than Judge Marvin Jones. He is an able man, he is a wise man, he is intelligent, he is genial, he is a diplomat; yet he is courageous and he will do absolutely the right thing. If Congress wanted a representative there, Congress should certainly be satisfied with Judge Marvin Jones, because his judgment will meet with the approval of the Members of this Congress, I am sure.

Mr. McCORMACK. Judge Jones served in this House for 16 or 18 years.

Mr. PATMAN. He was the author of more bills to help the submerged groups of the people—poor folks, farmers, and other groups—than any other one man who served during the 15 years I have been in this body.

What will be the result of this conference? Will we have to pass a law? No. You know that probably a treaty may come out of it, but that means, since the House does not pass on a treaty, that it does not come to us at all. A treaty goes only to the Senate. Therefore it looks a little bit unbecoming for a Member of the House to insist on attending some meeting, some conference, when the only thing that can probably grow out of it is a treaty, that he, himself, will have nothing on earth to do with, because the Constitution says the President shall make treaties by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and not the House of Representatives. This brings up the very question that I would like to discuss, and that is about the different branches of our Government. You know that we have a certain duty to perform. It is not our duty to try to run the Executive's business. We should stay on our own side of the fence. We should read the Constitution now and then, which says that the legislative branch of our Government shall make the laws, and that the Executive shall enforce them. Do you find anything there which says that it is our duty to attend conferences called by the President? Where is that our duty? Let me show you where our duty is. Suppose we were to go to Hot Springs to attend this conference under the laws passed by Congress. We could not even collect pay for each day that we were away. We would be violating our own laws, because it is not our duty to go down there. It is our duty to be here, and to make laws. It is our specific duty to raise money to pay the cost of this war and prevent inflation, and such a bill can originate only here in the House of Representatives, and then to insist that the House should move away and go to a conference, called by the Chief Executive, according to my view, would be outside of my responsibilities and duties, and I would feel that I was going outside of my duties if I attempted to do so.

Why are these meetings executive? We know that certain meetings must be secret. Suppose the meeting is wide open and the newspapers began to report what one delegate said, which we may not understand. We don't know the manners and the customs of all of these different peoples and we might not understand their language, and possibly make improper interpretations upon it, and the first thing we would know, they would leave there and break up this conference, and they would not want to come back to another conference. It is likely to grow into such a disturbance that it might cause the losing of this war. This thing is serious. Do you want to insult people who come here from other countries? Do you want to encourage fighting among our allies? If we have any right to attend this conference, we might want to go into the military conference of the United Nations. If we claim it is our duty to attend that food conference, because it is international, why can we not consistently insist that it is our duty to attend this United Nations conference that is determining the strategy of the war?

Mr. CURTIS rose.

Mr. PATMAN. I cannot yield now. So, if you are going to set a precedent here, do not stop here, but why not go on down there to Mr. Churchill and Mr. Roosevelt and the representatives of all of the other governments, and just as consistently and just as logically insist upon attendance there.

Judge Jones is not the servant of the American people, representing them as chairman of that conference. He is representing an arm of our Government, the executive branch, in trying to get some agreement with 44 nations of the world. We must have a better feeling between the legislative and the executive branches of our Government. If we try to crash these gates and intrude as Members of Congress into private conferences, is that the way to create a fine relationship and a cordial comity between the two branches of our Government? Certainly not. Suppose we did not get along with the Senate. We would never have any laws passed. We would be fighting among ourselves, and the people would get disgusted with us. Suppose we got into a fight with the Executive, to a point where the relationships are such that they are unbearable. The people would lose respect for us and would lose respect also for the executive branch of the Government. Therefore, it is our duty, instead of trying to stir up trouble with the Executive, to have fine relationship existing between the two departments of government, so that the Executive can perform his duty, and we can perform our duty, and gentlemen should not overlook this particular part of our Constitution which says that the President shall faithfully execute all the laws. He takes an oath to do that. You do not; I do not. That is his duty. Let us permit him to perform his duty, and let us stay on our side of the fence and perform our duty.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Suppose we got into a fight among ourselves. Say that the members of the Appropriations Committee insisted on going into an executive session of the Ways and Means Committee. How long does the gentleman think that that would be tolerated?

Mr. PATMAN. Not long. The gentleman is right. May I say that this request comes with rather poor grace, without criticizing the gentleman, because it is his responsibility and he looks at it in a different way, and I am not criticizing his motives, but if he were to start breaking into secret meetings, why not start in Congress? Every meeting of the Committee on Appropriations is secret. There is where we spend billions and tens of billions of money of the taxpayers, and just let him try to get into one of the secret meetings of the Committee on Appropriations. He would not have to go to Hot Springs to be turned down or turned out. He can be refused admittance on Capitol Hill. Take, for instance, the Committee on Ways and Means. They have executive sessions, and I venture to say that the committees on which the distinguished gentleman from Michigan himself serves have secret meetings, and that other committees of Congress have.

It is not unusual to have certain things secret, and of all the things on earth that should be secret and carefully guarded now, it is international conferences, involving our allies. If it is not carefully guarded, it could mean the losing of this war.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield briefly.

Mr. CURTIS. Why is it that you on the majority take the attitude that you cannot trust the American people by giving them the facts and letting them choose the course that is wisest and best to win this war?

Mr. PATMAN. Now I do not yield further. I only have a few minutes left and I do not have time to yield.

Mr. CURTIS. I would be glad to have you answer my question.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPARKMAN). Is there objection?

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. PATMAN. You can ask.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Is it the purpose of the gentleman's request so that he can yield?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes; that is it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield at this point?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. I wanted to comment on this matter of executive sessions of the Congress, in cooperation with the Executive at the other end of the Avenue. Of course, it is necessary to have executive sessions in Congress and executive sessions of international conferences, but we have here executive sessions of the committees, with the official of the Executive sitting in the conference. I have had the experience of having a subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations sit down with United States naval officials when I could not get in, but they could.

Mr. PATMAN. That is the difference. The difference was, they were invited to the meeting. If you are invited to a food conference, I think you should go, but if you are not, I do not think you should attempt to go. There is a big difference.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. The first conference, the refugee conference, had Members of Congress designated as delegates. Does not the gentleman feel there ought to be some way in which Members of Congress—not ex-members, but present Members of Congress, could be brought into the picture so that the Congress can be kept familiar with the deliberations?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes, if they serve a good purpose, but in this case would a good purpose be served?

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. This idea of waving the flag when criticism is made, of course, is a fallacious statement. It is the objection to unfair, unreasonable, and unwarranted criticism. Furthermore, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] is calling attention to the fact that a Congressman, because he is elected by his people, is not above the law, and is not supreme in himself, and cannot go floating around the country butting in every place he feels his curiosity permits him to butt in.

Mr. PATMAN. Why, a Member of Congress is not even an officer of this Government. They represent the people. They are not officers of the Government. What right have we to say that we are entitled to intrude at every place where an executive has a meeting? Certainly we are not. If you are going to assume that attitude, why do you not insist on going to the secret conferences held in the Department of Agriculture? They hold secret conferences there every day. Why do you not go to the secret conferences in the O. P. A. and the War Production Board? Why do you not insist on going to the Cabinet meetings? They have secret conferences down there involving the entire world, involving the rights and liberties of 135,000,000 people.

If you are right in saying we are entitled to go to the food conference, this same logic dictates that we have the right to go to the Cabinet meetings. So, if this is just a precedent, I presume the next step will be to go down there and sit by the side of Winston Churchill to see what the strategy of the war is, and go to the next Cabinet meeting and see what they are discussing there.

You cannot make an argument in favor of one without making an argument in favor of another. The point is that our duties are legislative. Our duties are here. Any Member of Congress has plenty to do right here. He does not have to go to any other place. His duties and obligations are here. He is paid his salary to be here and not there. His salary cannot legally be paid if he is there. Is that not the test? What better test do you need than that? Therefore no Member of Congress has the right to insist that he should be allowed to attend this conference, whether it is open or whether it is an executive meeting, because it is the executive branch of the Government and not the legislative branch of our Government. If something should come out of this conference that would require the passage of a law upon which this House would pass judgment, then we would find out all the facts about it. But that is quite different from allowing 435 Members of the House to run down to this hotel and button hole every diplomat and representative of the nations in this food conference and get into conversation with him and find out what he wants and what he is expecting to get.

We would certainly have a fine fix; we cannot have that. I believe my official duty is here and I am not going to try to crash any gates of the executive branch of our Government. Let me say now as one humble Member of this House that it is my belief that anyone who goes out to go into the executive meetings is doing so upon his own individual responsibility, not as an officer of the Government, because a Member of Congress is not an officer of the Government; he is doing it as a private citizen only and he is not representing the House of Representatives, because the House of Representatives has not in the past and will not now appoint introducers to try to seek entree or entrance into meetings held by the Executive about food or about anything else. That is not our duty. Our duty is here.

CONGRESS BLAMED FOR SHUFFLING RESPONSIBILITY

Something was said about O. P. A. awhile ago that I wanted briefly to mention. The gentleman made a very interesting statement about the shuffling of responsibility between the O. P. A. and Agriculture. I am glad he mentioned that. He said it should be under one centralized authority. I think he is right, but do you know who is to blame for that? It is Congress. Congress did that, made a grievous mistake when we did it. Why blame O. P. A.? We said in that price-control law that passed here, that O. P. A. could not fix the price of agricultural commodities, including livestock—that phrase "including livestock" was inserted—without the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture; and we have seen dozens and dozens of little packers go out of business because there was a dispute between O. P. A. and the Department of Agriculture on the price squeeze. One wanted to fix the price of live animals; the other wanted rationing. They have had a dispute for months, and months, and months. That is the cause of this trouble. Why were they shuffling it from one to the other? Because Congress said they had to. So if you want to correct that, start right here, introduce a bill. You do not have to break into some conference down there, you can start right here in your own committee and then, if you are successful, you will get that centralized authority which I will be for. We made a mistake and we should correct it. Congress is to blame.

O. P. A. NECESSARY

Sometimes we have to take something bad to keep from taking something worse. O. P. A. is necessary; do not get it into your minds that O. P. A. should be abolished. I venture to say that there would be 435 Members of the House who would vote against abolishing O. P. A.; by that I mean abolishing price control. If we did not have price control our money would not be worth 15 cents on the dollar in a few months. We must have price control for we know there are several dollars available in the pockets of the people to purchase every dollar of merchandise available; every informed person knows that. Every informed person knows that O. P. A., price fixing, and rent control are absolutely necessary, and without them our domestic front would be absolutely destroyed; it would be equal to losing a war here at home. So now I join you, not just criticising them about the mistakes they make—and they make a lot of them, but let us not go to the point to where we say that we ought to destroy price and rent control in this country, for if we did we would be in favor of destroying our country. If we changed the organization down there that would not mean mistakes would not be made; certainly they would be made. As long as we have human beings administering laws there will be mistakes made, but those mistakes should be corrected quickly when they are discovered. That is one thing for which I blame some of these agencies: Not quickly correcting their mistakes. But the main reason I think is failure to delegate power to the regional State and district offices. They keep too much power here in Washington.

I can tell you a lot of things wrong with O. P. A., W. P. B., Agriculture, and a number of others, but they are minor when compared to the great objective of preventing inflation, preventing the destruction of our money; that is the main objective aside from winning the war, and they have been rather successful in price fixing—not 100 percent, no—and in rent control. Inequalities? Yes. Injustices? Lots of them. Mistakes? Many of them, but remember this: There are 8,000,000 different commodities in this country including grades, classes, styles, fashions, and designs—over 8,000,000. You cannot deal with any substantial number, evaluate millions of different commodities, without making a large number of mistakes.

HAS MINORITY LEADER APPOINTED A GATE-CRASHING COMMITTEE?

May I say in conclusion that the Republican leader, our distinguished, able, and sincere friend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] has appointed a committee, I am told, a food conference committee that is holding hearings over the country to hear these complaints. I hope that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], the minority leader, has not appointed these gentlemen to go down to this food conference. Since he appointed this other committee I think that the gentleman from Massachusetts ought to say that these gentlemen do not represent the minority in trying to force entrance to the food conference. That is something on which he should make a public statement and say that he has not appointed them for that purpose. I believe that is justified because he has appointed other committees to go to different places, and since he has done that I think he ought to deny that he is trying to force the entrance of these gentlemen into that private food conference.

So let us send word back down to Judge Marvin Jones, in whom we have the utmost confidence, full and complete, that if any Member of Congress comes down there, he comes on his own individual responsibility as a citizen only, that he has not been appointed by the House of Representatives to represent us in any way, shape, form, or fashion.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. A moment ago the gentleman referred to this conference down at Hot Springs as a private food conference.

Mr. PATMAN. I made a mistake. It should not have been that way. I am glad the gentleman calls that to my attention. That was just a slip of the tongue if I said private food conference.

Mr. CURTIS. I would like to ask one other question. Are agricultural statistics generally withheld in this country because of their military value?

Mr. PATMAN. No; neither are the hearings of the committees of Congress, like the Appropriations Committee. They are printed at the right time later on. You will find out everything that was said down at Hot Springs later on, but now is not the time.

Mr. CURTIS. Is it not also true that this conference is dealing with post-war production, which goes into the question as to what we can and what we cannot produce in this country, and it is not confined to the military aspects of food to win the war?

Mr. PATMAN. Well, suppose it is. It is an executive function. We can deal with post-war problems here if we want to. We do not have to go down to Hot Springs. Then we would be within our rights.

Let us send word back to Judge Marvin Jones that the Congress of the United States is for him in whatever action he takes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may now utilize the special order that was given to me for earlier in the day. I did not have opportunity then to utilize it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I shall try to briefly bring before you this afternoon for your consideration the imperativeness of increase in milk producers' ceiling price in Florida. Florida dairymen have practically ever since the application of ceiling price by O. P. A. endeavored to obtain O. P. A.'s favorable consideration for milk producers' ceiling price increase.

The Florida congressional delegation and the Honorable Paul H. Ficht, administrator, Florida Milk Commission, have cooperated every way possible with the Florida producers in an endeavor to obtain this necessary relief. We have held meetings with the O. P. A. price-fixing officials and they have given us respectful, attentive, and extensive audiences. We have written to them, wired them, talked with them, telephoned them and in every way humanly possible tried to impress upon them the imperativeness of the situation. These O. P. A. officials from some cause probably best known to themselves have thus far declined to give relief.

In the milk and dairy industry in Florida wages during the past 2 or 3 years have increased from 100 to 150 percent; feed has advanced 30 to 75 percent; every article which the dairyman buys and uses in his business, industrially manufactured or otherwise, has increased in price from 10 to 50 percent. Owing to the rapid shift in dairy labor in many instances experienced and skilled workmen have necessarily been replaced by those with less skill, less experience, and less efficiency.

Prior to the present war Florida dairymen were making considerable progress toward their goal eventually of supplying Florida's people with their dairy-product requirements. The percentage of local products for local consumption was increasing. We, however, at all times in Florida have imported substantial quantities of our dairy-product requirements. Milk and cream in carload lots have for many years been shipped to Florida from other States to supplement our local but ever-increasing supplies. Our dairymen have performed a Herculean task in building up this industry, improving their herds, maintaining sanitary requirements, and efficient and economic service to the public.

Prior to the war and the incidental tremendous increase in production cost our dairymen were breaking even and some of them showing reasonable profits. Since O. P. A.'s ceiling-price application on their products, the price paid to them has been frozen while their production cost has ever increased. The result is that our local dairies are being liquidated; their valuable high milk- and butter-producing herds are being slaughtered for beef. The net result is that if we do not get some substantial relief from O. P. A.'s ceiling price for the producers, the entire dairy industry of my State threatens to be confiscated.

It does seem that men presumably of reasonable judgment and of at least average information in O. P. A. could see the dastardliness of their refusal to cooperate in this matter and offer relief. The milk demand in Florida is greater, of course, than ever. In my own town of Starke, Fla., local dairymen have been forced to discontinue local home delivery of milk and the local housewife is forced—even if she is able to obtain fresh milk at all—to go to her local grocery store and buy it across the counter for a very high price, and in this connection, my colleagues, it is strange to note that deliveries of nonessential products, nonfood products, and non-war-effort products go on unabated and, I believe, without ceiling prices in their deliveries.

I read yesterday a most interesting story in the Bradford County Telegraph, a newspaper published at Starke, Fla., my home town, as follows:

GROCERYMEN DEPLORE MILK SHORTAGE

The near critical shortage of canned milk for babies in Starke was the subject of much discussion at a meeting of grocerymen and restaurantmen held in the courthouse Monday morning and attended by Donald W. Powell, representative of the Food Distribution Administration, 204 Dyal-Upchurch Building, Jacksonville. The Food Distribution Administration is an agency of the United States Department of Agriculture, and its object is to try to avert critical food shortages in any part of the country.

The meeting was called and presided over by W. M. Edwards, chairman of the Bradford County Defense Council.

Mr. Powell urged local merchants to tell him their troubles so that he could relay them to Washington. The chief cause for complaint seemed to be the shortages of canned milk of the two varieties most popular with mothers to give their young babies—Carnation and Pet.

All grocerymen stated that they were practically out of these two brands and were having difficulty getting replacements. "Mothers actually have to stand in line waiting for canned milk and then we often have to disappoint them," one groceryman said. "It makes them awfully mad when they can't get milk for their babies."

Another groceryman stated that matters would grow steadily worse in Starke from present indications. "I counted 116 pregnant women in my store last Saturday," he said.

Mr. Powell seemed greatly concerned over the local shortage of canned milk and promised to do what he could to have the situation relieved.

The local meat situation was described by grocerymen as serious, although not critical. "This is a salt-pork town, and we can't get it any more," one groceryman complained.

Mr. Powell emphasized the danger of purchasing meat in the black market and urged grocerymen to unite and refuse to pay more than the ceiling price for what they buy. "If all grocerymen would do that, the black market would soon be broken," he said.

He also urged consumers to report retailers who charge more than the ceiling price for meats and other food items.

Now my colleagues this gives you a portion of the drastic picture which exists in many places in Florida and I judge, in other communities in other parts of the country. I have received innumerable communications from our Florida dairymen on this and will not take your time to present many of these; however, you should know from my constituents direct their plight and I will read you two or three of their communications. Here is a copy of a telegram recently sent by Mr. Alfred C. Ulmer, president, Jacksonville Chamber of Commerce, to the Honorable Prentiss Brown, as follows:

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., May 21, 1943.

Hon. PRENTISS M. BROWN, Administrator, Office of Price Administration,
Washington, D. C.:

Jacksonville milk situation desperate. Requires prompt relief on price to save it. Distributors are squeezed into a loss and producers in spite of their advance in January are again finding difficulty in paying increased feed prices and labor costs. Approximately one-fifth of dairy barn capacity not now operating. Other sales of dairy herds impending. Shortage now almost 50 percent of sales which is temporarily relieved by Minnesota milk at prohibitive price. Some immediate encouragement necessary to save industry. We recommend that your organization take prompt action in granting such increases as will save this industry from further break-down and assure our people of an adequate supply of milk.

ALFRED C. ULMER, President,
Jacksonville Chamber of Commerce.

Here is a telegram today received by me from the Winter Haven Cooperative Dairies, Winter Haven, Fla. It indicates their desperate plight:

WINTER HAVEN, FLA., May 22, 1943.

Representative LEX GREEN,
Washington, D. C.:

Some months ago we informed you of the dire necessity for an increase in the resale price of our milk. We have as yet received no relief, our prices being frozen on a pre-Pearl Harbor basis. Labor costs are up 100 percent, feed prices 70 percent, dairy equipment and other costs are up proportionately.

The situation now has become so acute that unless we receive a substantial increase at once we will be forced out of business. Appeals to the Office of Price Administration have brought no results. It is too late now to wait for Office of Price Administration surveys. We appeal to you as our Representative to get us relief at once.

WINTER HAVEN COOPERATIVE DAIRIES.

MARION COUNTY CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Ocala, Fla., April 7, 1943.

Hon. R. A. GREEN,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

Subject: Letter from Gold Medal Dairy Products, Ocala, Fla., to the Office of Price Administration, Washington, March 18, 1943, copy of which is herewith enclosed.

DEAR LEX: Since Mr. Burgdorff petitioned the Office of Price Administration for relief on March 18, the situation to which he refers has grown steadily worse.

The dairy industry of this community is on the verge of being a thing of the past. Please understand I am not speaking figuratively. One of our largest dairies has already sold its entire herd to another section of the State and two other of our largest and longest established herds will likely be closed out within the next week unless the Office of Price Administration is willing to come to our rescue—this they could do without any encroachment on the policies on which it operates. May we suggest the way by which this could be done would be for the Office of Price Administration to offer a directive to its regional office in Atlanta requesting prices in the States in which it operates to be equalized at once.

If you can be helpful in having this done, you will be helping to save an industry and render a real service to the food production program, which our Government is requesting of its citizens.

Sincerely yours,

HORACE L. SMITH,
Secretary.

GOLD MEDAL DAIRY PRODUCTS,
Ocala, Fla., March 18, 1943.

DAIRY AND POULTRY DIVISION, OFFICE OF PRICE ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: Inasmuch as the Jacksonville, Fla., and some of the other Florida areas have been petitioning for an increase in retail and wholesale prices in order to allow the producers more money, we have refrained from petitioning ourselves. It has been our understanding that the Office of Price Administration would take a favorable action on these above-mentioned areas, thus setting a precedent to be followed throughout the State.

Inasmuch as no relief has been granted, we now find it necessary to state our own particular case and sincerely hope that immediate action to relieve this condition will be given.

November 1, 1941, there was in effect in this area a delivered milk price as follows: Wholesale milk in quart containers, 14 cents; retail milk in quart containers, 17 cents. (Our sales of delivered milk are approximately 32 percent retail and 68 percent wholesale.) To date this price is still the same. At that time we paid our producers a blended price of 56 cents per pound of butterfat. Today we are paying them 72 cents per pound of butterfat. Our local milk supply, because of good herds, runs from 4.2 to 5 percent of fat and averages about 4.7. You can readily see that we have increased our producers' prices approximately 30 percent without any increase to our consumers whatever. It is true that our fluid-milk business has been on the increase and today but a small percentage of our producers milk is used for manufacturing purposes.

In nearby areas the retail price of milk is 19 cents, with wholesale milk 17 cents. Many of these localities have water freight rates on feed which we do not have here. Starting in the county south of here, where prices are 19 cents and 17 cents, citrus pulp is available from canning plants as a feed 5 or 6 months out of the year free for the hauling. Our producers must either buy or produce hay to take the place of citrus pulp. Feeds have gone up in some instances to almost double over what they were in November 1941. Very few have gone up less than 33 percent. The wages of dairy labor, as well as the wages paid our help and plant supplies, have gone up constantly, as you know.

One of our producers sold his entire herd the other day to a buyer in the area immediately south of us operating under this 19-cent and 17-cent price schedule as mentioned above. Two more of our milk producers are on the verge of selling their entire herd to buyers in this higher-price area.

Unless the Office of Price Administration sees fit to set a schedule of prices of 19 cents and 17 cents for retail and wholesale milk in this area permitting us to raise our milk prices to our producers commensurate with their present fat standards to 40 cents per gallon for milk to be bottled, 80 percent of the production of fluid milk in this area will, to say the least, be cut in half. It is understood that surplus milk for manufacturing purposes should be below the above level and would have to be purchased on a competitive basis of shipped-in cream. In other words, whatever prevailing prices are set for the Jacksonville area covering wholesale and retail delivered milk, as well as producers' prices would be demanded by our producers, inasmuch as they consider their production costs at least as high as Jacksonville.

We earnestly solicit your immediate assistance in the above matter in order that we may be able to hold production in this area intact. We again assure you that unless you take immediate action, production in this vicinity will fall fully 50 percent within a matter of weeks.

Very truly yours,

GOLD MEDAL DAIRY PRODUCTS,
WM BURGDORFF.

N. B.—Attached is a schedule of prices in this area on date shown. For your information, we handle about 80 percent of the milk sold in this area.

Here is a most interesting communication just received by me from Dr. J. G. DuPuis, of Miami, Fla. He is a member of the Broward-Dade Counties Milk Producers Association. He is an excellent businessman and is operating his dairy in a business-like manner. His surplus products have been converted into the production of hogs, chickens, eggs, and other marketable produce. He has cultivated a portion of his land to supplement food requirements of his dairy herd and, in fact, has managed his entire business diligently. He is a man of unquestioned integrity, excellent reputation as a businessman, and is regarded as one of the most prominent and successful members of the medical profession in my State:

THE WHITE BELT DAIRY,
Miami, Fla., May 21, 1943.

Hon. LEX GREEN,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. GREEN: I wish to acknowledge receipt of copy of CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in which you addressed your colleagues on the floor on the Irish potato and milk situation by Office of Price Administration rulings on these two divisions of agriculture and the hardships imposed thereon. Every word you have spoken is commendable and to the point expressing the truth as to the deplorable conditions existing. It is my opinion that unless the dairy industry in this area of Florida is given relief at a very early date that the dairymen here will lose their business and all they have accumulated over the past years due to negligence, indifference, and maybe willful design of the officials operating the Office of Price Administration.

The following is a concrete example of what I am individually confronted with in the operation of my own dairy.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation made me a loan of $160,000 on my dairy farm, including buildings, land, cattle, and all chattels in 1939. Since that time I have only been able to reduce this loan to $139,000. Up to date the interest is paid. In the operation of my business and dairy farm I have been an employer of from 150 to 200 employees routinely. Due to the notorious milk market racketeering conditions in this market prior to Office of Price Administration creation, it was impossible to earn any profit under the price set by the Florida Milk Commission in the production and distribution of milk and dairy products.

In 1940–42 wages began to jump up until they have reached 100 to 150 percent increase with only untrained and indifferent labor today to select from to operate my farm. Feeds have advanced from 30 to 75 percent, and every article which we buy and use in our business industrially manufactured or otherwise has increased in price from 10 to 25 percent.

The Office of Price Administration comes into existence and freezes the prices of our dairy products to the public, promises us relief many months ago after being petitioned by every dairyman in this area and show exhibitors giving proof of the tremendous increase in the cost of production and distribution showing tha we are being discriminated against by the low prices which we are being forced to sell our products. However, no relief has been received.

In addition to all the above-mentioned increases in the cost of production and distribution of our products, the Social Security and Unemployment Compensation excise tax on the processing, packaging and delivery and marketing of our products has been imposed even though the law sets forth that these operations are exempt from this tax. This burdensome tax has forced me to pay out of my operations approximately $40,000 in which I am not permitted to even obtain cost over the past few years.

On May 1, 1943, legal proceedings by the Jacksonville Loan Agency of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the foreclosure of the mortgage which they hold against my dairy, including the land, buildings, cattle and all chattels thereto, was filed in the Federal court of this district. Even though the security covered by this mortgage aggregate from three to four times the amount of said mortgage.

Now, Mr. Green, as my representative at large from the State of Florida, I desire to ask you the following question: Are we fighting for liberty or are we building up a dynasty to destroy individual effort and honesty of purpose of individual small business men of this nation?

I have written this letter and recited my individual case to you that you may know directly what the Federal Government and the many legislated boards are doing to me as an individual. I again wish to congratulate you and wish you success, and anything I can do in supporting you in bringing about relief for the dairymen of this area, including myself, though the Office of Price Administration before the industry is completely destroyed, it will be a pleasure to do so.

Yours very truly,

J. G. DUPUIS, M. D.

The following represents the various farm products produced and marketed by J. G. DuPuis and his immediate family during the year 1942:

Three hundred eighty-nine thousand and forty-four gallons of milk produced and marketed.

Fifty thousand one hundred and twenty-four gallons of ice cream produced and marketed.

Two hundred head of calves and young dairy stock raised on the farm.

Eighty-five thousand five hundred and six pounds of Hampshire hogs bred, raised, and marketed.

Twenty-six thousand chickens raised and marketed.

Fourteen thousand six hundred dozen eggs produced and marketed.

One hundred and fifty to 300 tons of hay produced on the farm and fed to dairy stock.

One hundred acres of sugarcane grown and fed to dairy stock.

Ten to 30 acres of vegetables, tomatoes, squash, peppers, potatoes, strawberries, citrus, and garden truck farmed and marketed.

One hundred and ten acres of hog feed, chufas, and peanuts farmed and fed to growing stock.

One thousand one hundred bushels of corn produced.

Three hundred and twenty-five bushels of sweetpotatoes produced.

Seventy-five gallons of sirup.

Thirty bushels of peanut seed produced.

Twenty-five bushels of chufa seed produced.

In carrying out the operations and activities of J. G. DuPuis, there are 207 regularly employed employes.

In addition to the above production in an effort to assist in the war effort to protect our liberty, I wish to state that I have worked from 10 to 16 hours per day in the practice of my medical profession to relieve suffering and sickness of the people in this community for more than the past 44 years.

With the above production and effort on my part to assist in every way in winning the war, I am at a loss to know whether liberty is to be preserved in my case or if my business will be annihilated completely by the bureaucratic bureaus operating by acts of Congress.

Respectfully,

J. G. DUPUIS, M. D.,
Owner, White Belt Dairy.

Now, my colleagues, are you surprised that our Florida milk producers are going out of business and that they are fighting against insurmountable odds and that the odds in this case is their own Federal Government? Here is one of the many communications which I have received from Mr. Brady S. Johnston, vice president of the Dinsmore Dairy Co., of Dinsmore, Fla.:

DINSMORE DAIRY CO.,
Jacksonville, Fla., May 19, 1943.

Hon. LEX GREEN,
Congress of the United States,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR LEX: Many thanks for your letter of May 13, and also thanks for sending me a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I have read with intense interest your speech regarding the agricultural situation in Florida.

You have certainly been our friend and we shall never forget it.

Don Anderson, of Office of Price Administration, promised to wire me just as soon as he could get something rolling on the Jacksonville order, and he expressed his appreciation, when I called him the other day, for the additional information I gave him on the phone. He stated it would help him to get the order rolling.

It is beginning to look like some of us will have to make another trip to Washington if we ever expect to get results. The peculiar thing about this whole situation is that they are raising the price of everything else here and elsewhere; even canned milk has practically doubled in price in the last year or so. They have raised the price of milk in most places. They have even gone as high as 19 cents in some places, for instance, Norfolk, Savannah, and maybe some other places that I don't know about, and yet they have been unwilling to go up even one penny in Jacksonville on fresh milk.

The public is perfectly willing to stand even a 2-cent increase. Maybe if you would go over and plead with Don Anderson he might get something started. I believe he wants to get something started if he just knew how. He claims that the President's directive has not yet been clarified, but the War Labor Board has received the power since the directive to adjust inequities, and we certainly have an inequity here with regard to the milk prices.

We are just letting our equipment go down each day because we cannot afford to keep it up, and we are fast reaching that day when we will not be able to continue.

If you possibly can spend a little while with Mr. Anderson, please do so and write me.

Thanks again.

Sincerely,

BRADY S. JOHNSTON,
Vice President.

P. S.—Even the newspapers here have made the second increase in approximately 1 year. Note the attached clippings.

B. S. J.

Mr. Johnston has one of the finest and one of the most selected dairy herds in the world. He is recognized as one of the most prudent, honest, and efficient dairymen of our State.

Here is a telegram just received from Messrs. B. B. McArthur, R. G. Goolsby, and other members of the dairy industry of Dade-Broward Counties area:

Here is one of the several communications which has been received by me from the Honorable James Jennings, of Jacksonville, Fla., secretary and treasurer of the Florida Dairymen's Association. He indicates in figures his excessive cost of production and the impossibility of his continuing in milk production unless relief is granted. He is another gentleman whose integrity cannot be questioned. His communication is as follows:

FLORIDA STATE
DAIRYMEN'S ASSOCIATION,
May 5, 1943.

Hon. LEX GREEN,
Congressman from Florida,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR LEX: It is more than helpful to know that we have a friend like you in Washington, and we do appreciate what you have been doing up there for us, but it seems that every effort is going to be useless with the kind of men we have at the head of the Office of Price Administration.

On top of other troubles the feed man has solved the method of going around the Office of Price Administration in this way: In March I got a load of feed from the Checkerboard feed store here in Jacksonville as I have been doing for years. The ingredients I mix as a balanced ration for my dairy herd; but in April the Checkerboard feed store informed me that I could no longer get the ingredients to make my own mix, as they did not have enough of these ingredients only to make a mix of their own of which they would gladly take my order for what I needed.

Now when I bought to make my own mix it cost me $2.29 per 100 pounds. Now I have to buy their mix and it costs me $3.13 per 100 with 4 percent less protein.

From a gallonage way in figuring, it costs me 2½ cents more per gallon to use their mix.

And still Office of Price Administration says we are sitting on top of the world.

Mr. Prentiss M. Brown compares us with 106 large cities in throughout the country; I wonder if Mr. Brown has ever thought of the freight that we pay on our grain down here.

He also says that there are more cows here now than in 1942. Does he know that our President of these United States asked the farmers to produce more milk, as there are over 60 Army camps here? We have made every effort to do our part, but all we get is a letter every now and then saying that you will get relief in the near future.

Sixteen thousand quarts of milk are being shipped weekly to Panama City from Minneapolis; 8,000 quarts to the car in paper bottles, packed in dry ice. The value of milk produced in Florida during 1942 increased by more than $2,000,000; still there has been 1,000,000 gallons of milk imported into the State during the first 3 months.

Regardless of what the Office of Price Administration thinks we are operating on depreciation now.

Sincerely yours,

JIM JENNINGS,
Secretary and Treasurer,
Florida State Dairymen's Association.

Now, my colleagues, I know that you will be interested in having the views of the Honorable Paul H. Ficht, administrator, Florida Milk Commission. Following is a communication just received by me from Mr. Ficht; also copy of letter addressed to him by Mr. N. W. Green; also communication addressed to Mr. J. V. Varnadore, by the dairy division, State of Florida Department of Agriculture; also communication from Mr. J. V. Varnadore, of the Varnadore Dairy, Bartow, Fla., to Mr. Scott; also copy of communication from the dairy division of the Department of Agriculture for the State of Florida to Mr. T. S. Haselton, and communication copy from Mr. Haselton, of the Lake View Dairy Farm, Eustis, Fla., to Mr. John M. Scott, chief dairy supervisor, Gainesville, Fla.:

STATE OF FLORIDA MILK COMMISSION,
Jacksonville, Fla., May 18, 1943.

Hon. LEX GREEN,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. GREEN: Many thanks for your letter of May 15, which followed copy of CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Friday, May 7, 1943. It appears by the RECORD that your statements were heartily supported by others who seem to have the same trouble in their respective States. Certainly, I agree with you on everything you said and most particularly do I agree that the President did not mean his directive order to result in a complete collapse of so vital industry as that of the milk, and if this should be true then I see no reason why the President cannot so instruct his Office of Price Administration Administrator in this regard. In any event it should be taken into consideration that all of the requests made by the Florida milk industry and all of the facts and figures presented by them were so done many months ago and action should have been taken many months ago which certainly could not have been interpreted to be included in any recent Presidential order.

Certainly, Office of Price Administration has not stopped the increase on feed prices since the President's order, as they have continued to advance substantially on a weekly basis and there are indications that these advances are expected to continue for an indefinite period. It does not seem reasonable to believe that the President would mean to definitely curb the milk industry when they are already strained to the breaking point and at the same time permit the costs of dairy feed to continue a skyrocketing course. The dairymen in Florida have almost reached a point where there will be a choice taken between a complete stoppage of milk production or an open revolt in defiance of Office of Price Administration regulations. Either course is, as you know, a very dangerous and unhealthy procedure, but they feel that since the Government will not make a decision as to whether milk shall be produced or not, then they, the dairymen, will be forced to make this decision regardless of the consequences. Most everyone in Florida abhors the attitude of Mr. John L. Lewis, but on the other hand if his requests are legitimate and he has received the same type of consideration as the dairy industry in Florida, then, of course, we here rather appreciate the stand taken by him. The only difference in milk production and almost any other production problem is that if milk production is stopped today it cannot be resumed tomorrow or next week or even next month, but it will take a full year to freshen those cattle dried up, and it will further take some 3 to 4 years to replace those cattle sold for beef purposes.

I just received a letter from Mr. N. W. Green, De Land, Fla., who is one of our very best class of dairymen and who has made an honest effort to keep his herd in production, but seems to be at that turning point which requires the decision which every dairyman in Florida will soon have to make. I have enclosed a copy of this letter for your files.

I am also enclosing copy of letters just received from two other dairymen who seem to be in the same postion as Mr. Green.

With kindest personal regards, I remain,

Very sincerely yours,

PAUL H. FICHT,
Administrator.

MAY 13, 1943.

Mr. PAUL H. FICHT,
Administrator, State Milk Commission, Jacksonville, Fla.

DEAR SIR: The milk situation in the DeLand area, insofar as I am concerned, is getting worse every day. The purpose of this letter is to ask you to write me and tell me frankly if there is any relief in sight. As it stands today, it is a losing proposition to operate and unless I can get relief sometime in the near future, I will be forced, as much as I dislike to, to disburse my herd and sell them to someone who is in better position to make a go of it than I am. The price of dairy feeds is continually increasing as well as labor, which makes it impossible to operate and break even at today's price of milk.

I do not expect any money out of this, and would not care if I only broke even for the duration, as I am willing to do everything possible to help win this war. However, I don't think that it could be expected of me to operate at a loss. Therefore, will you kindly write me and tell me what the prospects are for an increase in the price of milk and when. It will enable me to make my plans for the future.

So far as I know, this goes for the other dairymen in this vicinity.

Yours very truly,

N. W. GREEN.

THE STATE OF FLORIDA,
DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Gainesville, May 15, 1943.

Mr. J. V. VARNADORE,
Varnadore Dairy, Bartow, Fla.

DEAR SIR: Mr. Scott will be away from the office for about 3 weeks, but as soon as he returns your letter of May 14 will be brought to his attention.

We appreciate receiving the information on the number of cows milking, but we are very sorry to learn that you are having such a difficult time making your receipts take care of your expense of operation. This condition is rather general throughout the State, and the Milk Commission has made a great effort to get some relief for the dairymen. However, the Milk Commission has not been able to raise the price of milk above the price established by the Office of Price Administration in Washington.

We are mailing copy of your letter today to Mr. Paul H. Ficht, administrator, Florida Milk Commission, Jacksonville, with the request that he write you if he can give you any encouraging information.

Yours very truly,

DAIRY DIVISION,
By DOROTHY GRIFFITH,
Secretary to Mr. Scott.

BARTOW, FLA., May 14, 1943.

DEAR MR. SCOTT: I am milking 30 cows. All the cows that has milked are 39 head. I have 9 head of heifer calves, 3 to 6 months old, but if we don't get a raise on the milk or adjustment on the fee, I am afraid they won't be any milked after the 1st of June.

Since January feed has gone up 75 cents on the hundred. I don't want to be a quitter, but I cannot pay my feed bill.

Please help us, for I don't want to quit; if there is any way you can help, please do. If there is a chance of getting the milk raised, please give me some answer back.

Yours truly,

J. V. VARNADORE,
Varnadore Dairy, Bartow, Fla.

THE STATE OF FLORIDA,
DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Gainesville, May 51, 1943.

Mr. T. STIN HASELTON,
Lake View Dairy Farm, Eustis, Fla.

DEAR SIR: We appreciate your prompt reply to our request for the number of cows milking on the 1st of April and at the same time last year. We are getting some interesting information from the dairymen throughout the State.

We are sorry, but Mr. Scott will be away from the office for about 3 weeks so we cannot call your letter of May 13 to his attention until that time. However, we are taking the liberty of sending copy of your letter to Mr. Paul H. Ficht, administrator of the Florida Milk Commission in Jacksonville, and if he has any information to give you, you will hear from him sometime soon. The commission is not permitted to raise the retail price of milk above the ceiling established by the O. P. A., but they have made considerable effort to get some relief for the dairymen. You ask if you are the only producer in trouble; no, it seems that practically every producer in the State is in the same kind of trouble.

Yours very truly,

DAIRY DIVISION,
By DOROTHY GRIFFITH,
Secretary to Mr. Scott.

LAKE VIEW DAIRY FARM,
Lake County, May 13, 1943.

Mr. JOHN M. SCOTT,
Chief Dairy Supervisor, Gainesville, Fla.

DEAR MR. SCOTT: Your request for information received and answered. I have a good herd with better than average production. However, war conditions make production costs so high, and Office of Price Administration regulations keep the retail and, consequently, the producer's price so low that there is little above production costs to take care of taxes, insurance, interest, replacements, or improvements to say nothing about War bonds.

Is there any relief in sight? Is there anything the dairymen can do? Am I the only producer in trouble? When demand for a product is good, it is discouraging to be limited to little more than cost of production.

Your advice would be appreciated.

Very truly yours,

T. STIN HASELTON.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that it will be appropriate for the House to have substance of responses received by me from the Honorable Prentiss Brown, O. P. A. Administrator, same dated May 17, 18, and 19, as follows:

OFFICE OF PRICE ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., May 17, 1943.

The Honorable LEX GREEN,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: This is in reply to your letter of May 10, in which you refer to correspondence received from Mr. Brady S. Johnston, vice president, Dinsmore Dairy Co., Jacksonville, Fla.

It appears that my recent communication to Mr. Johnston is self-explanatory with regard to the action which will be taken in the Jacksonville market. An order establishing specific maximum prices is in the process of clearance, and it is anticipated that this regulation will be issued shortly.

I wish to call your attention to the fact that the request made by the distributors in Jacksonville for an increase in prices was based on an increase in prices paid to fluid-milk producers. The increase in prices paid to producers was required by the Florida Milk Commission, effective January 11. The forthcoming order, therefore, will in no way affect fluid-milk producers inasmuch as the price paid to farmers has already been increased.

Thank you for bringing this matter to my attention.

Sincerely yours,

PRENTISS M. BROWN,
Administrator.

OFFICE OF PRICE ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., May 18, 1943.

The Honorable LEX GREEN,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: This is in reply to your letter of May 7 and supplementary telegram of May 12, relative to the problems confronting milk producers and distributors in Broward and Dade Counties, Fla.

The problem which exists in the Dade-Broward area, as well as in a number of other markets throughout Florida, have been brought to the attention of this office. Our Atlanta regional office has completed a survey of milk prices throughout the State and a price regulation is being prepared which will establish specific prices for fluid milk sold throughout Florida. Due to the complexity of the problems encountered, a number of delays have occurred which have prevented the issuance of this regulation as promptly as previously anticipated. However, I am advised by our Atlanta regional office that the regulation may be expected in the very near future.

I am sure you realize that the determination of correct price relationships among markets is of the utmost importance. The purposes of the forthcoming regulation will be to establish a greater degree of uniformity in the price structure of the entire area and I trust this action will prove the solution to the problem of insuring a fair and equitable distribution of the limited available supplies among competing markets.

A further purpose of the regulation will be to provide a fair and equitable price for producers and distributors. In certain areas, it will be possible to permit substantial relief to milk producers without corresponding increases in retail prices. In accordance with the President's recent directive, this office is not authorized to permit further increases in retail prices which will adversely affect the general level of prices and increase the cost of living and which are not imperatively required by law.

I can assure you that the problem which you have so kindly brought to my attention is receiving the active consideration of our Atlanta regional office and that office has been instructed to move as quickly as possible to correct the situation insofar as possible within our present authority.

Sincerely yours,

PRENTISS M. BROWN,
Administrator.

OFFICE OF PRICE ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., May 19, 1943.

The Honorable LEX GREEN,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: This is in reply to your letter of May 7 and supplementary telegram of May 12, relative to the problems confronting milk producers and distributors in Broward and Dade Counties, Fla.

The problems which exist in the Dade-Broward area as well as in a number of other markets throughout Florida have been brought directly to he attention of this office. Our Atlanta regional office has completed a survey of milk prices throughout the State and a price regulation is being prepared which will establish specific prices for fluid milk sold throughout Florida. Due to the complexity of the problems encountered, a number of delays have occurred which have prevented the issuance of this regulation as promptly as previously anticipated. However, I am advised by our Atlanta regional office that the regulation may be expected in the very near future.

I am sure you realize that the determination of correct price relationships among markets is of the utmost importance. The purpose of the forthcoming regulation will be to establish a greater degree of uniformity in the price structure of the entire area and I trust this action will prove the solution to the problem of insuring a fair and equitable distribution of the limited available supplies among competing markets.

A further purpose of the regulation will be to provide a fair and equitable price for producers and distributors. In certain areas, it will be possible to permit substantial relief to milk producers without corresponding increases in retail prices. In accordance with the President's recent directive, this office is not authorized to permit further increases in retail prices which will adversely affect the general level of prices and increase the cost of living and which are not imperatively required by law.

I can assure you that the problem which you have so kindly brought to my attention is receiving the active consideration of our Atlanta regional office and that office has been instructed to move as rapidly as possible to correct the situation insofar as possible within our present authority.

Sincerely yours,

PRENTISS M. BROWN,
Administrator.

A significant sentence in the above communications from Mr. Brown is the following:

In accordance with the President's recent directive, this Office is not authorized to permit further increases in retail prices which will adversely affect the general level of prices and increase the cost of living and which are not imperatively required by law.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if O. P. A. officials are without authority in this, it is obvious that we must go to the Honorable James F. Byrnes, Chairman and Director of the Economic Stabilization Board. This, I plan to attempt to do tomorrow. I know that Administrator Byrnes has his hands full in his high and multiplied duties, but I know also that he undoubtedly is concerned relative to whether or not the American people may have food. If we cannot obtain relief promptly from Administrator Byrnes and/or the Office of Price Administration, I shall introduce legislation repealing all O. P. A.'s powers insofar as food producers' ceiling price fixing is concerned. I have contended from the beginning that ceiling prices on food products at their source of production are unnecessary and are not compatible with the best interest of feeding America. I do not believe that American producers of food will be able to produce food in sufficient quantity for the American people if O. P. A. officials continue to exercise power of ceiling prices on producers. Ceiling prices already fixed on producers are already drying up food production in America, cutting down the number of acres planted of Irish potatoes and other crops, causing dairy herds to be slaughtered, and food producers to give up in despair and chagrin. Now, if these Administrators lack the power or the wisdom for relief in this situation, it is time for the Congress to act and to act now and to repeal by law existing power exercised by O. P. A. in their fixing of ceilings on milk producers, Irish-potato producers, and other food producers.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include excerpts from newspapers, letters, telegrams, and other communications.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN]?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SHEPPARD, for 10 days, on account of death in family.

To Mr. RUSSELL (at the request of Mr. POAGE), for an indefinite period, on account of illness.

To Mr. MILLER of Nebraska, for May 25 and May 26, on account of business.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include therein an address by the Hon. Robert Brennan, Irish Minister to the United States, made in Boston on May 5. I am informed it will take two and three-quarters pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and will cost $123.75. In view of the significance of the remarks made by the Irish Minister, I ask unanimous consent that it may be inserted in the Appendix of the RECORD notwithstanding the cost.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

There was no objection.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. KLEIN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 761. An act for the relief of Charles T. Dulin;

H. R. 1896. An act to amend sections 1 and 2 of the act approved June 11, 1940 (54 Stat. 262), relating to the establishment of the Cumberland Gap National Historical Park in Tennessee, Kentucky, and Virginia, and to grant the consent of Congress to such States to enter into a compact providing for the acquisition of property for such park;

H. R. 2159. An act to provide for special assessments for the laying of curbs and gutters;

H. R. 2486. An act to authorize the appointment as ensigns in the Coast Guard of all graduates of the Coast Guard Academy in 1945 and thereafter, and for other purposes;

H. R. 2581. An act authorizing the acquisition and conversion or construction of certain landing craft and district craft for the United States Navy, and for other purposes;

H. R. 2583. An act to provide for the reorganization of the Marine Corps, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 2587. An act to amend sections 2 and 4 of the act approved June 27, 1942, entitled "An act to authorize the appointment of commissioned warrant and warrant officers to commissioned rank in the line and staff corps of the Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard, and for other purposes."

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 51 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, May 25, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

There will be a meeting of the subcommittee on investigation of restrictions on brand names and newsprint of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, at 10 a. m., Tuesday, May 25, 1943.

Business to be considered: Public hearings pursuant to House Resolution 98 by Congressman HALLECK.

COMMITTEE ON THE CIVIL SERVICE

This committee will hold public hearings on investigation of civilian employment in governmental departments, Wednesday, May 26, 1943, at 10 o'clock a. m. in Room 246, House Office Building.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS

There will be a meeting of the committee at 10 a. m. on Wednesday, May 26, Thursday, May 27, and Friday, May 28, 1943, for consideration of housing bills, in the Caucus Room, House Office Building.

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION

The Committee on Immigration and Naturalization will hold hearings at 10 a. m. on Wednesday, May 26, and Thursday, May 27, 1943, on all bills dealing with the Chinese Exclusion Act—H. R. 1882, H. R. 2309, H. R. 2428, and H. R. 2429.

COMMITTEE ON THE MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold a public hearing Thursday, May 27, 1943, at 10 o'clock a. m., on H. R. 2750, to amend section 353 (b) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, relating to experience of radio operators.

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold a public hearing on Thursday, June 10, 1943, at 10 o'clock a. m., on H. R. 2731, to facilitate the award and payment of just compensation for property requisitioned under the authority of section 902 (a) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, and for other purposes.

COMMITTEE ON FLOOD CONTROL

The Flood Control Committee will conduct hearings on flood-control reports submitted by the Chief of Engineers since the passage of the Flood Control Act of August 18, 1941, and on amendments to existing law. Flood-control projects for post-war construction will be among the most satisfactory public works, and the committee plans an adequate backlog of sound flood-control projects available for construction following the war.

1. Tuesday, June 1: Maj. Gen. Eugene Reybold, Chief of Engineers, will open the hearings with any statements and recommendations he desires to submit covering national flood control and the projects that should be included in the bill to be reported, especially as they are related to national defense and as they will be important following the existing war to provide sound flood-control projects and desirable public works. General Reybold is now on an airplane tour of inspection of the flood areas and will submit a first-hand report covering recent major floods along the Missouri, Arkansas, White, Mississippi, Illinois, Wabash, Ohio, and other rivers in the recent flood areas. He will be followed by Gen. Thomas M. Robins, Assistant Chief of Engineers, who has previously advised the Flood Control Committee during hearings and who will also appear before the committee and submit his views and discuss generally the projects that have been favorably reported since the hearings were conducted on H. R. 4911, Seventy-seventh Congress, first session, reported on June 9, 1941, which became the Flood Control Act of August 18, 1941. Col. George R. Goethals, Chief of the Flood Control Branch, Office of Chief of Engineers, will attend the hearings and will furnish to the members of the committee in detail any and all available information respecting the said projects on which favorable reports have been submitted by the Chief of Engineers.

The district engineers and the division engineers have furnished to the Chief of Engineers data and information respecting major floods since August 18, 1941, and particularly with respect to recent major floods in the various drainage basins of the country, which will be submitted to the committee.

2. Wednesday, June 2: General Reybold, General Robins, Colonel Goethals, other representatives of the Office of Chief of Engineers, and proponents on projects for the New England region including the Connecticut and Merrimac Rivers and the Middle Atlantic region including New York, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey.

3. Thursday, June 3: General Reybold, General Robins, Colonel Goethals, other representatives of the Office of Chief of Engineers, and proponents on projects in the upper and lower Ohio River and tributaries, and on projects of the South Atlantic region including rivers flowing into the Atlantic Ocean and Gulf of Mexico east of the Mississippi River.

4. Friday, June 4: General Reybold, General Robins, Colonel Goethals, other representatives of the Office of Chief of Engineers, and proponents on projects along the Missouri River and tributaries and the upper Mississippi River and the Great Lakes region.

5. Tuesday, June 8: General Reybold, General Robins, Colonel Goethals, other representatives of the Office of Chief of Engineers, and proponents on projects in the lower Mississippi River and tributaries including the Arkansas and White Rivers, and on rivers flowing into the Gulf west of the Mississippi River, and in the Western Rocky Mountain region including Texas and Colorado, and in the Pacific Northwest region including the Willamette River and the Columbia River and tributaries.

6. Wednesday, June 9: General Reybold, General Robins, Colonel Goethals, other representatives of the Office of Chief of Engineers, and proponents on projects in the Los Angeles area and in the State of California, including the Sacramento, San Joaquin, and Kern River Valleys, and on projects in other regions and in other parts of the United States.

7. Thursday, June 10: Representatives of the Department of Agriculture and the Bureau of Reclamation, and other governmental agencies.

8. Friday, June 11: Senators and Representatives of Congress.

Va., urging the passage of House bill 2082, to reduce absenteeism, conserve manpower, and speed production of materials necessary for the winning of the war, by prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors in the United States for the duration of the war and until the termination of demobilization; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

885. Also, petition of Rev. O. O. Boggess and members of the Church of God of Wheeling, W. Va., urging the passage of House bill 2082, to reduce absenteeism, conserve manpower, and speed production of materials necessary for the winning of the war, by prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors in the United States for the duration of the war and until the termination of demobilization; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

886. Also, petition of Mrs. C. Richard Hall and members of the First Methodist Church of Fairmont, W. Va., urging the passage of House bill 2082, to reduce absenteeism, conserve manpower, and speed production of materials necessary for the winning of the war, by prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors in the United States for the duration of the war and until the termination of demobilization; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, MAY 25, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Love Divine whose riches are unsearchable, continue to be our shield and portion. When shadows gather about our understanding, we pray that we may go back to our childhood "where prayer was wont to be made"; when the skies were cloudless and Thou, dear Lord, was an emblem for the fullness of joy. We rejoice that Thou goest not down with the years, but art with us through the fleeting days, the shifting scenes, the varying fortunes, and when the changeless blue sky fades at evening time.
